Pittsburgh to Get New Rowland and Clark 5,000 Seater

ROWLAND & CLARK have established a reputation for theatre building and administration that is the envy of many.

That's why everyone is interested in the plan just announced for a five thousand seat "beauty" theatre that will be incorporated in the nine-story building covering the block at Liberty avenue, Seventh street and Penn avenue. The site was acquired at a total cost of $3,000,000.

Victor A. Rigaumont, prominent local architect, has drawn up plans for the theatre and office building, and work will be hurried along so that the theatre can begin to function without delay.

The stage will take care of the most massive presentations as well as road attractions of the best type: a special feature is to be a large tank for acquatic acts.

Indirect lighting, calling for the use of some 10,000 bulbs, will be arranged on the most modern plans.

The art work and scenic equipment will make this theatre worthy of the Rowland and Clark standard.

"I like this place because you can smoke. But some folks are careless—saw a lad drop a cigarette stub on the stairs—no, no damage—they've got those fireproofed stair carpetings—even careless folks are anticipated here."One of a group lounging in the New York Warner Bros. Theatre.

Add to F. B. O. Cutting Rooms at Coast Studios

A NEW CUTTING ROOM building behind Stage No. 2 has just been completed at the F. B. O. Studios, in accordance with the intention of officials of the company to equip the big Hollywood plant as efficiently as possible. More than $20,000 has been spent on the new cutting rooms and equipment alone, and the additions give F. B. O. one of the most modern cutting departments on the West Coast. The cutting rooms will be in charge of James Wilkinson, supervising cutter.

The new additions come close on the heels of the joining of Stages No. 1 and No. 2 to give more stage space and the alteration of the second floor of the Property Room building to add more offices and dressing rooms. It completes an enlargement program which was undertaken early in the summer, and which may be supplemented at no distant date by erection of another large stage on the lot.

Gem is a Gem for Jimmy

Blytheville, Arkansas, turns to James Boyd, now, and says, "Jim, you gave us one 'gem' when you opened the Gem"—and they mean it, because the new theatre, recently filled by its first-night crowd, gives the patrons the best in equipment to surround their best-in-entertainment.

Omaha Kids Can Bawl While Ma Sees Show Through Glass

A GLASS-ENCLOSED "cry-room" is to be one of the attractive features of the new Minne Lusa Theatre, the latest big suburban theatre to be built in Omaha. The theatre is being built by Frank W. Houston who has been in the theatre business for at least sixteen years in Nebraska, Indiana and other places. This "cry-room" is the first of its kind in Omaha, and the first in this section of the West. It is a place for mothers to sit with their small babies who are likely to cry during the showing of the pictures. Mr. Houston maintains that thousands of mothers with small babies do not go to picture shows because they are pretty sure the baby will cry, and will disturb others in the theatre. So they stay at home. Mr. Houston says that the "cry-room" in other cities in Indiana and other points in the East has been very successful, that mothers do come and bring their babies, sit in the "cry-room," watch the pictures through the plate glass, and let the babies cry to their heart's content. The plate glass is sound-proof.

Stern's Newest Started

Joseph Stern and Louis Golding have leased for a period of fifteen years a building in Millburn, N. J., containing a theatre seating 1,000, three stores, and seven offices. The theatres will be opened on March 1, 1926.

Edited by Colby Harriman

The Note Book

DURING the last ten days I have had the opportunity of discussing presentations and prologues with members of the First Class of the Publix Training School for Managers. The two afternoons I spent with the group of young men proved that they were all on the job, determined to get to the root of things, and the intelligent questions plus their constructive ideas evidenced that they have been studying conditions from all angles. If managers in general would spend a portion of their time in a consistent study of the various phases of their business, there would be, undoubtedly, a phenomenal development in the theatre.

The commendations and words of encouragement received from new and old friends anent the introduction in this department of a "specific presentation suggestion for a specific picture" are greatly appreciated. Personally, I favor direct or definite assistance on a problem rather than generalize. It seems to me that we get farther when we have a distinct object in view. While many of the presentation suggestions will antedate a release by many weeks, I feel certain that they will be valuable data to be retained by the producer or manager when the picture is booked for his house.

Presentation and program policies of our leading theatres are beginning to take on a geographical complex. It looks at present, that we will be able to ascertain the type of stage attractions in our theatres by the location of a key city. For instance, New York City is favoring the revue type of features. The Rivoli, Mark Strand and Colony are all engaged in offering large casts-spectacular-popular forms of entertainment. The Capitol theatre seems to be the only one that has dared to adhere to a strict presentation policy. Chicago favors the "orchestra type," with Paul Ash in the lead, Art Kahn a close second, and other musical directors being groomed for "number two" positions. Newark has cut its last string to presentations and favors vaudeville acts to individual productions. The Mosque and the Brandford are playing acts and competing with three other vaudeville theatres in the city. So it goes, one center favors all music, another jazz, another variety and so on. If the demand for provincial variety in the extremes is going to regulate the box office, we may find ourselves confronted with a serious problem for next season, one that will cost some money to meet competition.

I am interested to know what productions were produced in various theatres especially dedicated to "Laugh Month." The comedy element in presentations is comparatively a new angle. Descriptions of such productions will be of interest to all.

ORCHESTRA EXCHANGES SUCCESSFUL

THE inauguration of an exchange of of orchestras between the Senate and the Harding Theatres, Chicago, has proven successful. Last week, Art Kahn, with His Boys, opened a week's engagement at the Harding, and Ben Paley, and his symphony orchestra moved over to the Senate. The move met with popular favor as it gave the patrons an orchestral novelty in the theatres of the visitors. The plan, at present, is to continue these ideas every other week.

WENGER SAILS FOR LONDON

John Wenger and his wife sailed Saturday on the Leviathan for London, where Wenger will supervise the opening of the Plaza Theatre, the new F-P British Theatre. He will remain as art director until the presentation program has been inaugurated according to the policy of the fostering organization.

AGENTS HEEDING DEMANDS

It is reported that several agents and artists' representatives who have found the motion picture theatre a lucrative field but failed to deliver have been warned by an influential chain that unless more attention is given to the quality of acts offered to the out-of-town theatres who are denied the privileges of auditions that drastic measures will be taken against them on the basis of fraud and misrepresentaton plus the campaign of publicity which this chain is in a position to secure. The report continues that it is a step in the general "house cleaning" program which theatre managers and producers are agitating in order to safeguard their interests in the future.

The Mail Bag

JOHN WENGER, New York City, has forwarded an interesting communication in which he advances his ideas relative to a recent creation of his known as "A Scenic Overture." Wenger, who is one of the leading designers-scenic artists we have in the motion picture theatre defines this novelty, a Scenic Overture, as an impressionistic curtain, which is shown for a few seconds, before the opening of a play or an important scene.

"The scenic overture performs a function of the musical overture, it introduces. The musical overture prepares the ears for the music that is to follow, and the scenic overture serves the eye for the same purpose. As it is now, the first few minutes of a play or a scene are generally lost because the audience is in such a different mood than the play. It doesn't know exactly the attitude to assume at the opening of the scene. As the action progresses the spectator eases into the spirit of the play, but not until he has lost the early part of it. The scenic overture can go far in correcting this situation by linking the mood of the audience with that of the performance before the play or scene is introduced.

"The scenic overture should grasp the prevailing mood of the play, gayety, mystery, tragedy, or whatever it is. It should be suggestive not photographic, for its purpose is to suggest an atmosphere instead of duplicating it.

"I have two Scenic Overtures in productions at the present time. In 'Tip Toes,' the scenic overture is a lovely curtain of palm leaves interlaced against gold and blue. The pastel coloring, the tropical foliage and the reflected lights on the gold, conjure up not so much a picture as a feeling of Florida and clear skies and joyousness—precisely the spirit and locale of the piece. In 'The Monkey Talks,' the scenic overture does not precede the play but a scene representing the Folies Bergere. The introductory curtain here is novel and daring, a brilliant conglomeration of high hats, wine bottles, chorus girls' legs and the words 'Folies Bergere' crazily intermingled to give the impression of hectic excitement.

"I can see tremendous possibilities in the scenic overtures for every kind of a play or production. It may be made of a few yards of gauze or it may be an elaborately painted affair to introduce an extravaganza. A fantasy would require a soft treatment."

May we insert in this column the request that we are desirous of securing communications from all persons interested or engaged in the various departments of motion picture theatre work. We are particularly anxious to secure the new idea, the new version of a standard form, a suggestion or a criticism. This column will be maintained by such communications received.

Novelty Prologue to "The First Year"

Specially Devised for Fox Film Corporation by Colby Harriman

(A Prologue or Presentation for a Specific Picture Published Each Week)

A NUMBER of angles which present themselves in devising a prologue for such a picture as "The First Year" range from the commonplace to the unusually spectacular. The "bridal" or "domestic" theme is one which the producer finds comparatively easy to "put over." This may be satisfactorily accomplished with either a singer or solo dancer. The employment of the ensemble lends a certain pomp to such a theme which proves an ideal expression. However, we realize that generalities are not as acceptable with audiences as the subjects which are presented in the form of novelties. After viewing the picture we decided to offer a prologue suggestion devised along flexible lines permitting its production on either large or small stages, and still retain the keynote of its novelty.

THE SETTING

The accompanying sketch furnishes a general outline of the stage and scenic makeup. The various units comprising the set are simple to construct at the same time inexpensive. The principal units are three hanging pieces and three units of portable set pieces, the sketch identifying the position of all units. The units may be itemized as follows:

(a) A cut drop painted with an impressionistic motif,

(b) A gold gauze of plain scrim hung in front of back drop,

(c) Back drop with a large rose design

(d) A constructed or cut out wedding ring, suspended, to which the "puppets" are attached.

(e) A low platform with steps within the arena between the back and front cut drop.

1. Cut Drop

This drop should have an oblong opening with ovalled ends. It should be hung in one. To make it particularly effective the designs right and left should be painted in vivid colors over a silver or gold body. The church design at left should be in sort of warm tones above which fleecy clouds against a silvered sky tinted blue and in contrast with the maroon and blue house at right, over which are dark storm clouds, with descending rain and lightning shafts. If an artist is not available the church and house designs may be cut out of beaver-board and placed in front of the legs of the drop. There should be a certain crudeness in the art work to make it effective. Garlands of roses should be rung downstage halfway between the cut drop and the curtain line. The festoons should be caught back in a drape formation. The flowers may be made of paper or the regular decorative flower may be used.

2. Back Drops

Two units comprise the back drops. A gold or silver gauze should be hung in small folds about two feet in front of the back drop. The gauze should come to the back of the platform which fills the area between the painted cut drop in one. The extreme back drop may be a fabric of a light color upon which large painted rose cutouts are attached or hung over the surface. The rose designs are not visible until the end of the routine, when the back lighting is brought up resulting in an effective picture for the finale.

3. Wedding Ring

A large wedding ring either constructed or made of beaver board and framed, painted to achieve the desired effect, is suspended with piano wires at center halfway between the gauze and painted cut drop. Attached to each side of the ring are cords painted silver or silver ribbons may be used which are held by the characters during the action. The ring should be hung on the battan so as to prevent it from swinging upstage. The movement of the ring from side to side is permissible.

General Data

A platform about one foot high and at least six feet deep should be used as a base upon which the characters appear. The platform should fill the space between the painted cut drop and the gold gauze. A one-step unit may be used to lead from the platform to the stage.

Lighting Treatment

Cut drop should be toned a green and light amber at left over the church design with a red and blue at right over the house design. The border light in front of the painted drop may contain a blend of blues and reds to achieve a light purple which will tone the top of the painted drop. The garland of roses in the foreground should be highlighted by a floor spot right and left with pink medium. Light green in the olivettes placed right and left of the gauze will be in contrast to the amber toning of the characters at center. The "ring" should be toned a canary and a simple way to secure this effect and preserve the side lighting on the gauze is to hang two spots on the batten over the "ring" at an angle to flood the "ring" and form a circle of light on the center of the platform. At the end of the routine when the rose designs are revealed through the gauze, it is suggested that five pin spots be placed with masks set so that each rose is given a different lighting treatment. Use canaries, reds, and pinks for the mediums. The spots may be placed on the floor, from the sides or suspended from a batten. A deep purple should tone the back drop upon which the rose designs are placed.

The Routine

The entire routine may be satisfactorily depicted by three characters or may include 10 or 20. All characters should be made to represent the "kewpie" type. The action emulating puppets or mechanical dolls. All action done in syncopated movement. The opening may introduce a character dressed as a clergyman who leads the bride and groom from the church to the center of the platform. If desired a ballet as bridesmaids may do a number, and the best man singing a song which may be one of the comedy wedding or marriage songs available through any music house. The clergyman takes the ribbons attached to the ring and places them in the hands of the bride and groom. With the customary blessings he leaves them as the couple go into a puppet dance emulating the "love birds"—a quarrel brews, the bride makes overtures but the husband refuses to listen; the bride becomes piqued and the groom attempts to placate her. Thunder and lightning effects are introduced as the couple commence to quarrel—they are about to break away from the ring when a couple of kiddies dressed as cupids are introduced. They lead each character to center and as the final movement of the dance begins the lights on the back drop appear revealing the roses. The action ending with a whirling finish as the curtains are slowly drawn, the first titles of the picture projected upon the curtains.

ARTISTIC PRESENTATIONS

Capitol Theatre, New York City

A highly artistic program has been arranged by Edward Bowes to surround the featured picture "Mike" (M-G-M). The overture "Capriccio Espagnole," Rimsky Korsakoff, is given an excellent rendition by the Capitol Grand Orchestra with David Mendoza conducting. This is followed by a short film subject entitled "Tunis." Then the first presentation unit is offered. It is entitled "The Swan," introducing Vlasta Maslova. Yasha Bunchuk, cellist, sits center in front of the orchestra section. A steel blue spot in front is focused upon him and the first movements of the Saint-Saens composition is augmented with a harp accompaniment.

Curtain slowly opens depicting a hazy exterior toned in varied greens suggesting a section of a pond. A gauze in folds is hung in one, this is flooded a light green. A ground row extends back of the gauze with reeds protruding from the top of the row suggesting a marshy shore. Tips of a foliage border are visible overhead. The background was a hazy green blue with shadows in the distance suggesting trees. An amber water rippler operated right center. The dancer dressed in white worked with a white spot against a green background. A very simple number to stage but exceedingly effective.

This was followed by the introduction of the Brass Sextette composed of first and second horns, first, second and third trombones of the orchestra. Standing in the pit at the back they played Verdi's "Miserere" from "Il Trovatore." "A Chinese Fantasy" which was the second unit was a little cameo number introducing two singers and two characters for atmosphere. A flat painted to represent a balcony in a Chinese quarter was placed center, the bottom half of the flat bore a painted door or shutter effect.

Above was a couple of posts with a cutout balustrade suggesting a covered balcony. Chinese portieres filled the opening. Back of this was a curtained doorway. Heavy drapes of dark material were used to mask the flat and carry off, the drapes occupying one-third of the space right and left. The drapes were flooded a blue, a magenta toned the backing visible in the balcony and green flooded the foreground. A Chinese character carrying a lantern on a stick entered, paused at center, looked at the balcony and strutted off as Marjorie Harcum appeared on the balcony singing "Chinese Lullaby" from "East Is West." As she finished her song Mr. Robyn was brought in on a rickshaw. He sang "Star of My Soul" from "The Geisha," and finished the number with Miss Harcum using the "Chinese Lullaby" theme.

The big feature of the program was a very attractive presentation entitled "The Legend of the Pearl." The music embraced selections from "Parsifal," "The Walkyrie," "Rheingold" (Wagner). Three members are introduced which include Doris Niles as the "Goddess of the Pearls"; Bayard Rauth as the "Pearl Fisher," Vlasta Maslova as "The Pearl." The six regular members of the Capitol Ballet were introduced and were augmented by ten other ballet girls.

The dance was a brief pantomime, the description of which was programmed as follows: "It is an ancient belief among Pearl Fishers, pearl shells close during the storm and reopen when the sun shines again. Anouba, Goddess of the Pearls, who protects the pearls from all danger, is antagonized by a fisherman, Jacques, who loves Peregrina, a rare and beautiful Pearl. To protect the pearl from the infatuated youth, who at the behest of Anouba and her satellites, is felled by the fury of the tempest. The love of the fisherman survives the ferocity of the storm. As the sky clears and the sun reappears beyond the clouds the shell reopens and the Pearl is restored to her lover."

The scene depicted a sea coast with a huge rock at center upon which the Goddess in metallic and filmy garb is poised on its pinnacle. At center in front of the rock was a huge shell, the sky was a leaden blue gray and an excellent water wave and surf effect was worked in the background. The ballet opens the action with a routine using festoons of red and light blue sea-weed. The fisherman entered and as the shell was opened by the six girls the Pearl was seen lying prone within.

The inner part of the shell was covered with cloth threaded and lighted iridescently. An Adagio followed by the Pearl and the Fisherman. As the storm approaches with lightning flashes projected on the drop the Pearl was placed within the shell and the top closed. After the storm the shell opened again and the two featured dancers posed in a finale which embraced all members of the ballet. Miss Niles did not do any dancing. The whole scene was exquisitely lighted.

PRESENTATION INAUGURAL

Broadway Strand Theatre, Detroit

The Broadway Strand Theatre, Detroit, Michigan, whose increasing success is to be credited to the capable management of Jimmie Carrier, has adopted a new policy in the way of entertainment, and that is, "Presentations."

Mr. Carrier has been very successful in securing the services of Paul Zimm, who for over a year ruled as "King of Syncopation" over the Keith Circuit, to direct the musical programs offered by the Broadway Strand.

The feature picture for the opening week of Mr. Zimm's engagement was, Cecil B. DeMille's "The Road to Yesterday" and the presentation offering was entitled "A Night in Araby."

The stage was very artistically arranged to correspond with the presentation. A throne was erected and one of Detroit's most beautiful girls reigned as "queen." After a few dances by the girls in the chorus, the "queen" arose from her throne and to the melodious strains from Zimm's orchestra, danced the "salome" very gracefully, which was followed by Frank Baker, Zimm's own "Al Jolson" who sang two very good numbers.

The main feature of the program was at the end, when Mr. Zimm assisted by Mr. Baker lead the audience in community singing, "Down by the Winiger Woiks" using the illustrated song slides for effect. The audience joined in singing the chorus and made a great hit.

The opening night was enjoyed by an exceptionally large audience, and according to the amount of applause by them, the program went over with a tremendous success. Many people coming out of the theatre remarked that it was one of the best presentations that they had ever seen in Detroit. Mr. Zimm knows his business when it comes to arranging musical programs, and is entitled to the credit and praise given to any other successful musical director.

Mr. Carrier and Mr. Zimm have been very busy arranging presentations and musical programs to be presented during Mr. Zimm's engagement at the Broadway Strand.

The presentation program for next week will be entitled "A Night in Spain."

This report submitted by Robert A. Newkirk.

"CHARLESTON CARNIVAL"

A Jazzical Musical Revue

Colony Theatre, New York

Another Revue Presentation. The third of such features is presented with the featured picture "California, Straight Ahead" (Universal). From a talent angle the production introduces some well-known artists and in many respects surpass the featured players of the last two productions, but from the scenic standpoint the presentation is not as elaborate nor as suitable as the new Colony stage policy has led us to expect. However, there is real entertainment value. Harry Shaw and Jerry DeRosa staged the feature. The scenic background consists of a gold drop hung in two. There is an opening at the center with a unit of wide steps flanked on either side with balustrades leading to a 3-foot platform. Steps lead up and off from either side of the platform. Another gold curtain is used as a backing; a cluster of gold streamers are used to trim the center opening, these ribbon clusters being attached to the gold drop. Allen White's Collegians, a very clever jazz band, are seated, divided into two sections and placed right and left of the center opening. Two grand pianos are used. The cast includes, beside the orchestra, Charles King, a well-known single; Chester Fredericks, an exceptionally clever dancer; Bobby Folsom, a jazz song specialist; Ethel Bryant, a good Charleston dancer, and 12 attractive girls making up a dancing ensemble with a surprise introduction during the finale of Dot Genie, a midget who rendered a clever dancing bit; the midget has a doll-like figure.

"Stella Dallas" Goes On

Capacity business enjoyed in New York by "Stella Dallas" at the Apollo Theatre, has compelled Samuel Goldwyn, the producer, to extend the run of the picture for an indefinite period. Judging from present indications, "Stella Dallas" will be showing on Broadway when the summer sets in.

Road-shows are now being arranged "Stella Dallas" opened in Boston on January 11. Chicago is scheduled for a later date. United Artists Corporation is to distribute the picture for general release after the road shows end.

FOR BETTER PROJECTION

It Pays to Have the Best

FAULTY projection, due to poor design or worn out condition of Projectors is responsible for the failure of many Motion Picture Theatres.

The time has passed when patronage could be won on the merits of pictures alone. Patrons know that some "movies" afford them more enjoyment than others regardless of what pictures are shown. Tests prove that the important factor in theatre popularity now is how well pictures are presented. Or, as the owner of a large chain of theatres remarked recently, "The Secret of success in the motion picture theatre business today is good projection."

It is not surprising, therefore, that more and more theatre owners are installing new Simplex Projectors. For Simplex has always represented the most advanced engineering practice in projection machine design. And not only in design, but in construction—in the quality of material used; in the precision of working parts; in the improved oiling system that keeps each part functioning smoothly—and in its perfect performance, is shown the superiority of the Simplex.

There is a Simplex distributor serving your territory who will gladly demonstrate features of the Simplex which have won for it first place in its field. Or write us for full information.

Better Projection Pays

That Friendly Feeling

RICHARD KUESTER, Brooklyn, N. Y., arises to remark: "Permit me to voice my appreciation for the work you are doing to create a friendly feeling between correspondents of the department. At first I did not especially like the idea of me not feeling well being 'advertised' in the department, but when I received a letter of cheer from W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, N. Y., I promptly answered it, and felt differently about it. Before long Budge and I will meet personally. (Yourself and brother Budge are hereby officially invited to have dinner with me at the National Vaudeville Artist's Club, of which I am a member, next fall, and thus we will all three meet personally. Editor). This is just an example of the friendliness of the chaps who are contributing to the Department. Too bad some of the Broadway men don't get in on this. I hope they are not selfish. The few I know are not.

Gee, Richardson, I wish I could go to the S. M. P. E. meeting. (Well, then, DO IT! If you could get away and stand the expense, it would, I am sure, be well worth your while. I'm hoping Gray will be there—maybe his Boss—Mrs. Gray—too, and they've a daughter I'm due to fall head over heels in love with at sight—age six (6) years. Editor).

Well, let's get down to business. With reference to the reflector type lamps. A few months ago my boss installed two Morelite reflector type lamps. I have found them to be well built, though in my opinion there is plenty of room for improvement.

The one thing which puzzles me about all reflector type lamps is that the size of the spot is regulated by moving the mirror back and forth, which means that unless you are careful in trimming the carbons the mirron will not always be the same distance from the aperture plate.

Try and get it in the same place every time you trim! Just try it! (See my comment—Ed.). It is understood that the mirror has a focal length just like a lens. Would it not seem ridiculous if we regulated the size of the spot at the aperture, when using an ordinary arc, by moving the condenser back and forth. Surely the diameter of the light beam from a mirror is changed at the projection lens if we change the position of the mirror.

I believe it would be a simple matter to keep the mirror in the same position, and still be able to tilt it upwards, downwards and sidewise. Why could not the size of the spot at the aperture be regulated by moving the carbons back and forth, instead of by moving the mirror? This should not be so hard.

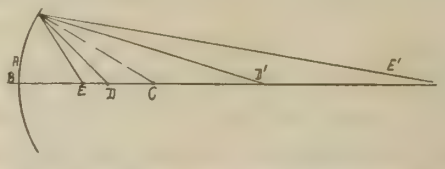
Another thing, we very seldom hear about is the focal length of the mirror. Perhaps there are two or three focal lengths of mirror, but these must cover all conditions. I have been using reflector type lamps for several months, but as yet cannot get any dope on focal lengths of mirrors. Surely it is possible to have different focal lengths of mirrors for different conditions, the same as with condensers.

And now about the Morelite lamp. The automatic arc control of this lamp is the lock type. If the carbon arms reach the limit of feeding, there is no automatic control to stop the motor, hence it just keeps on feeding, regardless of how close the carbon jaws may be to each other. I believe this ought to be taken care of by the manufacturer. Possibly a friction drive might answer, since with it the carbon jaws would stop feeding forward when the limit of safety is reached, and neither the jaws or motor be injured. Of course if one does not forget to trim the lamp, nothing can happen, but we must figure on things which MAY happen just the same.

Another thing: only one size of carbon will fit in a given jaw or holder. If one wishes to change the size of carbon, one must get a new holder to fit the same. When the lamp is installed the COMPANY figures just about what amperage you will need, and installs carbon jaws for carbons for that amperage only. This automatically prevents the projectionist from experimenting with different amperage, or different size carbons. If the manufacturer does not favor a carbon jaw capable of accommodating carbons of any size within the range of the lamp, then they certainly should supply a complete set of carbon jaws, to the end that the projectionist may experiment and use the one best suited to his conditions."

I like to think of the regular, or more or less regular correspondents of the department as a sort of family of friends. Often and often I wonder what has become of some of the old timer correspondents. James, of Camden, N. J., who, about ten or twelve years ago started the discussion which led to the first real advancement in the practical application of expert knowledge to the projector optical train, and dozens of others who contributed their big or little bit, and then dropped out of sight. What a reunion it would be if we could all get together! Of course I know where a lot of them are. There is "Dad" Woods, of San Francisco, who once was one of the real live wires. He still is shooting pictures at a Frisco screen, but he has crawled back into his shell and pulled the darned thing tight shut. As a matter of fact the west coat city unions nearly all used to be live ones, but of late years they have almost all sank into a state of complete coma, insofar as rendering any assistance to the work of this department be concerned. Once in a while a coast man wakes from his slumber long enough to yawn, but not often.

As to the mirror and focal lengths, I am not as well posted as I could wish to be, but I think it stacks up about this way. First take a slant at figure 27 A, page 126, of your Bluebook. Then look at the accompanying drawing.



You will note that if the light source be located at E, D and C there would be a very great difference in the amount of light the mirror would intercept, or "pick up." Laying all other considerations aside, if the mirror A were six inches in diameter, then in order to pick up the same amount of light if the light source were at C (which is the center of curvature of the mirror) as it picks up when at E, the mirror would have to be approximately eleven inches in diameter. Also at C the light ray which met the mirror at C or any other point, would be reflected directly back upon itself, because point F and every other pin point of the mirror surface would be plane to point C.

In considering reflection we must remem-

The FILM SPLICING MACHINE

Used by All FAMOUS PLAYERS LASKY Exchanges

Famous-Players Lasky have standardized on Bell & Howell Film Splicing machines. In all their exchanges they are experiencing a new efficiency and economy in the care of film.

They realize that the use of the hand splicer is costly, when there is a quicker—better—way to splice the film. Splicing by hand takes times. And time is a big factor in overhead. The B & H Film Splicing Machine speeds up the work. The splice is automatically properly located in relation to the picture frame line and the film perforations. Cutting and splicing is but an instant's work and the film is left as pliable at the splice as at any other point.

A better splice in faster time—higher quality work and a reduction in overhead! B & H Film Splicing Machines have cut the "film care overhead" of the Famous Players Lasky Company 50%. It is doing the same for other exchanges. And what it is doing for others, it will do for you.

Booklet illustrating and describing this dependable, substantial, thoroughly practical film splicing machine will be sent you upon request. If you are interested in a greater efficiency and economy in film care it will pay you to write for this booklet.

ber that the angle of reflection is always equal to the angle of incidence, hence with the light source at E a ray incident upon the mirror surface at F would be reflected back along line E', while a ray from point D (were the light source there) would be reflected back along line D'.

I think I have this correct. It is correct with reference to a plano surface, and each pin point of the mirror's surface is plano to point C, which is the center of curvature of the mirror, hense, rays from any other point located upon the optical axis of the mirror should act precisely the same as though the surface it is incident upon were entirely plano. Remember that in this we are considering a pin point upon the mirror surface only. If I am in error in my reasoning, some of you optical sharks can correct me.

And now to get down to brass tacks. As I understand it, the first thing the manufacturer has to do is to ascertain just how close he may bring a light source of given power, hence of given heat, to the surface of a mirror without serious trouble with the mirror backing. Having done this, that becomes the point at which the light source is presumed to be located for that amperage, since to advance it closer would cause trouble, while removing it further away would entail heavy loss of available light.

The curvature of the mirror, then, must be such as will form a spot of the correct size at whatever distance the manufacturer considers best from mirror to apertue.

If this is correct, and I think it certainly must be, then it would seem to me that any considerable change in amperage would automatically presume a change in mirror curvature. Am I right or wong? The time has come when we must proceed to dig into the gizzard of this reflector type lamp, and find out just what makes the works work, and how the works may be made to work to best advantage.

As to varying spot size by moving the mirror or carbons, I would suppose it to be largely at matter of convenience. The optical results would be identical either way, but the movement of the mirror would, it seems to me, present less difficulty.

When I get back to New York I propose to get hold of one of the reflector type lamps and play with it until I am thoroughly familiar with all its peculiarities.

As to the Morelite lamp, and the fault in its automatic arc control, if it exists, I certainly would suggest that the matter have the immediate attenion of the Morelite Company; also I cannot agree that any manufacturer ought to set himself up as the judge of what the projectionist ought to use in the matter of screen illumination. Of course we understand that some men might make a lot of trouble by attempting to do the impossible with the lamp by using altogether too much current, but even so that is not a sufficient excuse for preventing projectionists from having control of their current output, to the end that they experiment until the best result is had. The mirror breakage and burned up equipment due to Mr. Ignoramus' unintelligence is a part and parcel of the troubles of the manufacturer, or so it seems to me. Each lamp should, I believe, bear a metal plate setting forth its maximum amperage capacity, within which the projectionist ought to be able to try various current strengths.

Another thing: It is always possible that the projectionist, while using amperage within the capacity of the lamp, may still be abusing the mirror by carrying his arc too close to it, thus subjecting the mirror to higher temperatures than it was designed to withstand. I don't think the range of possible abuse in this is very great, if the correct size spot be maintained, but certainly there is some room for wrong procedure. The projectionist should ascertain from the manufacturer the exact distance the light source ought to be from the mirror, and keep it there. This may be done by cutting a small stick the exact distance from face of mirror, beside the carbon, to face of crater, then when a new trim is put in it it is a simple matter to set the positive carbon exactly right. It is then a simple matter to make a pin hole in the lamphouse door approximately opposite the crater, and mark the exact location of the image on the wall, or elsewhere, when the crater is in exactly the correct position as to distance from the mirror.

Having done this you can thereafter see, merely by glancing at the crater image, whether or not it is exactly the right distance from the mirror. It would be very Question No. 445.—John Griffith again. He sends the following practical question.

Question: There are ten paths for current, with twenty current consuming devices. Assuming the neutral fuse to be withdrawn, if one current consuming device be removed, how much current will flow through the remaining nineteen devices?

Griffith adds these remarks: "I dislike to criticize Brother Doe's answer to qestion No. 413, because he has given us such splendid answers to so many other questions. He seems to have failed to grasp one very important phase of the action of a 3-wire circuit, viz.: that the resistance of the circuit increases, instead of decreases when the fuse in a branch circuit blows. He assumes a circuit having a total resistance of 1.000 ohms, with ten paths for current to flow, each having having a resistance of 100 ohms, which, with a 220 volt pressure, would mean that 2.2 amperes would flow through each path, or 22 amperes, in total, through all paths.

The above are Brother Doe's own figures—see page 101, January 2 issue—and right there is where he should have known he was stubbing his toe, since how can 22 amperes be forced through 1,000 ohms by a pressure of 1,000 volts?

In this matter it seems to me Doe has done no more than state his argument poorly, and in a very misleading way, and I am myself largely to blame for permitting it to be done.

The resistance as a total may be, and is 1,000 ohms, but this total is divided into several elements, so that the actual resistance as applied to the impressed pressure is only ten ohms.

I think I will say no more, but let the matter be cleared up in the answers to the above question—which same will be scrutinized a bit more closely than were those to question No. 413.

Also and moreover I shall ask no more questions this week, since it is important that this matter be cleared up, and its stating in an understandable way is "not so easy." I am to some extent puzzled by some of its phases myself.

Summed down I think the thing which interests us all is precisely why one side burns brighter and one side more dim when the neutral is out in an unbalanced circuit, and probably the explanation given by Brother Munn is quite entirely correct, though somehow it has always appeared to me as though it were not really how the darned thing OUGHT to act. Probably I am wrong. It is queer how one's mind will follow the path mapped out in many things, and then just automatically switch off on some path which very likely has a blind end.

Bluebook School Answers No Letter

THIS week I propose to lay off the Bluebook School and myself answer a letter written by one of the too numerous element of rough neck, square heads, with which motion picture projection unfortunately still is afflicted.

Since the Bluebook School was started I have received enough letters commending it and its work to fill several issues of the Moving Picture World, including the advertising space. Also I have received others of sarcastic tone, and still others which denounced the work as calculated to create "operators" (men who write such letters always refer to projection as "operating") and a few which have been just plain abusive, and as personally insulting as the writers knew how to make them. Those latter were always unsigned, or signed with some nom de plume, usually "Operator."

If the writers of such letters could know my reaction to their efforts they would probably be surprised. As a matter of fact I feel nothing but sorrow for them, and for the profession upon which they inflict themselves.

The letter I shall quote came from a great mid-west city. Don't jump to the conclusion from that description that it was Chicago, for it was NOT. The letter, which I ask you to read with charity, says, "Mr. Fourflusher Hiney Richardson: I write to compliment you on your funny pages in the Moving Picture World. It is good comedy, especially the Bluebook School. We all see what a few of the boy fall for that line of bunk. If you had any sense you would get wise to yourself and quit springing something nobody falls for, except a few who want to be aristocrats, and think they are too good to associate with plain operators.

They Are Not Even Operators

"They call themselves projectionists. Operators ain't good enough for them. They think they are better than the boys, because they can answer a lot of silly questions that nobody but a nut would ask in the first place. To h—— with that kind of junk. I'm an operator. I'm an operator because I operate a machine, see? If I don't then tell me what it is I do do.

"This Wiseheimer stuff is all the bunk. It don't get us nowhere, and don't get us nothing. The boss don't care a dam whether we know a lot or don't, if we get a good picture on the screen. What good does it do him? Mr. Wiseheimer gets a job as projectionist and I get the same kind of one as operator. The union gets me the same money it gets him, don't it? I operate a machine and so does he, so where in heil is the difference? Show me, Mr. Wiseguy Richardson. If you can do that I'll shut up, but you know you can't so don't waste time. You need it to keep what few damn fools there is answering them wise questions of yours.

"You do a lot of blowing about the Bluebook. If I had my way I'd take every damned one of them out and dump them in the river. We don't put a picture on the screen with a book. We do it with a machine, see."

Gentlemen, I ask your forgiveness for inflicting this sort of crudeness upon you. I have quoted the letter exactly as it is written, just to show you the type of man and mind with which we all still have to contend in motion picture projection.

However, I will say this: Each year the type becomes less in number. Today the writer of this queer attempt represents only a relatively small minority of even the machine operators, though there still is a substantial percentage of the men who discount the value of expert knowledge in motion picture projection, and regard it largely as merely the operation of a mechanism.

As to the "School," it was first started with the idea of inducing owners of the Bluebook, of which there are many thousands, to really study the book, section by section, by asking the 842 questions in its back, five each week, in the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World. It was my idea that this would serve two purposes. First, it would bring many men face to face with the fact that THEY could themselves answer but a small fraction of the questions, each and every one of which had some more or less intimate connection with the work of projection, and if they had a particle of pride, they would get busy and dig out the answers. Anyhow they would have the answers when published, and thus be helped and made better projectionists. Secondly, it would show the owners of the Bluebook what literal MINE of projection knowledge it really is, and put them into position to use it intelligently, and to get far greater value out of it.

Those were the underlying ideas of the "School," and I have had very, very much more than ample evidence that it has worked out wonderfully well. The list of Bluebook questions has been to a considerable extent departed from, but the answers to at least forty nine out of every fifty questions asked thus far may be found in the Bluebook just the same.

This correspondent, who merely signed his letter "Operator" (he need not have feared that I would make him ridiculous by divulging his authorship of the letter), assumes that because only a few names appear regularly as answers of questions, only those few really answer the questions, or are interested in the "School."

In this he is wrong to the point of being funny. As a matter of fact the answers average about fifty a week—they ought to be five thousand at least—but, save for an occasional exception, only the few whose names appear pretty regularly are able to put their ideas into such form that I can say with confidence they have the right answer. Probably many others really know the correct answer, but cannot make themselves understood on paper.

However, regardless of how many answers there are, the REAL SCHOOL CONSISTS OF MANY THOUSANDS OF MACHINE OPERATORS AND MOTION PICTURE PROJECTIONISTS, SCATTERED IN THE PROJECTION ROOMS OF THIS COUNTRY, CANADA AN OTHER LANDS, WHO WEEKLY STUDY THE PUBLISHED QUESTIONS, TRY TO WORK THEM OUT, RETAIN THAT EFFORT AND COMPARE IT WITH THE PUBLISHED ANSWER WHEN IT APPEARS.

That is the REAL school, and it numbers fully fifteen thousand men—quite possibly many more than that.

And now one other point. This correspondent speaks of an "aristocracy." I was interested by that, because in a publication issued during the late election of officers of Local Union 306 here in New York City, a similar sneering remark appeared with regard to an "aristocracy" among the men. It perhaps will be interesting and enlightening to examine into just what is meant by his term, when used as the letter writer and the union publication used it. The answer is simple and can only be just one thing.

The "aristocrat," in the sense the term was used, is the man who has pride in the business of motion picture projection; who regards it not merely as the simple mechanical operation of a mechanism, but a business or profession calling for accurate knowledge and expert skill, and who is willing to give to it the best there is in him. He is willing to work hard, to the end that that he deliver high class results upon the screen, and do so economically and efficiently. He tries to do credit to himself, and to the union to which he belongs, if he belongs to one, by applying real knowledge and high grade skill to his work.

MEASURED BY THAT STANDARD IT IS A PRETTY POOR PIECE OF A MAN WHO WOULD NOT BE A BIT PROUD TO BE TERMED AN "ARISTOCRAT." DON'T YOU THINK SO?

This man says he is an operator because he "operates a machine." He then naively asks, "If I don't, then what in hell do I do?"

With the passing remark that a locomotive engineer "operates a machine," but is not dubbed an "operator," I will answer him thus: Yes, it is true you do "operate a machine." Also, presumably you do pretty nearly nothing else. You just oil it around (probably somewhat profusely too), thread a film into it, install carbons in the lamp, close a switch, strike an arc, start the "machine" and maintain a more or less clear, steady light upon the screen.

As to whether or no its optical train is right or wrong, you, as a machine operator, have but the most hazy, nebulous idea. Trifles like lens charts mean nothing in your young life. To hell with that sort of junk. To talk to you and your kind about "arc distance" and "crater angle" would be like trying to explain a problem in geometry to a railway section man. To you that is all merely "junk."

Difference Between Operator And Projectionist

You ask what the difference is between yourself and a projectionist, at the same time intimating that in your opinion there is absolutely none at all. In that, however, you are vastly in error, as I will try to explain.

You yourself say the operator merely "operates a machine," which is but the very smallest part in motion picture projection, and the part which really requires a relatively slight amount of expert skill and knowledge.

Motion picture projectors are so wonderfully well made, and so nearly semi-automatic in their every action, that any boy of fifteen years, given a little practice, could successfully "operate" one, were it not for his probable lack of judgment and resourcefulness in case of film fire. You and your kind have deliberately done about everything you could to instill into the mind of the exhibitor and theatre manager the idea that motion picture projection is merely a matter of "operating the machine." You have, for years, actually resented any and every endeavor to change that idea. The exhibitor and theatre manager, or a very large percentage of them, actually believe that operating a semi-automatic machine is about all there is to projection, and if it were not for laws and their fear of the fire danger, very many of them would right now employ boys and girls to take YOUR places.

Well, Mr. Operator, you had better watch out, for it, in all human probability, is only a question of a relatively short time until the film will ALL be either slow burning, or entirely fireproof, and IF THE EXHIBITOR AND MANAGER THEN STILL HAVE THE SAME IDEA ABOUT PROJECTION, YOU ARE GOING TO BE VERY MUCH OUT OF LUCK, the power of the union notwithstanding. Make you no mistakes about that! Before that time arrives YOU will do exceedingly well to help Richardson and his kind to convince the exhibitor and manager of the FACT that the mere operation of a machine is the least part of motion picture projection.

Examines Into Phases of Knowledge Required

And now let us examine into some phases of knowledge requisite to the work of motion picture projection, if it is to be efficiently done.

The motion picture projectionist, who is one in fact, does NOT accept the projector as it is handed to him by the installer. When he takes charge he, first of all, checks out the optical train of his projectors, using a lens chart and well established rules, and ascertains if (a) the arc distance is what it should be, hence there is neither undue lens breakage or unnecessary loss of light at the collector lens. (b) He spaces his condenser lenses just far enough apart so that they will not actually touch each other, for reasons he well understands—there are two of them. (c) He ascertains whither or no the projection lens free diameter is what it should be to get the best results. (d) He tests out his rotating shutter position, and makes sure its master blade is no wider than is necessary, thus reducing light loss and flicker tendency to a minimum. (e) He carefully examines his projectors to see to it that there are no unduly worn parts—if they be used projectors—and that all parts are in correct adjustment. (f) He carefully tests the aperture tension and reduces it to the least possible amount consistent with picture steadiness. (g) He checks up on his projection room feeders (wires) and sees that there is no waste of power through unnecessary voltage drop, reporting it to the management if there is. (h) He carefully examines all projection room fuses to see that they are of proper capacity. (i) He tests the wiring for grounds. (j) If the projection room floor be of cement he makes sure that it gives off no dust by abrasion, which same will wear out projector and motor generator bearings with amazing speed. (k) He sees to it that his projection room lighting is such as will enable him to have the best possible view of the screen image. ((l) He examines the surroundings of the screen and the auditorium lighting, directing the attention of the management to anything which is operating to injure the screen image. (m) He examines the screen surface, that being an integral part of his projection plant, or equipment, and makes such recommendation to it as seem necessary to the improvement of projection.

And so I might go on at some considerable length, but I can right now pretty well imagine our "machine operator" declaiming that "The manager wouldn't listen to me if I did all that, and it ain't none of my business anyhow"!

True, most managements would not listen, because you have taken very careful pains to educate them into the belief that all they need YOU around for it is "operate the machine"—to thread it, start it going and to stop it. To them you are just a mere machine attendant—a sort of necessary nuisance. A man who knows nothing at all except how to "operate a machine."

You not only have never tried to "sell" projection to the exhibitor, but you have actually sneered at those who have. You have never been able to command respect for motion picture projection, for the very simple reason that you have never respected it yourself. You have never fitted yourself to talk with an intelligence which will command respect upon such problems as screen surfaces, lens action and diameters, auditorium lighting with respect to projection, or any other of the many projection problems, hence you have never talked to the management or these topics in a way which has tended to convince them that they amount to anything, or that you really know anything about them anyhow.

Bluebook School Makes No Apology to Any One

YOU ARE A MACHINE ATTENDANT, OR "OPERATOR," AND ARE VERY PROUD OF THAT FACT. The projectionist is that, too, BUT he is very much MORE, and HE is proud of THAT fact.

I think, my friend the enemy, I have answered you though possibly you will not agree. The Bluebook School needs to make no apology to any one, either as concerns the small number of faithful ones who have stuck through thick and thin, or for any one else or anything else.

In my opinion it is the other way—there are very many who thought to apologize for having permitted so excellent a thing to proceed for so long a time without even writing a post card of encouragement. There are literally thousands of men in this broad land and in Canada who have read and filed away pretty well all the answers, but without bothering to send even so much as a word of appreciation of or for the vast amount of work getting all that stuff into shape has entailed.

Oh, well, that's all right. I've long since stopped expecting it, though sometimes when I think how hard I have worked, and the BATTLES I have went through for YOU and for the I. A., too, most of which I might have sidestepped to my financial gain, I will admit that the apathy of the men and of the unions have sometimes hurt a bit.

But that passes, and I glance up at the flag I nailed to the mast sixteen or more years ago and—go right on doing the best I can. And that flag, gentlemen, will remain smack where it is, at the top of the pole, until some day they fold a pair of cold hands on my battle scarred old breast, maybe with a pair of lilies in 'em, and the sexton pats me in the face with his spade, whereupon you will all join in a chorus, about as follows: "Poor old Rich. He wasn't a bad sort at that. Wonder who'll take his place. Say, ja hear th' last story. It's a pip." And that will be that!

Providence Wakes Up

FROM Thomas J. McDade, Projectionist State Theatre, Pawtucket, Rhode Island, comes a set of very good answers to Bluebook School questions 383 to 386, inclusive, with the remark from Brother McDade that up to now he has seen no Bluebook School answers from Providence men. Pawtucket and Providence are really one city, you know. He expresses the opinion the the Bluebook School is doing the men a lot of good.

Yes, McDade is the first Providence man who has entered the "School," and I have really been a bit surprised at it, because Providence men are. or at least were quite progressive. I have wondered what happened to cause such a deep, impressive silence from the Capitol City of our little big state.

But then I'm used to that. Up in Hamilton, Ontario, for instance, is one of the most progressive bunch of projectionists in all Canada, yet in rather the long time the "school" has run, there has been not a single cheep out of 'em. The same is true of Rock Island, Illinois, where I know there are many darned good men.

Boston has a lot of really high grade men, and so has, as a matter of fact, every large city and most of the smaller ones, in the country, but they seem to be too ndeamd (fix that bunch of letter up to suit yourself) lazy to dig out the answers and sendum in. You see if you really do send in answers, you have GOT to dig them out for yourself.

Oh well, as the Esquimo says: "Wot th' Shoel!" And that reminds me. I wanted to make something emphatic in a telegram recently. I wrote: "If you don't I'll raise hell with you." The operator absolutely refused to receive or transmit that wicked word. I changed it to: "I'll raise Shoel with you," and she promptly grabbed the money and got busy with the key. It's a great ole wurruld!

helpful to other projectionists if you who have had considerable experience with the reflector type lamp would set forth such things as you may have learned concerning them and their peculiarities. It would not do you the least bit of harm, and would help your brother who is perhaps having a struggle with the new equipment.

It is an utterly mistaken idea that it helps you, in any way, shape, manner or form, to pass along little tricks you may have learned, so that they may benefit others. True this department does not offer you pay to do so. It is run primarily to help YOU, and the PROFESSION OF MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION, and when it comes to the point where men have got to be paid to help the profession and their brother projectionist by passing along some little thing they may have learned, then it is time to quit. The profession would not be worth working for and fighting for. I venture the assertion that any one of you would have to send in a good many things to this department before you would even up the score on what it has GIVEN to you, through its own efforts and through the courtesy of its correspondents.

ADVANTAGES

Steadiness

The MAZDA lamp provides a constant source of light. The intensity of illumination on the screen does not change. The MAZDA lamp does not vary in intensity and operates always in a fixed position. It assures continuous uniformity of screen illumination. This combination greatly reduces the possibility of eye strain

Simplicity

The projectionist has no adjustments to make during operation. After the initial setting, no change is necessary during the life of the lamp. This permits more attention to the other details of presenting the picture in a successful manner.

Cleanliness

The MAZDA lamp is a hermetically sealed light source and because of its greater cleanliness inspires a cleaner general condition in the projection room.

Economy

The 900-watt MAZDA lamp compares favorably with a 40-amp. direct current arc. The advantage from an illuminating standpoint is in favor of the MAZDA lamp Assuming an alternating current source of supply, the arc requires 60 volts at 50 amperes, and with converter losses, consumes 4 kw. per hour. The MAZDA lamp (including all losses) requires approximately 1 kw. per hour. The power bill is, therefore, cut to about one-fourth.

Utility

The new Incandescent Equipment can be used successfully in theatres having a main floor seating capacity up to 1,000 or having up to 16-ft. picture, or having a throw of approximately 100 feet. It gives better results than an alternating current arc and is the equal of the direct current arc up to 40 amps.

Power's Incandescent Equipment represents eight years' development and test in laboratories and theatres. It is therefore now possible to offer a reliable projection device, using a MAZDA lamp as the source of light, not only for theatres but also for schools, lodge rooms, community centers, and industrial establishments.

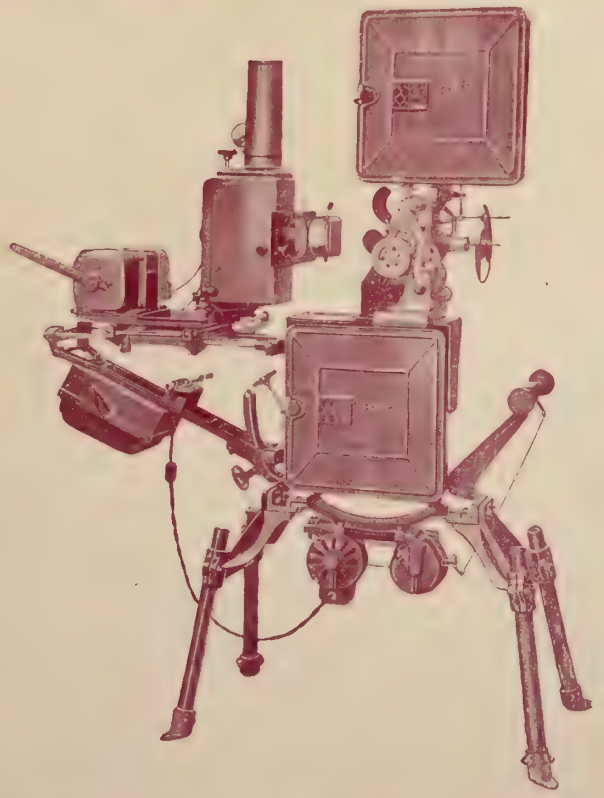
Adaptability

An arc lamp gives a whiter, steadier, more effective light on direct current than on alternating current. Since the current supply to the theatre is usually alternating it is necessary to use an expensive motor-generator set to convert to direct current.

The MAZDA lamp operates equally well on alternating and direct current and with equal illumination.

IMPROVEMENTS and REFINEMENTS

Moulded Composition Knobs and Handles Thruout, and a New and Superior Vertical Adjustment on the Lamphouse. The Slideover Tracks are now Cold Rolled Steel, accurately finished and securely fastened to the top of the base casting.



Crystallized Lacquer Finish replaces plain Japan finish—all steel parts are Dull or Polished Nickelplated. New Mirror and Power's Aspheric Condenser Mount are much superior to those heretofore supplied.

WEEKS ON BROADWAY

—and still going strong!

8 WEEKS AT THE ASTOR

Hailed by the critics and the public of New York as the acme of wild, weird, and wonderful entertainment. Against all opposition of Broadway attractions, this picture played to eight big weeks of capacity business at the Astor Theatre, Broadway.

plus 6 WEEKS AT THE COLONY

Immediately following the eight weeks' run at the Astor Theatre, The Phantom opened at B. S. Moss' Colony Theatre. The first week drew $32,500 to the box office in its ninth week on Broadway and public demand stretched this run out, week after week, for six weeks, when—public demand brought it to its third engagement in a Broadway first-run house, The Cameo. And still the crowds pour in; still The Phantom is making Broadway box-offices ring. Another record for the greatest box-office attraction of the year.

NOW! 1 WEEK AT B.S.MOSS' BROADWAY

It's fourth engagement in a Broadway Theatre! There is no end to the demand for The Phantom—no end to the money that exhibitors can and will make on this spectacular thriller. Since last August still cleaning up on Broadway.

WHAT DO OF THIS

(No. 469 Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President Universal Pictures Corporation.)

I'VE JUST HAD A SHOCK. AN EXHIBITOR SAID TO ME, "THE trouble with you Universal folks is that you are too modest. As a matter of fact you have beaten every other company in the world every year for the last five years in the high percentage of consistently good box-office pictures. But you have let some of the other fellows out-yell you. They have been making claims while you have been making good pictures. You're too darned modest."

WELL, HEAVENS AND EARTH, I NEVER SUSPECTED UNIversal was unduly modest. I knew mighty well we had a higher batting average than anyone, but I thought we had been yelling about it in rather loud and immodest tones.

IT'S SOMETHING OF A SHOCK FOR ANYONE TO BE ACcused of modesty in the picture business . . . . so I've had a shock.

NOW, ON LOOKING BACK OVER THE PAST FIVE YEARS, IT is not only gratifying but it is really surprising to see how far behind we have left everybody else on the percentage of pictures that have made fat profits for exhibitors.

OTHERS HAVE SPENT AS MUCH MONEY AS WE HAVE. SOME have spent more. Some have spent less. Some have made a terrific noise about the awful prices they have paid for stories, plays and well-known books. But when the actual pictures were delivered, most of them proved to be artistic successes and commercial flops.

DURING THESE FIVE YEARS, SOME COMPANIES HAVE HAD one or two or even three good years as far as product is concerned, but not a single one had hit the mark regularly for five successive years as Universal has.

YOU THINK RECORD?

I THINK WE WASTE LESS money than any producer, though heaven knows even we waste enough. It seems impossible to eliminate all of this waste without running the danger of producing hash pictures. But we never relax one moment in our effort to conserve our resources where conserving will not affect quality.

I KNOW MIGHTY WELL WE have always charged too little, for our pictures, if what others charge can be used as a standard; I know we are going to get more like a live-and-let-live price as we correct the conditions in places where we are shut out of first-run theatres owned by other producers; and I know our next line-up of pictures will be even better than our standard for these past five unbeaten years.

THERE HAVE BEEN TIMES when the future of the business looked threatening, but as far as Universal is concerned the outlook was never quite so bright. With pictures a little better than ever, with genuinely representative theatres in spots which have been closed to us in the past; and with an exhibitor good-will which has never been equalled in the history of the business—well, we're sitting on top of the world—and there's plenty of room for you with us!

the greatest two reel comedies ever produced !

Read what the M. P. NEWS says about this one

"IT would be hard to figure how these Buster Brown Comedies produced by Stern Brothers could be improved upon. In Arthur Trimble as Buster and Doreen Turner as Mary Jane they have a very capable pair of youngsters, but in Tige, the dog, they have a real comedy star. It is no reflection upon little Miss Turner or Master Trimble to say that this dog star seems to realize the comedy situations full as well as they do. The trio seems destined to become more popular with the release of each picture if the stories and situations are as good in the future as they have been in the past. In this one there is an abundance of material and the situations and by-play are taken full advantage of. It is an improvement even on those that have gone before."

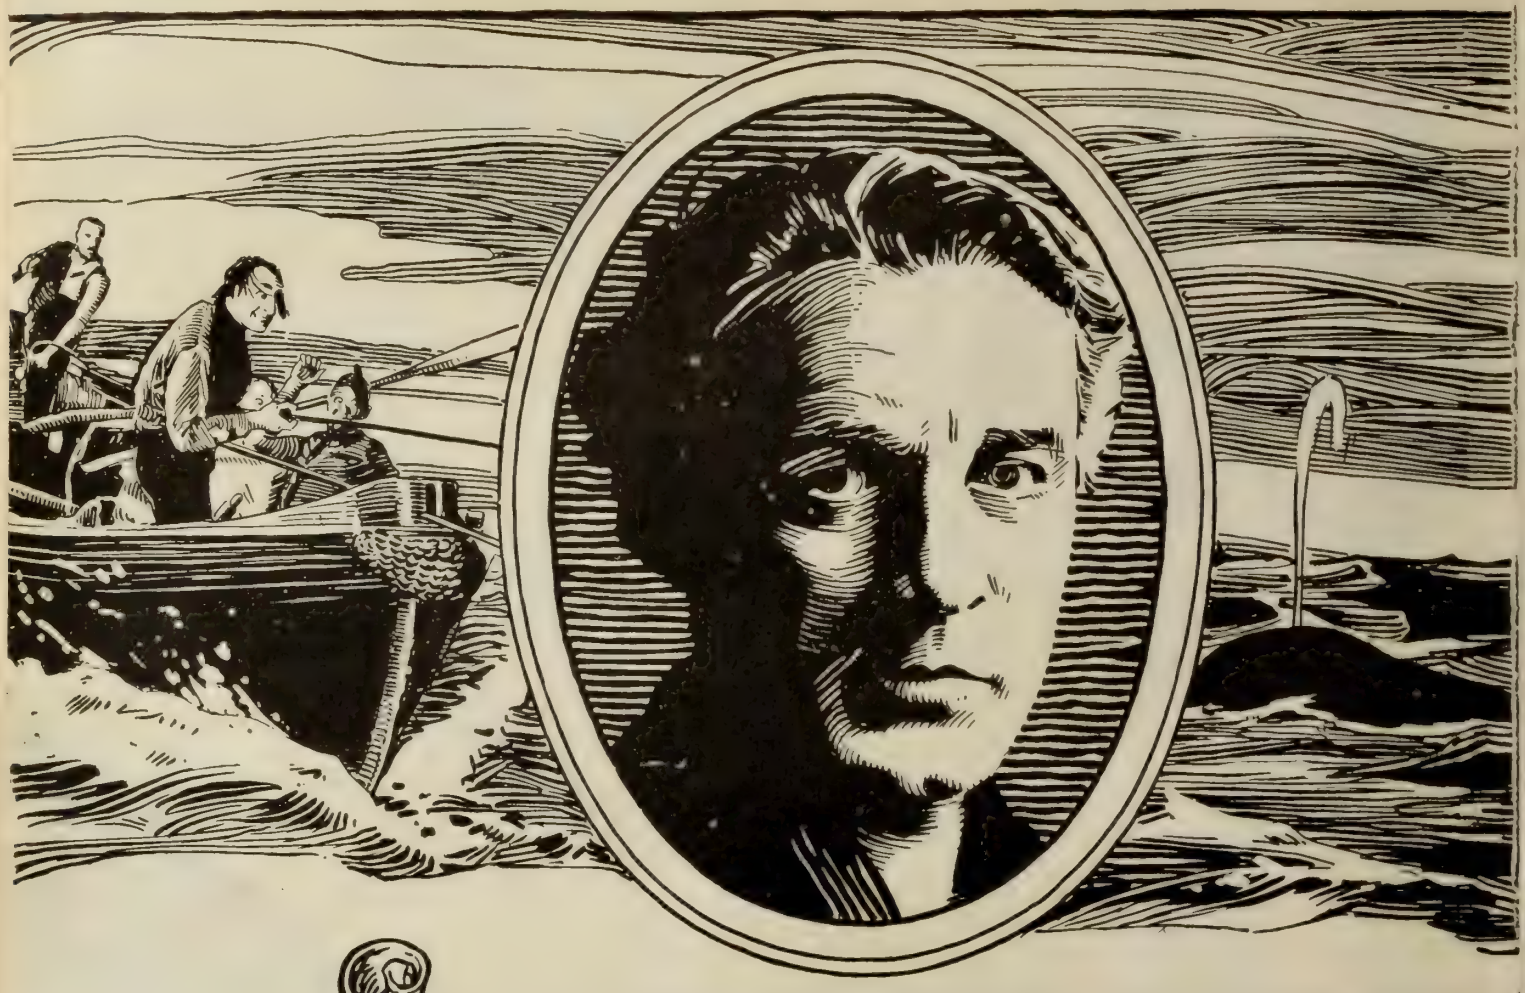
You expected "THE SEA BEAST" to be a BIG picture; something unusual. You expected from JOHN BARRYMORE perfect acting and tremendous audience appeal.

BUT—Its enthusiastic reception at its opening on Broadway proves it BIGGER than big: appealing almost without precedent; the HIT of HITS!



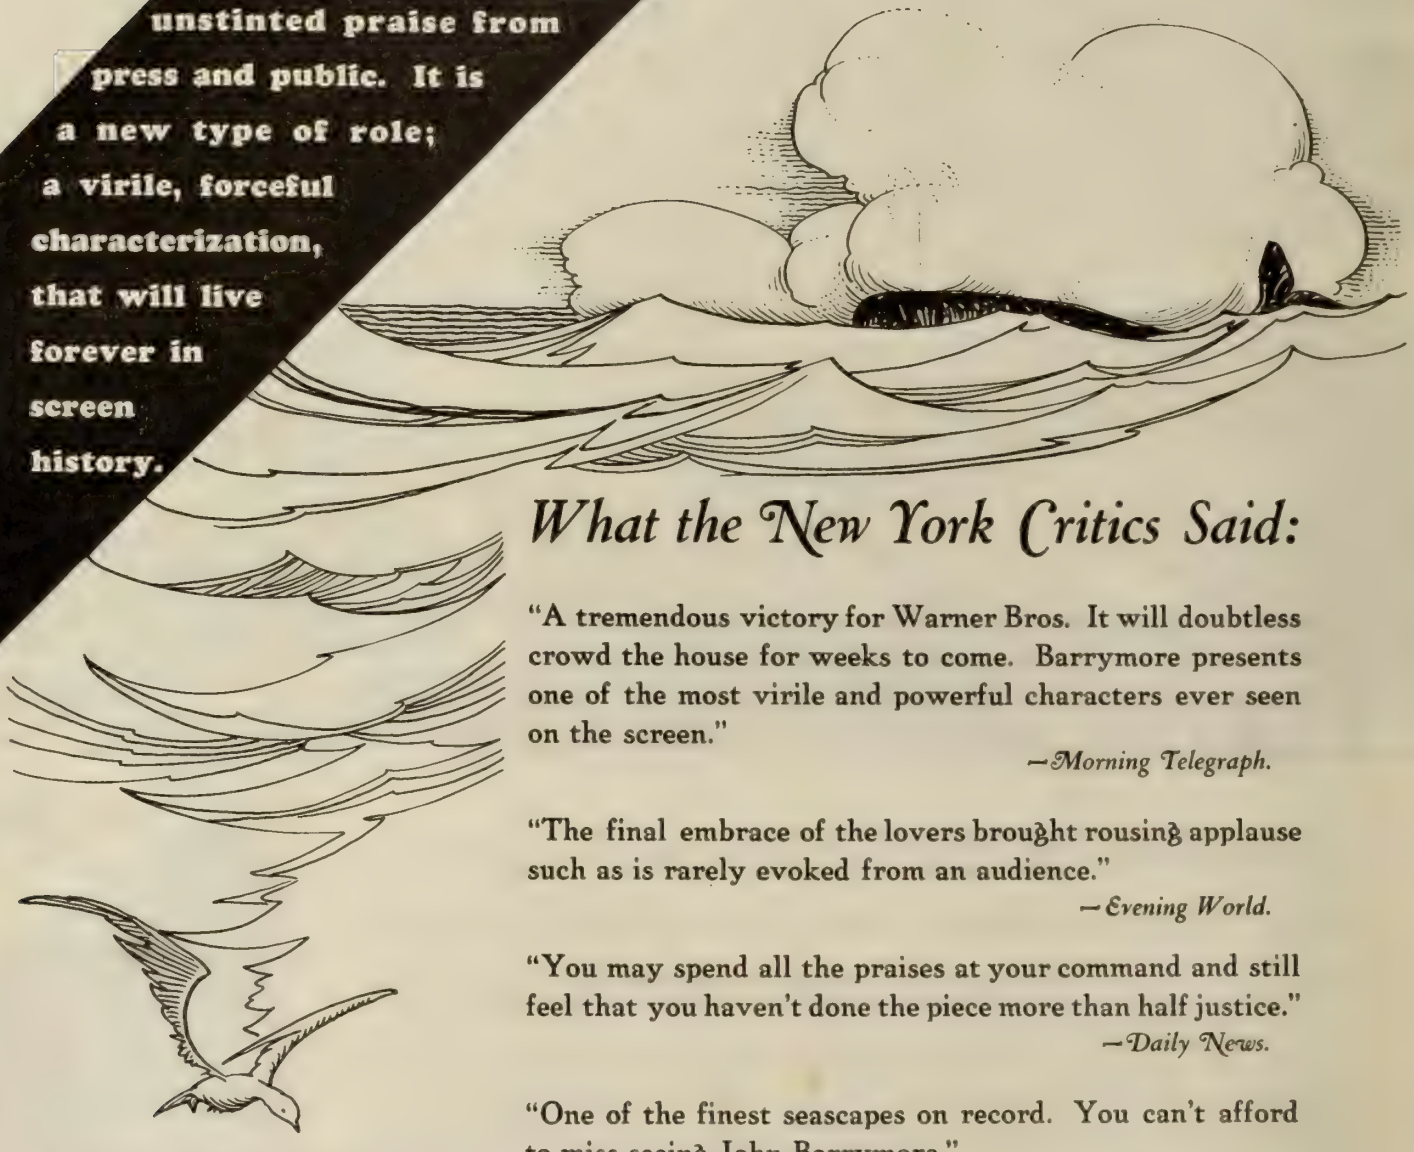
January 15th JOHN BARRYMORE in "THE SEA BEAST" smashed in on Broadway at the Warner theatre. And what a smash! A welcome back from Barrymore fans after the star's two year absence! A cheering theatreful of screen critics, thrilling to its storm scenes and the whale hunt, tender at the most powerful love story ever filmed, and stamping it by their enthusiasm the HIT of HITS of the season.

John Barrymore

"THE SEA BEAST" is big enough to change the Warner theatre from a continuous run to two-a-day. It's big enough to sell out at every performance at two dollar top and set a new record for advance sales. And that means big enough to take its place among the screen classics of all time and to be the biggest money maker available to exhibitors this season.

in "The Sea Beast"

John Barrymore's only stage or screen appearance this season is a performance that won unstinted praise from press and public. It is a new type of role; a virile, forceful characterization, that will live forever in screen history.



What the New York Critics Said:

"A tremendous victory for Warner Bros. It will doubtless crowd the house for weeks to come. Barrymore presents one of the most virile and powerful characters ever seen on the screen."

—Morning Telegraph.

"The final embrace of the lovers brought rousing applause such as is rarely evoked from an audience."

—Evening World.

"You may spend all the praises at your command and still feel that you haven't done the piece more than half justice."

—Daily News.

"One of the finest seascapes on record. You can't afford to miss seeing John Barrymore."

—Evening Telegram.

"Dolores Costello is one of the finest actresses of the screen. She has youth, beauty, individuality."

—New York American.

"A fine picture with drawing power, through itself and by virtue of the magic of the Barrymore name, as well as his performance. The picture without Barrymore would have stood up—with him it's that much stronger."

"Facts First— Then Advertising"

That is the slogan of the Joseph Richards Company, one of this country's most successful advertising agencies, and one that has been in business since 1847.

Read it again.

Isn't it one of the best four-word stories you've ever heard?

As a slogan it's the property of the Richards Company and we're giving them full credit for it.

But it's more than just a slogan. It's a business story that's a knockout!

There's more sound, common sense in that brief, four-word advertising story than in all the wild whangdoodle, sucked-out-of-the-thumb, blue-sky advertising yarns that's ever been printed or spoken.

Every man who invests money in advertising will be dollars ahead the day he accepts this simple story—and buys with it.

That's why MOVING PICTURE WORLD printed it.

J. D. Williams Here to Boost British Films

Shows "Nell Gwyn" at Ritz-Carlton Monday Night

By SUMNER SMITH

J. D. Williams, former manager of First National, is in New York again, this time as organizer of British National Pictures. With "Nell Gwyn," produced in England with Dorothy Gish, he will on Monday night, at its premiere at the Ritz-Carlton, officially open his campaign for British pictures in this country. Judging by the "stills," reproduced elsewhere in Moving Picture World, "J. D." has a surprise in store.

With Mr. Williams at the Ritz-Carlton are George T. Eaton, who is heavily interested in British National Pictures, and Herbert Wilcox, producer of "Nell Gwyn."

Mr. Williams believes—and rightly—that America offers a market for good pictures wherever produced. Furthermore, he believes that his British organization can show us a few things about variety and quality. In a chat with Mr. Wilcox this week Samuel Goldwyn expressed Mr. Williams' views—that quality is what counts. "J. D." says that "Nell Gwyn" is the first big gun in his quality offensive.

The plan of the tremendous studio project which Mr. Williams has begun outside of London and the fog area was shown the writer. It is an ambitious project behind which all Britain is rallying with enthusiasm. And with his American experience Mr. Williams is going to do the thing right. His studios will be perfectly equipped and his quality pictures aren't to cost the customary British $25,000 but enough to enable him to really compete with American pictures—in other words, up around the $200,000 mark.

Mr. Eaton, being new to the picture business, says little but he is studying a lot. As "Danny" says in Film Daily, "You will hear from him later." Mr. Wilcox is a young man with enthusiasm and ideas.

Morgan Leaves

W. J. Morgan, sales manager of Producers' Distributing Corporation, leaves New York on January 20 for a tour of the western territory and a visit to Los Angeles producers.

Join Forces

A scheme whereby a permanent monthly income will be made available for the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri has been devised by C. E. Cook, business manager, and unofficially approved by the organization.

The plan consists of a permanent tie-up between the M. P. T. O. K.-M. and an exchange, the name of which is not yet divulged, in which the exhibitor body will do all the booking of a certain short subject in the Kansas City territory and reap a percentage income on its earnings. The short subject is a weekly issue product and the stability of the proposal has so appealed to Mr. Cook that a contract may be entered into within ten days.

The idea grew out of the tie-up last month—"Exhibitors Month"—between the M. P. T. O. K.-M. and P. D. C., in which the exhibitors aided in the booking and received a percentage of the profit.

F. & R. Managers Talk Policy in Minneapolis

Managers of nearly 100 picture theatres operated by Finkelstein & Ruben throughout the Northwest met on January 5 and 6 in Minneapolis for the second semi-annual convention. A discussio of economy, summer business and changes in circuit policies were the major issues before the session.

A formal dinner in the Gold Room of the Hotel Radisson featured by an address from executives of the firm including William Hamm, M. L. Finkelstein, I. N. Ruben and Theodore L. Hays, closed the banquet.

Among the executives and department heads represented were H. D. Finkelstein, director of personnel and music; Edmund Rubens, director of bookings; C. P. Murphy, director of production; Ben Ferriss, director of advertising and publicity, and Fred Cubberly, director of out-of-town theatres.

Glasses Save Eyesight

A film being exhibited at the Hippodrome, Newport, Ky., just across the Ohio River from Cincinnati, caught fire, severely burning George Nixon, projectionist. The fact that he was wearing glasses is the only thing that saved his eyesight. Art Bates, manager, reports the damage to the booth at $800.

Fox Acquires Detroit Site

Detroit, January 18.

William Fox is to have his own theatre in Detroit. This seems definitely established with the announcement this week that the Fox interests have acquired a site on Woodward avenue between Montcalm and Columbia streets, near the heart of the downtown theatrical section. The site is half a block above the location of John H. Kunsky's new State Theatre.

The announcement of the enterprise was made last week through the Detroit papers by Walter Shafer, resident manager of the Fox-Washington Theatre. Shafer said the theatre would seat 5,000 and in addition to pictures would offer elaborate presentation acts, with a regular orchestra of 80 pieces. The Fox-Washington will be disposed of as soon as the new house is completed, which will be in September, 1927, Shafer said. The lease has eight years yet to run, having been renewed for that length of time a few months ago.

Five theatres owned and operated by the Beecher Co., Inc., in Grand Rapids have been purchased by a group of Furniture City exhibitors headed by Glen Fleser and E. N. Brown for a consideration of more than $150,000. The theatres going into new ownership are the Liberty, Madison, Alcazar, Franklin and Bijou.

Saginaw will have another theatre before the end of 1926, according to an announcement by W. S. Butterfield, president of the Butterfield Theatrical Enterprises. Mr. Butterfield says he has decided on a site.

Charles H. Miles, who recently announced he would build a large new theatre in the heart of downtown Detroit, says rumors to the effect that he has shelved his plans are false. Plans are about completed, Miles said and bids soon will be asked on the building. It will be a combination picture and vaudeville house.

New Chicago Circuit

A new theatrical circuit has been organized in Chicago, by S. J. Gregory, formerly head of the Gregory Theatre Circuit in Gary and other suburban cities. The new company will be known as the Gregory-Bernasek Theatre Corporation, with offices at 190 North State street in the State-Lake building and a capital of $1,000,000. Associated with Mr. Gregory are Benjamin Bernasek, James Craidon, Lee Currier and George M. Tearney. It is expected that the operations of the new circuit will be confined to the Chicago territory.

Marvelous Invention to Revolutionize the Industry

Baffling Third Dimension Effect Achieved

By WILLIAM J. REILLY

Chicago, January 19.

A new kind of projection machine spun a new kind of picture, made by a new kind of camera, on a new kind of screen at the old Essanay studio here this afternoon. Twenty-three feet high and forty-two feet wide this huge living canvas leaped from the darkness of the barn-like studio, completely transforming it. Aladdin had rubbed his lamp. George K. Spoor and John Berggren had rubbed a million brain cells and two million one-dollar notes from the Spoor bankroll; and the Spoor-Berggren Natural Vision Pictures were on the screen at last.

All the flatness of the motion picture as it is known today had gone. In place of flatness were roundness and depth. It was as if a flat line drawing on your wall had suddenly become animated, taking on every conformation, line, and shadow and beauty of figure given to it by nature. The flickering sensation, too, which the screen of old telegraphed to the eye had vanished. The eyes rested serenely and without strain upon a panorama that actually seemed to be held up, inviting leisurely, roving examination.

It has taken ten years for this picture giant to be hatched. The giant is being rocked in the cradle of the old Essanay studio, preparatory to being shown to the public for the first time early in April of this year. When that happens the motion picture industry will witness the most revolutionary invention that has been evolved since the motion picture itself was born. George K. Spoor will begin shooting February 1 on an eight-reel production made on the epochal Third Dimension Plan. Weather conditions in Chicago prevented Mr. Spoor from making this picture last October when everything was ready on the Essanay lot for the production of "The Price of the Prarie," an epic of early Kansas by Margaret Hill McCarter, from the story in Harper's. It looks now as if Mr. Spoor will instead produce "Grit" a melodrama with big scenic backgrounds, and action aplenty. Location scouts are now in Mis-

Plan Nebraska Vaudeville and Picture Chain

World Realty Co. Expanding, Says McFarland

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Omaha, January 18.

A chain of vaudeville and picture theatres to cover Nebraska, starting with two new houses at Columbus and Fremont, Neb., are included in the expansion program of the World Realty Co., it has been announced by W. R. McFarland, vice-president.

Work on a $100,000 theatre building for the company at Columbus is to be started immediately. The theatre at Fremont is to cost $125,000. Both of these theatres will be built by local capital and leased for a period of from ten to fifteen years to the World Realty Co., which will provide vaudeville entertainment in addition to pictures.

The theatres will seat approximately 1,000 each. Fifteen of the larger cities of the state will have World Realty theatres, Mr. McFarland says. Cities the size of Hastings and Grand Island will have larger houses, but all will have full stage equipment.

Mr. McFarland stated that suburban Omaha would not be neglected, and that there was a demand for the World Realty Co. to erect a number of such houses in the city.

"Pictures have come to stay," said Mr. McFarland. "The people want some vaudeville with their pictures, and we will give them what they want.

Directors to Meet

N. Y. Censors Have Taken $853,986 From Producers

Profit to State Hardly One-Half That Sum—Eliminations Are Less Frequent—Appeals Total 32

In submitting what may be its last report to the Governor of New York State, the New York State Motion Picture Commission calls attention to the fact that from August 1, 1921, to January 1, last, the period of its existence, it has collected from producers the sum of $853,986.85. During that same period, the commission's running expenses have amounted to $373,927.97, leaving a profit to the state through censorship of $480,058.88. During the past year the commission has taken in $197,049.34, with an operating expense of $89,956.33.

The report made by the commission to Governor Smith covers sixteen typewritten pages, much of which is given over to a review of its activities during the last twelve months and recommendations for the future.

During the past year eliminations were made by the commission from 712 films, while 2,598 films were approved without eliminations. A total of 592 permits were granted without examination and twelve features were condemned in their entirety.

A total of 4,236 eliminations were made by the New York State Commission last year, consisting of 3,868 scenes and 368 titles. All told, 8,849 reels of film were examined.

"Indecency" resulted in 656 eliminations, while scenes "tending to incite to crime" resulted in 1,804 eliminations; "inhuman" scenes cutting out 1,438 sections, while scenes tending to corrupt morals" snipped out 318 more and "sacrilegious" accounted for twenty.

Eliminations were made from 428 dramas, 140 comedies, 61 comedy-dramas, 65 serials, 2 news reels, 2 educational reels, 1 cartoon and 13 of a miscellaneous nature. During the year thirty-two appeals were taken by producers asking for a review by the entire commission.

Walrath Named Movie Tailor

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Albany, January 19.

As predicted in Moving Picture World several weeks ago, John H. Walrath of Syracuse, N. Y., mayor of that city until January 1, was named this week by Governor Alfred E. Smith to the New York State Motion Picture Commission, succeeding George H. Cobb of Watertown, whose term of office expired on January 1 but who has remained with the commission until his successor could be appointed. Mr. Walrath is a former business man and the leading Democratic politician in Central New York.

Mr. Cobb will return to Watertown where he will re-enter the law business. He has served on the commission since it began to function in August, 1921, having been named as chairman at the very beginning.

With the appointment of Mr. Walrath all three heads are Democratic politicians, Arthur Levy, the secretary, being from New York, while Mrs. Elizabeth V. Colbert is Democratic vice-chairman of Albany county.

Warners Break Ground

Warner Brothers broke ground last week for their Hollywood Theatre, which is to be one of the finest in California. Motley T. Flint, vice-president of the Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles, turned the first shovelful of earth, and ground also was broken by Harry M. Warner, Jack L. Warner, Bennie Zeidman and all the Warner Brothers' stars and directors on the West Coast at the time. The new theatre is to be in the heart of Hollywood, at Hollywood boulevard and Wilcox avenue, and will cost $2,000,000.

Big House For Great States

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Aurora, Ill., January 19.

The Great States Theatre Circuit has bought ground for a 2,400-seat theatre at Aurora, Ill., that will cost in excess of $1,000,000 to complete. Work will start in the spring. There are three other houses in Aurora, the Fox Rialto and Strand, under the Great States management.

Negotiations are under way for a new theatre for Waukegan, Ill., and recently the Lincoln Theatre at Sterling, Ill., was taken over from the Miller and Spencer circuit. M. O. Field has been appointed manager of the Lincoln, Archie Spencer of the Miller and Spencer circuit has joined Great States special field representative.

Nothing new has been developed in the Quincy, Ill., theatre situation, as that territory is still under the old management at the present time.

The circuit is making elaborate plans for the opening next month of the new Rialto Square at Joliet, Ill. The house seats 2,400 and will be under the personal direction of Maurice M. Rubens.

New Los Angeles House

Among the announcements of new theatres to be built in Los Angeles is the La Brea to be erected by the West Coast Theatres, Inc., on the northeast corner of Wilshire boulevard and Sycamore avenue. It will cost over $400,000, including the theatre office and store buildings, with twelve luxuriously furnished bachelor apartments. Including the cost of the lot the investment will approximate $850,000. This will be the thirteenth new theatre that West Coast Theatres, Inc., has under construction.

Supreme Court Denies Review of Conn. Tax

Court of Appeals Is Upehld by Three Judges

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

New Haven, January 19.

The Supreme Court of the United States has refused to review the Connecticut law imposing a tax upon motion picture films, a certain few excepted, it is disclosed in a notice received by the clerk of the United States district court at New Haven, Conn., in which the petition of the American Feature Film Company of Boston for an appeal from the decision of the United States Court of Appeals of the second district is denied. The court of appeals had upheld the decision of a constitutional court that Connecticut's film taxing law was constitutional.

In the original action the Fox Film Corporation of New York was a party to the American Feature Film Company in testing the Connecticut law upon the ground that the law was one of police power rather than a revenue measure. Rather than have the issue decided in a United States district court, it went by agreemnt to a constitutional court consisting of Judges H. W. Rogers, Thomas D. Thacher and Henry W. Goddard. They decided that the law was constitutional, saying "whether the act was passed in exercise in police power or the taxing power, it was valid."

When the appeal was taken Fox withdrew and the American carried its fight to the highest court after an adverse decision by the court of appeals.

Connecticut's tax commissioner, W. H. Blodgett, was in conflict for several months with the film exchanges, which had offices in the state and which refused to pay taxes. However the taxes were eventually paid when harmony between the exchanges and the state government was re-established by Governor Trumbull's promise to aid in having the next general assembly take up the matter of repeal of the law.

Sympho Cinema Heads Charged With Fraud

A federal indictment charging officials of the Sympho Cinema, Inc., with conspiracy to use the mails to defraud was recently voted by the grand jury at San Antonio, Tex. Carl O. Pinckard, district manager for the company, was arrested at his home in St. Louis on January 14.

Post office inspectors charge that the company, which was incorporated in Texas with $5,000,000 capital, made statements concerning assets and its studio property which were not true. These are the basis of the indictment.

Pinckard was released in $5,000 bond.

Best Acting Is Found in Films, Says Will Hays

Development Due to Personnel, He Finds

"The most significant feature of the year is the rapid development of man and woman power in the motion picture industry," said Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., in a statement issued in Los Angeles upon his arrival.

"Our business is built largely upon personnel. Take away our directors, our actors, our writers, and we have nothing left but a highly organized production, distribution and exhibition machine with nothing to keep it running.

"Nearly any unprejudiced student of the drama will say that the best acting in the theatre today is found in motion pictures. The camera is pitiless. The actor cannot imitate—he must be. The greatest actors are appearing in motion pictures. Not only the stars, but the player who has the smallest bit—they are actors in the fullest sense of the word. They cast their spell by their actions—not by words nor by a beautiful voice.

"In the late months have come forward so many fine directors, skilled writers and talented actors that the motion picture is producing at least once a week a story that compares favorably with the best in art, in the drama and in literature.

"It is the development of men and women with the ability to tell a story well on the screen that has been the year's most important progress—this, and the growing appreciation and support of the public for the truly good."

Acquire Three More

United Theatres of America, Inc., has acquired Thornton's Opera House, Riverpoint, R. I., and the Majestic Theatre, Arctic, and Palace Theatre, Arctic. The general management has been placed in charge of Owen B. Thornton.

Films at Fault Again

The new city marshal at Brockton, Mass., has issued orders to policemen to keep out of the moving picture theatres when they are supposed to be on duty.

Proposes Tax

Governor Baker and state officers of Missouri in conference at Jefferson City on January 18 agreed to add a 10 per cent. tax on amusements. They will propose a constitutional amendment to be voted on in November to raise funds for the state school. The governor has invited educators to meet him on January 28 to discuss the measure.

Small Theatres Face Extinction, Says Richey After Michigan Tour

Exhibitors Honest, Worthwhile, and Oddly Optimistic— Houses Clean, Neat

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Detroit, January 19.

"If the small town theatre is, as so often said, 'the backbone of the motion picture industry,' we had better look to our backbone. It is not in such good shape."

This is the summary of conditions as found by H. M. Richey, business manager of the M. P. T. O. of Michigan, during a trip throughout the state. He says that small town exhibitors face extinction.

"Never before did I realize," he said, "what the small town theatre owners were up against until I visited about 175 of them during the trip I made through the 'sticks of Michigan,' visiting each one at his own little theatre and seeing with my own eyes the situation.

"Good roads, radio, supers that fail to 'supe,' high cost of deliveries and high pressured but low-conscienced salesmen are all combining to eventually eliminate the exhibitor in the towns of 3,000 and under. Frankly, I do not know what they are staying in business for now.

"Before making the trip I had heard from over-wise managers the statement that the average small town exhibitor did not deserve to make money because of the unsanitary and unattractive houses they were asking the theatre-going public of their community to come into.

"I did not find that to be the case. True, I found some theatres were dumps. But for every theatre that was not kept clean and as attractive as the size of the community would permit, I found ten that were all that a town that size could expect, predicated on the gross business possible.

"Generally, business conditions in Michigan are good but that does not apply to the small towns. There has been a considerable change in their outlook for the future since the building of the many good roads that Michigan now has.

"Smaller town theatres that at one time were considered excellent propositions for their size have been hard hit because of the fact, that with a good road and a big city 10 to 20 miles away, it is merely the matter of a 20 or 30 minute drive into them to secure a class of entertainment not possible where the clientele is limited.

"And so what is happening? The theatre is being run by the local plumber, the butcher, the taxi man or what-not for the simple reason that he cannot make enough money to run the theatre alone. And the mental reaction of many is interesting.

"They know that business is bad. Nearly every one of them wants to sell, but they carry on as they have been carrying on and unintentionally in many cases are redering to the people of their community a service, the value of which they themselves do not appreciate.

"Many of them are resigned to their fate. Not having heard many complaints about film rentals for several months I was under the impression they were satisfied. They are not, they are simply resigned. They have been told so many times that it costs from $3.50 to $5 to deliver a print of film ready for their use that they just go from day to day, hoping that the next will be better.

"Someone said if they got their rental free, they still could not make money. That may be true.

"If the producers of the United States, if every sales manager who sits behind a mahogany desk could have seen what I have during the past two months, could see the important place that motion pictures occupy in that community, see the effort the little fellow is putting forth to give his community the best he can afford, I believe all of them would agree that we cannot afford to have them closed, even if they have to give them the pictures.

"The $50 minimum on big pictures is a thing of the past for many of these smaller communities who, unless there is a change in the situation, cannot longer afford to buy and show the big pictures. The money is not there.

"Radios, of course, have hurt, and hurt badly. It is the old story of the daily exodus to the city. Just as the young people of the communities are leaving the farm and the smaller towns for the city, so the motion picture theatre-going public of these communities, motor clad, are spending a lot of their amusement money where they can get 'three acts and a feature' for a quarter.

"The situation for the smaller theatre owner in the smaller towns is certainly 'not so good.'"

Ohio Merger

Incorporation papers have been granted at Columbus, Ohio, for Circuit. Incorporators: Cinderella Theatre Company, Coshocdrella Theatre Company, Coshocton; Webber Theatre Company, Dover; Ruble Theatre Company and Muskigum Theatre Company, Logan; Majestic Theatre Company, Sidney.

Lawrence M. Rich, Max Fishel, J. C. Luckey and Clark L. London, all of Cleveland, are backing the project. Rich announces the company will operate a number of Ohio theatres other than those originally named.

Fires Destroy Many Theatres In New England

Loss Sustained by Four Estimated at $255,000

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Boston, January 18.

Fires have taken a serious toll among New England theatres since the start of the new year. The Elm Theatre, in the center of Danvers, Mass., was destroyed with a loss estimated at $70,000. The fire, it was reported, started in the boiler room after an explosion. The Elm was the only theatre in Danvers. It recently was sold by the Elm City Amusement Company of Boston to Louis Brown of Danvers.

A fire that destroyed the Majestic Theatre in Fitchburg, Mass., damaged two stores and small factories and caused a loss of $75,000. The blaze, it was said, started in the rear of the stage. The Majestic was operated by E. M. Loew.

Fire, starting in a blind attic in the Palace Theatre building in New Britain, Conn., threatened the entire structure but was confined to the upper part of the block. The loss was estimated at $100,000. The Palace, which was built in 1880, originally was known as Hanna's Opera House and later as Keeney's Theatre.

Music Hall in Atlantic, Mass., the only photoplay theatre in the town, was destroyed by fire which swept the block in which it was located. Thomas Dyer of Brighton owned the property. The total loss is set at $10,000.

Fire broke out in the projection booth of the Central Theatre at Manville, R. I., while an audience of more than 500 persons was viewing the show. No one was hurt.

The Winter Garden in Lawrence, Mass., was considerably damaged by smoke from a fire in the same building.

Schine Selling

Myer Schine, one of the heads of the Schine Theatrical Corporation, operating more than sixty motion picture theatres in New York State, neither denies nor affirms a report to the effect that negotiations are pending with a large corporation for the disposition of the company's entire holdings, which are said to be in the neighborhood of $3,000,000.

Massachusetts Censors Fired

The Lynn, Mass., board of theatre censorship has been abolished by Ralph S. Bauer, new chief executive of the city, and hereafter the managers and the public must do their own censoring. The board consisted of twenty-four persons and a chairman. Each member received passes to every Lynn theatre weekly. The mayor said he could see no reason for keeping the board in office, inasmuch as an inquiry he had conducted showed that the "censors did not censor and, in fact, did nothing except view performances on complimentary tickets.

Mayor Bauer, in his announcement, asked theatregoers to act as their own censors, urging that they call to his attention immediately any departure from propriety observed in motion pictures, vaudeville acts or plays.

Mayor Bauer's action virtually amazed the theatre managers. Bauer, it was believed, had no particular liking for the showmen and this belief persisted at the time he was running for mayor in November. A few years ago Al Newhall, managing director of the Mark-Strand Theatre, had a number of three-sheet boards bearing posters of one of his attractions placed in the center of the city, fastened to poles. He claimed to have obtained a permit to do so. This, however, did not prevent Bauer from personally pulling down each and every one of the billboards. It is related that as soon as Al Newhall heard of Bauer's attack on the boards he got a rig, and as fast as Bauer pulled down a frame Mr. Newhall had it picked up and placed in the rig, following Bauer about until he had torn down all of the boards.

N. Y. May Modify Censorship Law

A bill was introduced on January 20 in the New York State Legislature by Senator J. Griswold Webb which would modify the provisions of the motion picture censorship law, to the extent of exempting news reels from examination.

In his anual message Governor Smith urged the repeal of the censorship statute, and the Democratic state platform for the past several years has declared for repeal.

The Webb measure is regarded in some quarters as an opening wedge for abolition of the Motion Picture Commission, which might receive Republican support.

New Montebello Theatre

The West Coast Junior Theatre Company is going merrily on its way building new theatres. Plans have been completed for the erection of a house to cost $150,000 in Montebello, a suburb of Los Angeles. The structure will be erected on Whittier boulevard and Spruce street in the main business section. A long-term lease with an aggregate rental of $200,000 was signed with Oliver P. Justice, owner of the property. The house will seat 1,000.

sissippi on "Grit" which is a one-season picture, whereas "The Price of the Prarie" covers all four

Whatever the story, the Natural Vision idea itself will be the main attraction. Mature picture fans will be taken back to the days of their screen childhood when they were agog at the mechanical marvel of the movies.

The picture will be released simultaneously in six cities, New York, London, Chicago, Los Angeles, Detroit and one other, probably Boston or Philadelphia. I came to Chicago for the express purpose of seeing the Spoor-Berggren pictures and learning from Mr. Spoor his plan of operations so that the readers of Moving Picture World might be advised of the proportions of this invention. They are gigantic, far reaching, revolutionary.

George K. Spoor, fifty-three years young in energy and spirit, is stepping back with ten league boots into the industry from which he retired in 1918. Bringing with him John Berggren, the Swedish engineer whose work has baffled the greatest physicists, mathematicians, and opticians of the day.

For ten years these two men and a staff limited in number, but unlimited in loyalty have sought the secret of natural, two-ray vision for motion pictures. They worked, as Berggren explained, on the principle that the human being sees with two eyes, —two rays that constantly strain themselves in searching on the motion picture screen for the normal third dimension that is never there.

The story of Spoor and Berggren might be called "The Phantom of the Optic." They made a camera which put the two-ray idea upon negative. Only to lose it when put on positive. They made a printing machine which finally put the phantom on positive. Only to lose it in projection. They made a projection machine which at last showed pictures as the human eyes naturally see them on standard size film, on a modified standard make projector. Then Spoor asked Berggren to project the picture on a giant screen.

A great engineering feat in itself was accomplished when, after two solid years, a moving picture 23 by 42 feet was projected on a 100-foot throw and held without a flicker or a buckle, without distortion from any angle.

Some 45 patents covering the camera, the printing machine, and the projector are pending on this three-in-one invention.

There is only one printing machie and only one camera, a formidably beautiful piece of mechanism, the tripod double-legged, the magazine large to hold the film with its 2 x 1¾ in. frames. But a battery of eight projectors stands on the floor of the machine shop in the studio, ready to rock the industry at a moment's notice, with machinery available for their immediate duplication.

"The picture business as a whole seems to be fighting shy of this invention," Mr. Spoor told me. "They have kept away from it. One or two film papers have backed at the idea but more or less half-heartedly. I am glad to tell you the whole story.

Will Make Entertainment History

"I have no desire to fight the picture business. On the contrary I made up my mind to contribute something big and wonderful to it. Such men as Mordy Gest, Al H. Woods, J. J. Shubert, Arch Selwyn, Hugo Riesenfeld, George Eastman tell me I have something that will go down in entertainment as well as invention history.

"My plans at present are for six road shows as a start-off. Only houses that can accommodate, at the minimum, a screen 38 feet wide will play the picture. Under no circumstances will that screen size be reduced, while it can be enlarged.

"The next step will be to license producers of the Spoor-Berggren pictures and to franchise houses playing them. Here, among other things, is, at the source, an absolute check on Censorship.

"The Natural Vision picture restores to life every story that has ever been finished. It rehas ever been filmed. It reever it touches."

"The first automobile, the first typewriter were crude machines. The first apparatus for the filming, developing, and projection of the new Natural Vision picture is, according to Mr. Spoor, as perfect as it ever will be.

An entire, new system of cinematographics has been evolved in capturing the two-ray picture and re-erecting it on the screen. The system is not the product of a few months' tinkering, but the work of ten years of engineering skill. All the experimental work is in the past. The product stands perfect, ready to go out and make for a new day in motion pictures, a day filled with significance to the individual or organization in proportion to his or its investment in the industry.

"I am willing to go along in any direction" Mr. Spoor said, "that is for the good of the public and the good of the industry."

BIRTHS

Joe Ashby, president of the Denver Film Board of Trade and manager of the local branch of First National, announces the arrival of Paul Duane, a new son. This most recent addition to First National's man power arrived on Sunday, January 10, 1926. Mrs. Ashby and the new son are reported to be doing fine.

An 8-pound son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Van Ronkel at the Hollywood Hospital recently. Van Ronkel, prominent in motion picture circles, is the producer of Andy Gump comedies and is a business associate of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation.

Spyros Skouras, president of Skouras Brothers Enterprises and the St. Louis Amusement Company, is receiving congratulations over the arrival of a beautiful baby girl at his home on January 7.

Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Hamburg are the proud parents of a baby girl. The daddy is a salesman for Celebrated Players, Chicago, while the mother was formerly booker for Fine Arts in St. Louis.

The household of Harry Sedgwick, prominent official of Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, has been blessed with the arrival of a baby daughter.

Powers Buys Selig Studio

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD*)*

Los Angeles, January 18.

The first major proportioned film transaction of the new year in Los Angeles was the purchase by P. A. Powers of the Selig Studio on Mission Road. Details of the transaction were consummated last week and the plant, now undergoing a thorough rejuvenation, will hereafter be known as the Associated Studios, Inc.

The studio, one of the best equipped and most beautifully situated in Los Angeles, was purchased by Powers to house the production activities of the various West Coast units who are producing for Associated Exhibitors.

The property comprises ten acres and in the purchase arrangements were made by Powers for the use of adjoining property and live stock of Luna Park, giving the studio a total of thirty acres.

In addition to the Associated Exhibitor units it is likely that space will be available for leasing companies.

New St. Louis Theatre To Serve Independents

A 3,000-seat first-run picture theatre will be included in the Knights of Pythias Building to be erected at Grand and Delmar boulevard, St. Louis. Plans have been prepared by a leading St. Louis architect and contracts to be signed within a week will provide for the operation of the theatre by a prominent independent exhibitor.

From an inside source it has been learned that the house will cater to the best pictures of independent producers and exhibitors and will not attempt to book Paramount, First National or Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures, which now have adequate first-run outlets in St. Louis.

OBITUARY

Robert Pritchard, 57 years old, formerly eastern sales publicity man for the First National Corp., laboratory branch of First National Pictures, Inc., was burned to death, January 18, in his room in the Hotel Richmond, New York City. It is believed he fell asleep while smoking a cigarette. The fire department was called to extinguish the flames in the room. A physician suggested that Pritchard might have suffered a heart attack before the fire started.

Exhibitors throughout Central and Northern New York mourn the death of Charles McCarthy, which occurred last week at his home in Hoosick Falls. Mr. McCarthy was one of the old-timers in the business, having started in seventeen or more years ago with a small theatre. His theatre in Hoosick Falls, known as the "New Theatre," was leased a year or so ago by Lew Fischer of Fort Edward. Mr. McCarthy's health having begun to fail at that time. For many years Mr. McCarthy was a familiar figure along Film Row in Albany, and was well liked by everyone.

Charley Moe, advertising manager of the Selwyn Theatre, Chicago, died recently. He was 67 years of age. The body was sent to Grand Rapids, Mich., for burial.

Projection—and What It Means

FOR fifteen years Frank H. Richardson in each issue of Moving Picture World has been answering that question—and yet how many theatre managers realize what projection—good projection—really means to a theatre? Even today there are hundreds of houses where the last thought is given the projectionist and his work and there is record of at least one theatre to be devoted to the exhibition of motion pictures in which not the slightest provision was made in the original plans for a projection room or even what the energetic conductor of the projection department contemptuously but deservedly refers to as a "coop."

In fifteen years great progress has been made in projection and projection methods and no little credit must be given for this to Mr. Richardson, who has persistently and vehemently fought for better projection conditions just as, on the other hand, he has thundered at the careless projectionist himself, who has been responsible for damaged films and poor screen results.

Like the Irishman of tradition he hits a head wherever it bobs up, and he has consistently fought for better projection as a means to winning greater consideration for the projectionist himself.

His has been an often thankless task, yet, backed by Moving Picture World, he has persistently and intelligently fought for improvement, knowing that projection is the very basis of picture theatre success; that an incompetent or careless projectionist can set at naught the careful work of director and cast as represented in a picture the cost of which often runs into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Thanks very largely to the work of Richardson, projection has more than kept pace with picture production, but there are still many who do not realize the projectionist's great responsibility.

He is thrown into a constricted space, barely large enough to permit him to move around, and then is asked to produce a perfect picture with a decrepit machine badly in need of new parts.

For this week the projection department has been moved to the front of this paper for the purpose of giving emphasis to the good work done and still to be done in preaching the gospel of real entertainment, and the projectionist as the man who makes or mars the program.

Give pause and think what projection really means to you as a seller of motion picture entertainment, and you will better appreciate the fine work that Richardson has done and will do.

Distinguished Picture People

By

COVARRUBIAS

ADOLPH ZUKOR

President, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

This week Miguel Covarrubias, famous Mexican artist, caricatures Adolph Zukor, whom motion picture men look up to as a dominating genius of the industry. This caricature is second in the series of "Distinguished Picture People" which Moving Picture World is offering each week. Covarrubias seems to attribute to Mr. Zukor an inflexible determination and a unity of purpose. The Paramount head knows very clearly what he wants done, and he is pressing a call button to see that it is attended to. Covarrubias is known in caricature circles as "The Murderer." We think that "Pete" Woodhull, who was sketched last week, and Mr. Zukor have been let off rather easily by this dangerous artist. Covarrubias can wield a wicked pen.

Something That Is Constructive—By Bill Reilly

Henry Gives a Rolls-Royce Lesson on Publicity

HENRY FORD has just given the boys in the back room a nice lesson in the science of publicity. The topic before the automotive classroom was, "Step right up to the New York Motor Show, boys, and get yourselves a lot of publicity."

Mr. Durant was the only boy who showed any flair for the subject. He unfortunately chose a train crash in Florida as the means of crashing into the front pages. His speeches at the Motor Show were made in bandages or, so to speak, under wraps.

While presidents and sales managers of the other automobile concerns were making labored statements in the special automotive sections of the New York daily and Sunday papers, Henry Ford was making the pictorial and rotogravure sections of those same papers with large-sized photographs of himself as the savior of New England.

The photographs fully captioned showed Henry Ford with his team of oxen; Henry Ford indulging in winter sports with Mrs. So-and-so, wife of a Ford distributor; Henry Ford surrounded by his antiques at the fireplace of Wayside Inn, which he has bought and to which he is restoring all of its former glory.

In the same sections you would be apt to find photographs of Mellie Durham fiddling while Hippodrome chorus girls burned adoring incense. And you would be reminded that Mellie was the old New England fiddler discovered by Henry Ford and built up to Keith time by subsequent publicity.

Which all goes to prove that the ways of selling automobiles are many, interesting and devious.

Of course Mr. Ford's motives may be of the highest. And it may be that his discovery of Mellie Durham several months ago and his invitation to Mellie to come and play at his Detroit barn dance, bringing Ma Durham with him, after tonsorial treatment properly applied under cameras in Boston, was just an honest human outburst.

And naturally Mr. Ford might not have known that all this publicity and that attendant to his purchase and reconstruction of Wayside Inn would reach a peak timed with the New York Motor Show.

Be that as it may, the whole performance is a brilliant lesson in publicity to all who sleep, eat and drink that all important word. Certainly it is a lesson to the automotive field with few exceptions. Here is one of the greatest industries in the world and one that has consistently muffed the publicity ball. They had the pleasure of watching Henry Ford steal everything on the diamond but the bat bag.

The publicity performance of Henry Ford across the years and particularly in the past four months is worthy of the admiration of even the picture business. Harry Reichenbach is now writing his exploitation memoirs for Liberty. Unless we are sadly mistaken these articles will bring about a plague of amateurish efforts of emulations from organizations outside of pictures to whom publicity is now a foreign word.

The noble profession of publicity is in for bungling competition. But efforts of the Henry Ford class will always reap their just reward. And if the sophomorish disciples of Reichenbach get in their dirty work, the going will be all the harder, placing a higher premium than ever on real publicity brains.

"I Congratulate You" — Says Will Hays to Carl Laemmle

WHEN Will Hays said: "Let's LAY bricks, not THROW them," he was paving the way for a CONSTRUCTIVE era in the motion picture industry. Woe be to the bird who THROWS bricks ruthlessly, these days! It's nice to STOP and THINK—and then LAY the bricks.

And perhaps Mr. Hays looked far ahead, and dreamed of a day when he would press the button on his desk and summon his stenographer, and say:

"Please take a letter to Mr. Laemmle."

* * * *

"I CONGRATULATE you," Mr. Hays wrote to Mr. Laemmle.

There are other thoughts in the letter. (The letter, in full we believe, will be found elsewhere in this issue.)

But THAT was CONSTRUCTIVE. "I congratulate you." Simple, homely if you please; kindly.

CARL LAEMMLE has ACHIEVED something in this industry. He came into it twenty years ago, come February, and he has fought for independence, and fairness, and confidence, and honesty and the best things that could be had for those who, in the old days, sat in the piano twilight and glimpsed his little offerings on the flickering silver sheet and in these newer days enjoy the luxury of up-to-the-minute pomp and comfort in big picture palaces, replete with perfect projection, thrilling at "The Hunchback" and "The Phantom."

TWENTY YEARS of THINKING, DREAMING, LIVING pictures and the things that go into them, and the men and women who make 'em, and the myriad trials and tribulations that precede and follow releases in seemingly endless procession. There's something CRAZY about it, Carl says, himself, but there's an unalloyed joy about DOING THESE THINGS, and it is quite doubtful if he ever will know WHEN he has HAD ENOUGH.

* * * *

MERELY being a rich man means nothing to Carl Laemmle. Can he "QUIT"? Show him a CAMERA; a roofless old barn; a barefoot lassie "a la Maud Muller," and as sure as you're an inch high Carl will scurry about and in less time than it takes to tell he will summon up a scenario writer, a director, players, raw stock and such things—and while you're wondering HOW HE DID IT he will be over back of that kleigl jotting down in a memorandum book certain little items for a sales talk, and something to pass on to Paul Gulick, and—

Well, that's how the situation sizes up. TWENTY YEARS of it, during all of which Laemmle found time to PAT THE OTHER FELLOW ON THE BACK when the other fellow did something really BIG, really WORTH WHILE, really CONSTRUCTIVE! And now, loyal friends and associates are planning to celebrate the BIG EVENT!

Letters and telegrams are pouring in on Mr. Laemmle. When he steps ashore, in the next few days, LET HIM FIND YOUR LETTER among them. If you're an old showman, you know Laemmle. Exhibitors know Laemmle. THAT'S WHAT WE MEAN—YOU KNOW HIM! A straight-from-the-shoulder talker; a man of his word.

Call your stenographer, and get that letter off. That's CONSTRUCTIVE. LAYING BRICK, as Mr. Hays says. (And help Carl and his friends celebrate!) 1906-1926!—Count 'em!

Great Britain Moves For a Place In the Kleig Sun

GREAT BRITAIN has been quite unable to understand why she hasn't gained her place in the Kleig sun. She has alternately admired and envied American motion pictures, and she has sent her big film men over here to learn, after a few months' study, just how we do it. These students, after their return, haven't been so tremendously successful as bearers of glad, technical tidings, because the making of motion pictures is an involved process and a few months is a short time. Then, too, England can't match our efficient studio apparatus, and she seems to have gone wrong on the story angle. Many times has an English picture suffered because English landscapes crowded out the plot.

Now it looks as though our neighbor across the seas is off on the right foot and should breast the tape in record-breaking time. The reason is twofold: She has an experienced man heading her biggest production enterprise, and that man is J. D. Williams.

Mr. Williams is here in New York with a print of "Nell Gwyn," produced in England by Herbert Wilcox. The picture will be shown Monday night at the Ritz-Carlton and Mr. Williams expects that to arrange American distribution for it will be a simple matter. If the picture measures up to all that Mr. Williams claims for it—and he's a capable judge—Americans will not only find it excellent entertainment but will find Dorothy Gish in a new role.

New role? That's old press agent stuff. Yes, but Mr. Williams sees a chance for Great Britain to invade America by offering pictures that have a variety not found, he believes, in American films, and Miss Gish's work, hailed as something new for her and something very fine, is expected to epitomize that variety on which Mr. Williams pins his hopes.

A year or so ago Lillian Gish told a friend: "Dorothy CAN be a marvellous artist. You watch her when she gets a different role and the right role." So the industry will troop to the Ritz on Monday night with Lillian Gish's remark in mind.

At any rate, whether "Nell Gwyn" scores or not, you can count on something good from "Jaydee" in the near future. Behind him is George T. Eaton, a wealthy, level-headed man now just learning the business and "Jaydee" and Mr. Eaton are building a tremendous studio outside the London fog area that ought to be an oasis in the desert of struggling English studios. That studio will have the technical equipment necessary to the production of fine pictures, and Mr. Williams will choose the personnel and the stories.

"Parisian Modes in Color"

TO MAKE the motion picture A MORE EFFICIENT VEHICLE in the dissemination of information and knowledge is Constructive.

Educational's "Parisian Modes in Colour" come within this class. Fashion displays, in color, are not new, but never have more real, more beautiful results been achieved than in this reel in which by means of the new odachrome Process, the NEWEST CREATIONS of the world famous Parisian couturiers, displayed by Miss Hope Hampton, are REPRODUCED IN NATURAL COLOR, bringing out in a wonderful way tints and shadings and the lustre of the fabrics and ornaments so effectively that the spectator believes he is gazing at the ACTUAL GARMENTS ON LIVING MODELS.

THE DOG IN THE MANGER

By NYBERG

Moving Picture World Staff Artist

Here, gentlemen, you see the industry's Dog in the Manger devouring strips of costly celluloid and Mother New York all upset—quite naturally—over the unwelcome guest's expensive appetite.

But there's a silver lining in every motion picture cloud and a fly in the ointment of every salve-dealing reformer.

Al Smith, New York's broad-minded governor, the dope has it, is going to save the industry considerable wasted silver by hitting the Dog a wallop with his big stick. Al's already buzzed into the reformers' views on censorship, and he coincides with them just about as cordially as a jig saw does with mischievous fingers.

There will be howls of lamentation, but, mark our words, they will be drowned out by a roar of genuine delight from picture fans as well as the simonpures within the industry.

Dolores Costello, leading lady with John Barrymore in "The Sea Beast" (Warner Bros.), has been hailed as "the coming great screen actress." With this—we heartily agree!

Lois Moran, leading lady with Richard Barthelmess in "Just Suppose" (First National), brings to the screen all her stage charm. Lois, we assert, is altogether splendid!

"Somebody Oughta Give 'Em a Medal" —So Here Goes!

Sally O'Neil, newest screen discovery, was chosen by Marshall Neilan for the leading role in "Mike" (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer). Sally is a ripping comedienne—Star of Tomorrow!

Carol Dempster proved her claim to stardom in "That Royle Girl," the newest D. W. Griffith production for Paramount. Carol swept us right off our feet!

Looking Them Over—With Gray Strider

Reviews from the Screen Angle of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

Robert Louis Stevenson

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON SECOND is right here within a stone's throw of New York but so far as our industry is concerned his bones might as well be decaying out in the South Sea Islands with those of the First.

Stephen Avery is the man whose work is so strongly reminiscent of the Great Stevenson. He writes in a way that grabs at your heart and makes you hunger for all of the things you thought you had forgotten.

"Till It All Blows Over" (appearing in this week's COLLIER'S) is one of his best stories. It's the kind of thing that producers are always vainly hunting. It strides along at just the right pace for Norma Shearer whose intellect equals her beauty.

Up here in New York the dirty snow is drifting, radiators are leaking and beggars slink drearily into sodden corners. But just visualize tropical Cristobal—a town like a toy; a sliver of a city between the green of the dunes and the blue of the sea; a city of wanderers; aristocratic women and stately men—remnants of romantic, half-buried tragedies—all wayfarers from home waiting in this Cameo city "Till It All Blows Over."

Cordelia with the straight-drawn hair and skin like the faintest tinge of a yellow rose was driven from her English home by false gossip. Her lover, Hugh, tried to commit suicide at the Front. Society said it was because Cordelia was running around over London with an elderly married man but Cordelia knew that three years of war had broken Hugh's nerve and left him a moral derelict. She ruins herself to save him and goes to Christobal where she lives in her pink cottage waiting for her lover to come to her.

Another wanderer, Rupert Trelevan, is in Cristobal drinking himself to death. He loves Cordelia. When Hugh finally arrives, Rupert discovers that Cordelia's lover is a dope fiend. He drags Hugh out into the country and locks the Englishman and himself also in a tiny hut, miles from everybody, until one or the other dies or proves worthy of a woman of Cordelia's magnificent mettle.

Months pass. These bearded men in rags struggle within the cell-like walls of this deserted cabin. At first brutish, desperate struggles; sleepless nights when one doesn't dare to sleep until the other's crazed senses fall into tortured exhaustion. Fever strikes them both. And then after many months have passed, cured and gay, arm in arm, they go—one to meet tragedy, the other to feed his soul with unearthly happiness.

Stephen Avery has gorged this story with color and action. The sequences are tremendous; the types are unapproachable: the dope fiend, the drunkard, the cackling, tottering, mumbling old barkeeper, the young married couple, soaked with happiness like a pair of puppies, old Colonel Mills-Brackett who says of his famous wife: "Melisande must have her Paris and her little loves, but I am her piece de resistance."

"Till It All Blows Over" would make a stupendous movie, a picture with guts; and that's what we need!

The Chicken Wagon Family

SELDOM in literature do we find sincerity and realism but Barry Benefield's book "The Chicken Wagon Family" (publishers the Century Company) is crammed with it. It's a simple tale simply told but admirable for a movie.

Lois Moran should play the title role. She has that quality of simpliciy, of sweet earnestness that this story needs.

Jean Paul Baptiste Yvonne Fippany was a chicken-wagon man and proud of it. In a covered wagon he drifted all over Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas bartering with the farmers' wives; a fifteen cent pan for a chicken, a two-cent tin cup for a dozen eggs.

Soon Fippany tires of riding on the front seat of his wagon, forever alone. He marries Josephine, a portly young woman with great black eyes and an exquisite voice.

A year later, three ride in the wagon, the baby Adelaide has joined them.

Mother love and Mother ambition dig at Ma Fippany. She wants a home for Addie; a place where Addie can grow up and attend church and school. And so after nine years of diplomatic nagging she forces Mr. Fippany to start for New York. All the way from Texas to New York go this covered wagon, the two dainty Spanish mules, Kit and Luce, Ma, Pa and Addie Fippany and Jim Pickett, a young university graduate.

The romance that springs up between Addie and Jim touches you with its earnest simplicity. It endures for life, through suspicion, through absence, through Jim's marriage to another woman with the face of a hawk and the body of a Venus. When Jim and Addie are finally united, it gives you a feeling of gratefulness and of unutterable satisfaction. You know it is a permanent, enduring relationship—the kind that every one seeks and so few find.

If this simplicity can be caught and screened the "Chicken Wagon Family" will prove to be a far-above-the-average picture.

"Tiger Women"

HAVE you a tiger woman in your home? Have you been buying baubles for the wrong lady all your life? If Elmer Davis' book "Friends of Mr. Sweeney" (Robert McBride and Company,) is made into a picture, many obese, mature husbands throughout the United States will be scratching their heads reflectively and wondering.

"Friends of Mr. Sweeney" has all the ingredients to mix up a good picture: A Princess in exile, burglars, bootleggers, crooked politicians, Cossacks, night clubs, newspaper offices, and so on.

Mr. Brumbaugh is the sixty million dollar rich controller of "The Balance" a New York newspaper. He is the type of man that shouts for prohibition and hogs a quarter of a million dollars' worth of liquor in his own cellar; the kind of person that heads fashionable charity lists and yet makes his wife pull out her basting threads and save them for the next time.

Mr. Holliday is the Managing Editor of the paper. You know the sort. Makes a hundred dollars a week and glad to get it. Lives in a "walk-up" apartment. Has a wife who belongs to the League of Women Voters, moves in cultured circles and wears long-sleeved flannel nightgowns with large bone buttons at the neck.

One night Holliday gets fed up with eating out of Brumbaugh's pudgy hand. With an old college chum he visits a night club, run by Cossack exiles. There he sees his exalted boss in the company of Princess Olga.

The action that follows is as sharp and as continuous as the fire of a machine gun. The metamorphosis of Holliday from this point is sudden and complete. He finds Brumbaugh and the Princess in what might seem a compromising position; rescues them from a band of burglars; declares his editorial independence, becomes Editor-in-Chief of the paper and then goes to his apartment —only to find that despite his wife's beflannelled exterior, he has a TIGER WOMAN IN HIS HOME.

The story is funny, clean, human and true to life. It's just the kind of attraction to please everybody, all sorts and ages. It would prove a box office success.

Blanche Mehaffey With Universal

Blanche Mehaffey, the former Follies' girl, and more recently the Mamie Shannon of Universal's dramatic success, "His People," has been signed to a long time Universal contract. Arlington Requests Data On Measuring Intermittent Speed

An Effective Method Which Is Practical For Application by Projectionists Is Fully Described in the Following Article

J. C. ARLINGTON, St. Louis, Missouri, wants to know how to measure the speed of an intermittent movement. He says: "Dear Mr. Richardson: I am a small-town projectionist, or was rather, as I am in St. Louis just now, helping Dad, who is in ill health. Had an argument with one of the men here yesterday. He says the projectionist could not measure the speed of the intermittent, and that, anyhow, that is the business of the manufacturer and none of the projectionist's affair.

"I know you have said this can be done and I think you have told us how to do it but I have neither my Bluebook or back number departments here, so will you be kind enough to tell us again? I am having my Moving Picture Worlds forwarded to me here, as I would not miss a copy for worlds—clever, what?"

Sure it's clever. How in the world did you manage to think of it? As to measuring the intermittent, the St. Louis brother must be merely a machine operator. He certainly is not a projectionist. His view that intermittent speed is none of the business of the projectionist is equivalent to saying that it is none of the projectionist's business whether the work is being done efficiently or not. A man of his type must be a wonderful credit to the St. Louis union.

The real motion picture projectionist will want to know the exact ratio of speed employed by the various makes of projectors, that being an important consideration when his opinion is asked by friend Boss, who proposes purchasing two or three new projectors. Measuring intermittent speed, or ratio of speed, rather, is quite simple, once the process is understood, but it requires very exact, accurate work.

One requirement is that some method, available to the projectionist, be found by means of which it is possible to tell precisely when the intermittent sprocket starts to move, and the precise point at which it comes to rest. Guess work will not answer. Neither the eye or the touch is sufficiently accurate.

One very effective method which is universally available for ascertaining the exact point at which the movement of the intermittent sprocket starts is to secure a light, flat spring such, for instance, as an ordinary corset steel. Having secured such a spring, which may be six, eight or even ten inches long—though six inches is perhaps best suited to the purpose—place one end of it against one of the intermittent sprocket teeth and the other end against something solid, and at such distance from the sprocket tooth that the spring will be slightly bowed, hence under tension, while the sprocket is still "on the lock."

Under this condition it will readily be understood that the instant the sprocket starts to move, the spring will bow up more, since the sprocket tooth will push against its end, and such a movement will be instantly discernible, either to the eye or to the touch.

Having the spring in place, turn the flywheel slowly, in the direction it normally runs, of course, until the spring moves. Then rock the wheel backward and forward, one finger on the spring, until you find the precise point at which the sprocket starts to move. This method is simple of application and gives very accurate results.

It may be used, in reverse, for finding the exact point at which the intermittent sprocket comes to rest. To do this, turn the flywheel slowly until the sprocket has almost completed its travel. Place the spring against a sprocket tooth and the stop, as before described. The sprocket tooth is advancing toward the spring, hence will bow it slightly before coming to rest. The point where the spring ceases to move is of course the point where the sprocket ceases to move. By this method the sprocket is held in retard in both cases, which increases the accuracy of the entire performance.

Having thus provided accuracy in the matter of sprocket movement, the rest is rather simple. The projector flywheel makes exactly one complete revolution to each picture cycle. From the exact point where the film starts to move to the exact point where it starts to move again means exactly one revolution of the flywheel. By reason of this fact it is possible to measure intermittent speed in degrees, because every circle has 360 degrees and the face of the flywheel is a circle. The face of the flywheel turns a certain distance, while the intermittent sprocket is in movement, hence during that time it turns a certain number of degrees, and that number of degrees represents the movement of the intermittent sprocket. Conversely, the face of the flywheel moves through a certain number of degrees during the time the intermittent sprocket is at rest, the lens open and the picture being projected to the screen (less the time it is covered by the interrupter blade or blades), hence we may say that the movement is, for instance, a sixty-degree movement—the intermittent sprocket being in motion and the lens closed during the time required to rotate the rim of the flywheel through sixty degrees. This means that the film moves during sixty degrees, and is at rest during 360 — 60 = 300 degrees. In other words, the film is stationary five times as long as it is in movement, and therefore the lens is presumably open five times as long as it closed, though it of course is not, because of the fact that the shutter has more than one blade.

Having provided the spring before described, make a prick-punch or a scratch

MARK ON FRAME OR SOME STATIONARY OBJECT
SPRING

mark on any convenient fixed object—the frame of the mechanism if practicable—which is quite close to the face of the flywheel. If there is nothing very close, then fix one end of a stiff wire under some convenient screw temporarily and, having filed the other end to a point, bend the wire so that the point will be close to the face of the flywheel. This will be A in the illustration.

Next, as before described, set the wheel at the exact point where the intermittent sprocket starts to move, and make mark B on the rim of the flywheel exactly opposite mark A. Next, set the flywheel at the exact point where the intermittent sprocket stops and make mark C on the rim of the flywheel, also exactly opposite mark A. Be very careful to only make these marks when the flywheel is in the position which is at the point where the sprocket is EXACTLY ready to start and EXACTLY ready to stop. Inaccuracy here will spoil it all.

A moment of consideration will show you that you now have the exact record of your intermittent ratio of movement recorded on the rim of the flywheel, but it is of slight use there. It must be accurately measured, which would be a rather difficult thing to do while it is on the wheel, unless one happens to have a protractor of the right curvature. We must therefore remove it from the wheel, as follows: cut a strip of tough white paper—writing paper will be best—half an inch or a bit less in width, and long enough to go around the face of the flywheel, with an inch or so to lap.

Do Not Cover Scratch Marks Made

Lay this paper around the face of the flywheel in such a manner that the edge of the paper will come into contact with but not cover the scratch marks you have made. I say "not cover" them because the marks may be made either on the side or the face of the wheel, and if on the face the paper band might be so placed as to cover them.

Having got the paper band in place, put a drop of paste on the end which over-laps, press it down and let it dry.

You now have the face of the wheel incased in a paper band. Next make marks on the paper PRECISELY opposite marks B and C and, having done so, draw a sharp knife blade squarely across the paper EXACTLY at one of the marks you have made (either one) severing the paper and removing it from the wheel.

At the bottom of the drawing you will see the paper as it will appear after removal. It is a strip of paper on which is one mark, which will be mark B or C, according to which one you cut through. The short end represents the time or period in the picture cycle during which the intermittent sprocket, and therefore the film, is in movement. The long end represents the time or period of the picture cycle during which the intermittent sprocket, hence the film, is at rest. The ratio one bears to the other is the "ratio of movement" of the intermittent.

Measure Total Length of Paper in Inches

You may now transpose these measures into ratios in either one of two or three ways. First, measure the exact total length of the paper in inches, and multiply it by one thousand (1,000) to reduce the measurement to thousandths of an inch. Divide this by 360 and you have the exact width of one degree at the face of your flywheel, in thousandths of an inch.

Next, measure the exact length from the mark to eihter end of the paper and multiply each of the results by one thousand (1,000), to reduce the measurements to thousandths of an inch.

You now have all the measurements in thousandths of an inch and may ascertain exactly what either the period of movement or the period of rest represents in degrees by dividing each of them by the width of one degree.

CAUTION: In doing this you cannot use a yard stick or a two foot square. You must make all measurements with GREAT ACCURACY.

To illustrate:

Suppose our wheel measures 10.99 inches in circumference. 10.99 x 1,000 = 10,990, and 10,990 ÷ 360 (degrees in any circle) equals 30.52777777 plus, which is where the value of the reducing to thousandths of an inch comes in, for we find that the width of one degree is 30.52777777 plus thousandths of an inch, and by discarding all but the 30.5 we simplify matters, and have thrown out only an infinitesimal fraction of one one-thousandth of an inch. True, even that will affect the result, but only very slightly. You may use 30.52 if you think best, or even as many of the sevens as you care to.

We now have the width of one degree in thousandths of an inch and the measurement of rest and movement of the sprocket in thousandths of an inch, so it is of course only necessary to divide either measurement by the width of one degree to find out exactly how many degrees it represents, or you may divide one of them and subtract the result from 360 to find the other.

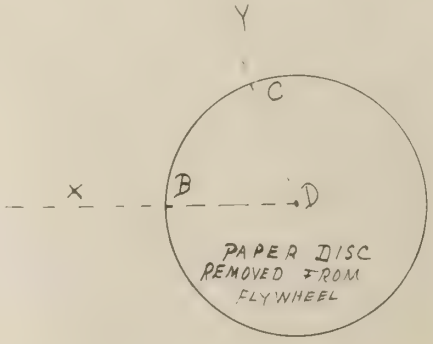
Another Method of Measuring

Another less accurate method is to measure the distance of the mark from either end of the paper and see how many times the lesser is contained into the greater, which tells you there is so many times more rest period than there is movement. Still another is to caliper the distance from the mark to the end of the paper it is nearest to, and then, using the caliper, see how many times greater the long end is. But, after all, the degree method is the only real one.

I trust this will serve your purpose, friend Arlington.

Note: Gray has called my attention to the fact that it would be difficult to place a paper band on a Simplex flywheel because of its closeness to the casing. That is true so here is another plan: Instead of the paper band, before you start to put the marks on the wheel, cut a circle of stiff writing paper the diameter of the flywheel. Cut a hole in its center large enough to accommodate the hub and shaft, and then, with a bit of shellac or paste, attach it to the rim of the wheel and instead of making marks B and C directly upon the wheel, make them on the paper.

When you have finished, remove the paper from the wheel. It will look like the accompanying cut. If you have a protractor you may now measure the distance between marks B and C directly, in degrees. If you have no protractor you can get one for a small sum at any dealer in draftsmen's supplies, or if there be no such dealer in your town, then you probably can get one at your stationery store, or they can order one for you. Get a small one.



On the paper disc, D is the center, corresponding to the center of the flywheel shaft. B and C are the marks indicating movement of intermittent sprocket. Broken lines Y X may be added if the protractor you have, or get, has, as it probably will have, not the same curvature as the wheel. To use the protractor (which is merely a brass half circle with a center mark and the degrees marked on its outer, curved edge), place the center mark (found in center of cross bar near lower edge thereof) exactly over center mark D. You will have to lay the paper disc on another sheet of paper, attaching it thereto by means of a bit of paste, and re-locate center mark D, since you have cut away the center in putting the disc on the wheel. Placing the protractor center mark EXACTLY over center mark D, you have but to note the number of degrees between marks B and C, or lines X and Y (exactly the same thing) to know the number of degrees through which the intermittent sprocket (and film) are in movement, and by subtracting that number from 360 you will also have the number of degrees through which the sprocket (and film) are at rest. Simple, what?

Of course if you have no protractor and don't care to get one, then it will be difficult to accurately measure curved line B C, and you had better try to work the paper band stunt.

Picture Weaves

W. P. JACKSON, Astoria, Long Island, wants to know what would cause a weaving effect in the picture.

The mere statement that the picture "weaves," is entirely insufficient to enable the giving of an intelligent answer to the particular case. However, if the "weave" merely is an up and down movement, which occurs regularly four times to each revolution of the projector mechanism crankshaft, then either the intermittent sprocket shaft is bent slightly, or the sprocket itself is out of true, due probably to not fitting the shaft snugly.

If the movement be both up and down and sidewise, and four times to each revolution of the crankshaft, then the intermittent sprocket is out of true, and one end, or possibly both, "wobbles" slightly. This may be because it did not fit the shaft in the first place, which is quite possible, and quite often the case where "economical" (?????) managers purchase parts made by other than the projector manufacturer, because they are a bit "cheaper" in first cost—and usually a d———d sight more expensive in the long run. It may also be because it was driven on the shaft, and in the process put under such stress that it was warped out of shape.

If friend Jackson will describe the effect very carefully, including information as to whether or not it occurs with both projectors, or only with one, then I possibly will be able to tell him exactly what is wrong.

Better Projection Increases Receipts

Bluebook School Answers 424 to 428

Note: The answer to Question 442 (The first concerning the combined effect of light diffusion and viewing distance) is carried over to next week. The relatively few men who have dared tackle this question, both in the East and in the West, is a bit astonishing. Thus far Brooklyn has provided what seems to be, aside from the reply of Mr. Griffith himself, the best answer. Not a man in Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, or any other of the great eastern cities dared make a try at it. To date only one or two men on the entire West Coast dared tackle it, and in between those who had the nerve to go to it were few and far between. Not one from the great city of Chicago. Not one from St. Louis, Minneapolis, or any other of the great mid-west cities.

Well, perhaps I don't blame them so much. The question is what our friend from Quebec would call "Not so easy." But just the same, the question deals with a matter concerning which every real motion picture projectionist ought to be thoroughly posted. It is knowledge of such things as this, DIRECTLY CONNECTED WITH MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION, which mark the line of division between the motion picture projectionist and the moving picture machine operator, or attendant, and the individual must himself choose in which class he prefers to be.

Question No. 424—Describe correct method of insulating wire splices after the splice has been made and soldered.

C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa, W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island, F. H. Moore, Taunton, Mass., D. L. Devlin, New York City, New York, G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia, G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois, T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama, Allan Gengenbeck, New Orleans, Louisana and Charles Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico, all came across with satisfactory replies to this one.

Budge, has, I think, the best of it, insofar as has to do with a complete answer. He says:

Having removed the insulation from both wires for a suitable distance, and scraped or sandpapered them until the copper is perfectly clean and "raw," we join them mechanically into a firm, tight bond by twisting them tightly together.

Then, having applied solder flux SPARINGLY, and run solder into the splice until it is well filled—being careful not to apply too much heat, which might injure the metal—we wrap the exposed joint with one thickness of rubber tape, if the wire be a small one, or two or more if a large one, and over the rubber wrap the regular adhesive tape tightly, the number of layers depending upon the size of the wire. Too much on a small wire makes a bunglesome looking job, and is unnecesary.

Excellent, except that while this is correct for ordinary voltages, such as are used in motion picture projection work, it might be remarked that the necessary thickness of insulation also depends upon voltage, and when high voltage is handled the insulation must be much thicker. However, what friend Budge has said covers all ordinary cases of projection room wiring. The Underwriter's rules cover the thing by ordering that the insulation applied be equal to the thickness of the regular insulation of the wire.

Question No. 425.—Is it possible for soldering compounds to do serious injury to wires?

Every one above named replied correctly. Bennewitz says:

Yes it is possible for some soldering compounds to do serious injury, because they contain acids which eat and corrode copper, and this corrosion, aside from its weakening effect, offers high resistance. It may even eventually eat away the copper entirely, thus severing the electrical connection.

Doe says:

Yes, because the acid contained in soldering compounds will attack copper, possibly, if used in excess, eating it away and corroding it. Where small wires are concerned such compounds may, if too much be used, finally weaken the splice until its carrying capacity is lowered, resistance heat set up and the wire at last entirely burned in two. All soldering compounds should be used sparingly. If the copper is thoroughly cleaned a small amount of compound is just as effective as a soldering flux as a greater amount, and when used sparingly there is little chance of serious damage to the wire.

Quite correct, Brother Doe. Both answers are right, so you may both bring teacher a red apple next week.

Question No. 426.—What is a "wire connector," and what would you do before attempting to use one for a stranded wire?

Bennewitz replies to this as follows:

A wire connector is a mechanical means for connecting wires. There are several types of these devices, some of which meet the approval of the electrical inspectors, and some of which do not. As a matter of fact the type shown in the Bluebook, page 122, is not approved. With this type when the screws are set up tight they are likely to cut into the wires, and thus weaken it. The contact area is not very great, even when the screws are set in tight, hence local heating may result.

The approved "Dossert" wire connector is of the compression type. It is made both for solid and for stranded wire. While we may not all be familiar with this particular make of connector, we doubtless have all used conectors which employ the compression principle, which means that the tighter the nut is set up the tighter the wire is gripped; also the contact is uniform and ample.

I think when you asked this question you had in mind the type of connector illustrated on page 122 of the Bluebook. When such a connector is used, which should be only in case of emergency, and the wire is stranded, then it is necessary to solder the strands together, so that the effect will be that of a solid wire, insofar as concerns the connector.

I am obliged to you, Brother Bennewitz, for having called my atention to this matter. I was under the impression that the type illustrated was alright and approved, but the objections to it are very obvious, now that you have diverted attention to them.

Question No. 427.—Tell us what you believe best where the wires are to be connected to a rheostat terminal, or other terminal subjected to high temperature.

Bennewitz says:

Use a Dossert or other connector which employs the compression principle.

Hanover answers thus:

An approved compression terminal lug must be used, and for best results, it must be one which makes a very firm contact with the wire, with ample contact area. It is never advisable to clamp a solid wire under such a terminal binding post without a terminal lug, because the condition is such that the best possible contact is essential, and a round wire clamped upon a flat surface below, by a binding post nut which has a flat underneath surface, does not, due to the fact that the wire is round, provide more than a comparatively very limited actual contact.

The kind of copper lugs which are compressed upon the wire by plyers are very inefficient under any conditions, and are especially so for use at hot connections. It is impossible to secure either uniform tightness of the lug upon the wire, or to compress it with sufficient snugness. There are a number of terminal lugs employing the compression principle in excellent form. One of them should by all means be used for such work.

Question No. 428.—Is there any serious objection to a wire splice at any point in a wire?

Brother Moore says:

Splices are disapproved, and must not be made either in concealed work, in conduit, in armoured cable, or in either wooden or metal moulding, except that of course they may be made at junction boxes.

Benewitz says:

In open wiring there is no serious objection to a splice at any desired point, assuming, of course, that it be well and properly made. In conduit wiring no splice may be made except at an opening. Wires must not, under any conditions, be spliced and then pulled into a condult.

However, under any condition of wiring it is the best policy to avoid splicing as much as possible, since an improperly made splice will sooner or later cause trouble.

That last, I think, needs elaboration. It is not always possible to know that the splice which we have made with care and ordinary attention to details, is perfect. A well made splice is as strong as the original wire, or even stronger, but there is always the possibility that a bit of flux has remained, and that corrosion will set up, or that without knowing it we did something which has weakened the wire, or that the insulation we have put on carefully and well, will in time loosen and drop away.

Yes, it is best to avoid wire splices where possible. The temptation to use up old scraps of wire is sometimes great, but after all it is best to resist it, and do the job right, at least if it is intended for a permanent one.

Peerless Lamp High Grade Equipment

THE Peerless Reflector Arc Lamp is distinctly high grade equipment. Read the description and look-see at the photographs, and be convinced of that fact. The J. E. McAuley Manufacturing Company, out in the great City of Chicago, where the breezes from Lake Michigan fan the soft coal smoke, the heated brow of the inventor, J. E. McAuley, seems to have started something when he gave to the motion picture industry the Peerless Reflector Arc Lamp.

I make that statement because McAuley was, so far as I know, the first to use a large diameter parabolic reflector, sending forward a parallel beam of light to a single-lens condensed of equal diameter, which conveyed the beam to a "spot" at the projector aperture.

Considerable Argument as to Merits of Condenser

There is still much argument as to the relative merits of the condenser and the non-condenser type of lamp. It is not, however, the purpose of this article to draw comparisons, but to say to you and show to you that the Peerless itself is well designed and well built throughout. That it is delivering the goods is amply proven by the fact that such a large number of them have been installed in such a comparatively short space of time.

Figure 1 shows you the equipment "as is," the view being of the non-operating side, of course. You will note its handsome appearance and sturdy build. You will also note wing A, at the center of the back end of the double-ended crank at the rear of the lamphouse. This crank is on the end of the five-eighths-inch diameter carbon feed screw. The loosening of the wing nut serves to disengage the arc controller, thus permitting the carbons to be fed by hand. Tightening the wing nut locks the carbon feed screw and arc controller together.

Ample Flue Vent At The Top

Notice, also, the ample vent flue at the top. At the lower right hand corner of the other side is a small lever. Pulling this outward has the effect of swinging the condenser lens out of the way when it is desired to project stereopticon slides. There is a door on each side of the lamphouse. The observation window (one on both sides) is, as you see, of ample dimensions.

Note the arc controller, with its gear housing, motor and relay box; also the stereopticon condenser, its carrier and the slide carrier, both moved out of the way for motion picture projection. To pull it back into place is but the work of an instant.

In figure 2 we have a view of the lamp itself. Note the sturdy construction, the simplicity of the carbon clamping arrangements and, in fact, the lamp as a whole. The small, stubby lever sticking up from the front carrying lug is for the purpose of raising or lowering the front of the lamp, as a whole, in order to center the spot vertically. There also is an arrangement by means of which the spot may be centered sidewise. Once these adjustments are made after installation, there should never be occasion to change them.

Figure 3 shows us the condenser (eight inches in diameter) partly swung out of the way for stereopticon projection. This arrangement works very well.

This department welcomes well constructed, well designed equipment, regardless of who makes it or where it comes from. The Peerless lamp is, I repeat, both well designed and well made.

There has been some talk that the apparatus of this type does not give as good definition as does the old type arc and condensor system, which may or may not be true, though the burden of evidence is that to some extent it is true.

However, this I will say: "This Editor has sat in the Rivoli Theatre, Broadway, New York City, and in other theatres where

Give Projection the Attention It Deserves

Peerless lamps were used, sometimes with knowledge of the fact that they were used, and sometimes without such knowledge, and has invariably found the picture to be satisfactory, and I think you will admit that I am a wee bit critical—or at least a bit inclined to be.

The Peerless projects a picture which, within its range of possibility in screen illumination—and that is no small range either—is what I would call quite entirely satisfactory. I can recommend the equipment to your favorable consideration.

Laughs and Giggles

THOSE who pass upon the fitness of applicants for motion picture projectionist license, frequently get a good laugh out of it when Mr. Went-To-School-Two-Whole-Weeks, who wants, and sometimes comes pretty nearly demanding the privilege of manhandling projection machinery, photoplays, the actors therein and audiences, appears for examination.

Here are a few questions and answers which have really been pulled off at various times and places:

Examiner: "What," pointing to the guide rollers at top of gate, "is the purpose of that?"

Answer: "Why, if the film is too wide that trims it down to fit."

Question: "What is the purpose of the condenser?"

Answer: "It condenses the picture and makes it go to the screen."

Question: "What is the cause of the picture sometimes jumping up and down on the screen?"

Answer: "Because the operator is careless and bumps against the machine."

Question: "What is the purpose of a rheostat?"

Answer: "It takes the heat out of the electricity so it won't burn the carbons ! !"

Question: "Why is the lamphouse ventilated?"

Answer: "I don't know sir. I don't think it ought to be because if it was hotter inside it stands to reason that the light would get hotter and make more light"—which same is referred to you for very careful consideration. Certainly is a real valuable thought, what?

What's that? Oh yes, the questions and answers are all bonafide, or at least the examiners have said they were.

Bluebook School

Note: This "School" was started about a year and a half ago, usually five questions appearing each week. Readers were invited to submit answers, the best of which are published about a month after the questions appear.

There is more than ample evidence that the "School" has done an immense amount of good by inducing projectionists and moving machine operators to really study some of the problems connected with their business. Though relatively few actually send in answers continuously, everything points to close following of the questions and answers by a very large percentage of the men.

The questions asked are, for the most part, taken from the list of questions appearing on pages 910 to 938 inclusive, and serve the very useful purpose of inducing the thousands of owners of Bluebooks to study them and assimilate much of the very great amount of projection information the books contain. The questions will run for probably a year and a half longer.

Question No. 446—What rules apply to switchboard installation, insofar as has to do with projection room installation?

Question No. 447—From whom may authoritative information be had as to Underwriter's rules concerning switchboards?

Question No. 448—What factor or factors should govern your selection of a projection room switchboard location?

Question No. 449—What are your ideas concerning the projectionist handling the auditorium lighting, with suitable euipment installed in the projection room, of course?

Note: This last is a question demanding careful, intelligent consideration and discussion. Would like to have the opinion of Gray and of Supervisor of Projection Jack Griffith on this, as well as of the regular department and school fans. Charles Dentlebeck is cordially invited to give us his views, and President Rabell, of the Independent Movie Supply Company, and Joe Hornstein, general manager, Howard Cine Equipment Company, both of which companies do a great deal of installation work, might give us the benefit of their observations in this connection, if they will.

A Puzzle

PUZZLES are always of more or less interest. Here is one for you Wise Guys. Don't solve it too quickly, however.

Suppose you have 14 dry cells, each cell producing exactly 1.5 volts. You must use all the batteries, and so connect them that the result E. M. F. will be nine volts. How would you do it? It is very simple—if you consider fundamental principles. Draw your connections.

American Projectionist Approves

THE following is from the editorial page of the American Projectionist. It is self explanatory and speaks for itself. I will just remark that, while I appreciate brother Edwards fairness in not "stealing my thunder," still I have not the slightest objection to him or any one else starting a projectionist's school along the lines of the Bluebook School, always provided they do it honestly and in good faith, for the good of the profession of motion picture projection. I appreciate the good opinion the American Projectionist has of our efforts in the "school." The editorial reads:

A correspondent asked us why we don't start something along the lines of the Blue Book School conducted by our old Friend Richardson in the Moving Picture World. Well, in the first place it would not be ethical to steal another man's ideas. In the second place we have found out that Projectionists are darn poor correspondents. Richardson has discovered that too, and thirdly the time necessary to do a job of this kind properly is beyond us. The Scoffers will no doubt say we don't know enough. Well, that makes it unanimous.

The value of the Blue Book School to men who wish to better themselves is without question and personally we would like to see every one of our readers tackling the problems. It will be to their benefit to enter the discussions. At the expense of a few stamps and a little time figuring out the correct answers they will be able to keep themselves up to the minute in the problems of the Craft.

Go to it boys, its free, all you need spend is energy.

How Much to Know

RECENTLY, in commenting on a meeting with another progressive projectionist, a correspondent of this department said they had both tried to find how to measure a parabola but, without success.

This brought to my mind the question whether it is advisable for a projectionist to seek to learn such things as this. I have my doubts, for this reason; the ability to measure a parabola, if I understand what was meant by "measuring," does not seem to me to be of any large importance to the projectionist, though of course parabolas and lenses are inseparable.

"But," you say, "is it not good to acquire any sort of knowledge which in any way is connected with the things which have to do with motion picture projection?"

To which I answer with an emphatic "yes," BUT with the notation (and the same is the base of my questioning) that as long as there are things of greater practical importance still to learn, it is better to apply one's energies to hunting them down than in seeking knowledge which probably could seldom or never be of actual use in practice.

I say he has pride in his profession. Here is why I make that statement. I hold that any man who has enterprise enough to have stationery printed with that legend, is a progressive, and a progressive ALWAYS has pride in, and at least some love for his profession.

Now, Brother Schneider, that you have busted the ice and silence, keep it busted. Stick to the job, and send in answers every week. Quite a lot of work, yes, but in days to come you'll be glad you did it.

Signs of Awakening

TIMES almost without number this department has directed attention to the utter foolishness of perfecting, at huge cost, a really splendid production, and then deliberately subtracting from its entertainment value by wrong projection procedure.

Time after time, producers have themselves, or through their direct agents, given their super-productions a Broadway run, with the projection room so located that the angle of projection is far, far in excess of that approved by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and far in excess of the maximum angle dictated by ordinary common sense.

They apparently have taken the position that the few seats which might be lost through a proper location of the projection room, and the possible marring of the beauty of symmetry of the auditorium by installing a projection room where it should be, are of more importance than the injury done to the projection by the colossal distortion inherent in the procedure followed.

Must Awaken Men Higher Up

The powers-that-be have still to be awakened to the basic importance of projection problems. What we can only term the amazing ignorance of some highup men on projection is almost beyond belief. They seem to have studied and mastered almost everything connected with their business except the one thing upon which they must depend for its proper showing to the public.

There are just now some evidences that a few of them are disturbed in their projection slumber. On Broadway right now is a super-production which everyone pronounces equal to or better than anything produced since "The Birth of a Nation." As it is it is quite wonderful, but its beauty is very sadly marred by a twenty-four (24) degree angle of projection, and the results are such that some pretty big men are actually disturbed by the evident damage to the beauty of the production. So there is still hope that bye and bye the higher-ups will understand that our fight against the distortion of the screen image by an impossible projection angle really is based on comon sense and good business procedure. When that time comes there will be an end to standing a motion picture projector on its head and distorting the picture out of all true proportions. May the day be hastened.

A Good Fellow

RECENTLY a well gotten up publication "The N. C. R. Progress, Dayton," which is published by the National Cash Register Company and circulated by them for business reasons, reached me.

It gives excellent views of the great auditorium of the N. C. R. plant, where lectures are pulled off, motion pictures shown, etc., and so forth. At the top of the wide page, on either side is a front and back look-see at the aforesaid auditorium and between them the smiling face of Otto Nelson, labeled "In charge of Projection."

OTTO NELSON

Now Nelson is one able man AND a darned good fellow, too. He attends the meetings of the S. M. P. E. regularly, attends all sessions, don't say much but bull eive you me there is mighty little gets past him, as you may discover if you hold discussion with him thereafter. The National Cash Register picked the right man to have charge of projection in that magnificent auditorium when they selected Otto Nelson, and that is no mere bunch of roses either.

Approved Cement Film

RECENTLY Van Powell, in his usual excitable, enthusiastic way, yelled at me while I was busy with about a thousand things, "Hey, Rich! Here's a cement that I consider a help in protecting the print. But I defer to your opinion—try 'er out, won't you, and boost along the campaign for print protection by saying it looks good to you."

The film cement he handed me was what is known as No. 7 Cumminone film cement, manufactured by Duplex Film Industries of Long Island City, New York.

Good Results Under Test

It works well, and I believe it will give excellent satisfaction PROVIDED it be rightly treated, which goes for all film cements. Cumminone Film Cement is cordially recommended for your favorable consideration, and I would appreciate your reports on it, say after sixty days of use.

Does Not Deteriorate As Do Most Others

One of the features of this cement is the fact that it does not deteriorate between times of use, as so many others do—in fact, nothing can be found to disprove the claim made by the manufacturers that the cement can be used right down to the last brushful, and it will still HOLD even though this period stretches over weeks.

Used under proper conditions Cumminone Film Cement will be what Van has been campaigning for, as I did myself on many occasions—something to protect the print and make for better projection.

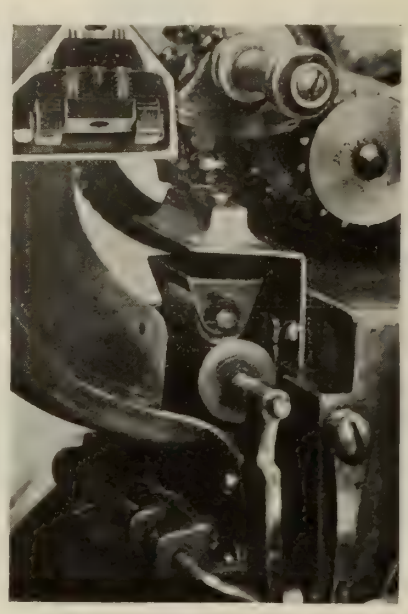
Better Projection Dignifies the Profession

Adds to Tension

DEMING McCULLOUGHO, who announces himself as being a "Moving Picture Operator"—whatever that may be—and an Interior Decorator, Marietta, Ohio, sends photographs and working model of a device he has invented. Here it is.

As you will observe, it is merely a small roller or rollers, with the necessary holding frame. This roller rests upon the film as it passes the Powers gate roller guides. It is held against the film by means of two small coil springs, which same are visible in the inset above. In the device on the gate the roller is long. In the other it consists of two short rollers. It is made both ways.



What the Patent Declaration Says

The patent declaration says: "This invention relates to a steadying device for motion picture apparatus, and its object is to provide an attachment adapted to co-act with the roll or spool above the projector (what is really meant by "spool above the projector" is the guide rollers on top of powers gate—Editor) to hold the film back from the backing plate (whatever a "backing plate" may be, I dunno.—Ed.), so that it will not be scratched and torn, and so that it will be perfectly steady in front of the screen." Of course perfectly steady on the screen is meant.

What this man has really done is provide a roller to put tension on the film between the tension shoes and the guide rollers at the top of the gate. Just why a film should get "scratched or torn" there is one too many for me. What the device will do, however, is to make a rather sharp bend in the film at the top of the gate, and add pulling strain to the intermittent sprocket, neither one of which I would myself call good. It would also, I suppose, bring about one pretty awful jump when a wide, stiff patch struck the roller.

Might Improve Results of Worn Merchanism

That it might improve results where an old, badly worn and poorly adjusted projector mechanism is used is probably true, but this department is unable to approve of anything calculated to keep that sort of a projector mechanism from the repair shop, or off the junk pile, in one of which places it most certainly belongs.

I am sorry indeed to be compelled to speak thus discouragingly of any man's invention. Mr. McCullougho meant well. He probably is a very good interior decorator and may be a good moving picture operator (wonder what that is?) but as a motion picture projectionist I think his invention shows that he has need of some further experience. On a properly adjusted motion picture projector which is in a decent state of repair, used to project films which are fit for projection, his invention would, I think, merely add to the strain on both the intermittent and the film.

You Can't Have Good Pictures Without It

THE success of a house often depends upon a thing comparatively insignificant in cost—a good projection system. For only with a fine lens and scientifically related parts can you have good pictures.

The Bausch & Lomb Cinephor Optical System gives strong illumination, evenly distributed over the whole screen. It defines the images with strong contrasts of black and white. It makes pictures convincingly real and helps to bring crowds back again. Ask your projection man.

That's How the Subject of Projection Has Grown

Through sixteen years of projection evolution—years of tremendous importance to the entire industry—the Handbooks of F. H. Richardson have kept pace—have gone far and wide—have become councillor and guide to thousands upon thousands of exhibitors and projectionists struggling to improve their work amidst technical difficulties which seemed almost insurmountable.

Like the very projection light beam itself, Richardson's Handbooks have penetrated places of darkest ignorance, bringing light and knowledge economically to the men endeavoring to reflect creditably upon the screen the picture products upon which so much time, money, and individual effort have been spent.

What S. L. Rothapfel Says

The contents of countless complimentary letters which the Chalmers Publishing Company have received concerning Richardson's Handbook may be best summed up by the following from S. L. Rothapfel:—

"That the Handbook should have a place in the library of every motion picture projectionist goes without saying; also in my opinion it should be in the office of every motion picture theatre manager so that he may be able to check himself up on what is right and wrong in projection practice."

PATSY RUTH MILLER encourages Jockey Kenneth Harlan and his mount in Film Booking Offices' "The King of the Turf."

F. B. O. Lists Eleven for February; Four Features and Seven Short Subjects

ELEVEN releases have been scheduled for distribution by F. B. O. during the month of February, four of which are feature productions and seven short subjects.

This imposing array of offerings is headed by "The Tough Guy" starring Fred Thomson, and his famous horse Silver King. Thomson essays the role of a roughneck rancher in his new vehicle, which David Kirkland is directing. Lola Todd appears opposite Thomson and Robert McKim plays the heavy. The story comes from the pen of Howard Clifton with scenario by Buckleigh Fritz Oxford. "The Tough Guy" is scheduled for distribution on February 1st.

"Beyond the Rockies" Stars Bob Custer

"Beyond the Rockies," an Independent Pictures Corporation production starring Bob Custer is listed for February 21st release. "Beyond the Rockies" is an original story by J. Edward Leithhead, with adaptation and continuity by William E. Wing. Jack Nelson is directing. The cast includes Eugenie Gilbert, David Dunbar, Bruce Gordon, Milton Ross, Eddie Harris, Max Holcomb, Ray Laidlaw and Max Asher.

"The King of the Turf," the ninth of the current season's Gold Bond productions is listed for February 28th distribution. "The King of the Turf" is a racing melodrama, and comes from the pen of Louis Joseph Vance, well known novelist. John C. Brownell, East Coast Scenario Editor of F. B. O., adapted the story, while J. Grubb Alexander is responsible for the continuity. James Hogan directed. The principals in the cast are Kenneth Harlan, Patsy Ruth Miller and Mary Carr. Others include George Irving, Al Roscoe, Kathleen Kirkham, David Torrence, Dave Kirby, William Franey and Ed Phillips.

A Harry Garson production starring "Lefty" Flynn, as yet untitled, is also scheduled for February 28th release.

List of Seven Short Features

The seven short subjects include "The Giraffe's Long Neck" a one reel cartoon from the Bray Studios, set for February 7th distribution. On the same day "Alice Blues," a two reel Blue Ribbon comedy produced by Joe Rock, and starring Alice Ardell, will also be shown to exhibitors.

On February 14th, "Mazie's Married" No. 12 of "The Adventures of Mazie" will be distributed. "Mazie's Married" is the final episode of the Mazie series, which appeared in story form in Top Notch Magazine. Nell Martin wrote the originals, while Doris Anderson is responsible for the continuities. Alberta Vaughn is starred with Larry Kent, Al Cooke and Kit Guard in support. Ralph Ceder directed the entire series.

"Here Comes the Bride," No. 2 of the new "Fighting Hearts" series is also listed for February 14th distribution. "Fighting Hearts" is another series of youth and romance, and comes from the pen of Sam Hellman, well known humorist. Alberta Vaughn is starred, and Larry Kent again plays juvenile lead, with Grant Withers as the juvenile heavy and Al Cooke and Kit Guard acting as comedy support. Ralph Cedar is directing the series, which consists of twelve two reel episodes.

On February 21st the Bray Studios will have ready for distribution another one reel novelty called "Uncle Tom's Cabin," while "Heavy Love," a two reel Standard Fat Men comedy produced by Joe Rock, will also be distributed on the same day. "Fat" Karr, "Tiny" Alexander, and "Fatty" Ross, the three fattest men on the screen, whose gross weight approximates a ton, are featured in "Heavy Love."

On February 28th "Read 'Em and Leap" the third episode of the "Fighting Hearts" series will be released.

Melford Finishes Cast Of "Whispering Smith"

With the signing of James Mason, Nelson McDowell, Richard Neill, Will Walling and Warren Rodgers, the cast for "Whispering Smith" is now complete. George Melford is directing this screen version of the widely read Frank H. Spearman novel for Metropolitan Pictures, with H. B. Warner, Lillian Rich, John Bowers and Lilyan Tashman featured.

An exciting train robbery sequence along the Union Pacific line at the edge of the Mojave Desert, will be filmed this week.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to Launch "Masked Players Contest" Jan. 25

Timely Exploitation Tie-up Between One Theatre and A Newspaper, in Many Cities—Six Weeks For Patrons to Win Prizes

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER, through its advertising, publicity and exploitation departments, comes to bat again with what promises to be one of the greatest exploitation stunts put over since the "Trackless Train" became the talk of the industry.

Beginning on January 25, a Masked Players Contest will be conducted by a representative theatre and newspaper in some of the many cities where it is to be held.

There have been made five reels of pictures, four of them showing the various Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer stars, featured players and stock company members, going through various manoeuvers of interest, but each player has his or her face masked, or cleverly concealed in such a way that makes complete recognition difficult.

For instance, we see Norma Shearer speeding along Hollywood Boulevard, and the only glimpse of her face is through the automobile mirror, which distorts her features sufficiently to make it hard to decide just exactly who she is.

We see Conrad Nagel swimming under water, and we see Lew Cody wearing a mask over his eyes, etc. These reels are of about three hundred feet each and take the place of a short subject, three or four players appearing in each reel.

Each day the reel is shown, there appear in the newspapers stories, together with the official Masked Player Contest Coupon. The contestant fills in the names of the masked players seen in the theatre and mails this to the Masked Contest Editor of the paper.

The contest will work out and be run in this manner. The Kunsky theatres, the Capitol, Madison, Adams and State in Detroit, Mich., will on January 25, with the cooperation of the Detroit Times run the first installment of the Masked Players Contest, which will show four Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer players masked. In the second week, there will be another subject showing four players, the same on the third week and the same on the fourth week. There will be an intermission of one week, during which time the answers will be sorted and the winners decided. Then on the sixth week the solution will be presented at the four theatres.

The Kunsky Theatres and the Detroit Times will offer 168 prizes in cash, worth over $1,000.

Other theatres and newspapers that have enthusiastically taken hold of the idea are Loew's Dayton Theatre and the Dayton Herald. The newspaper is playing it up as one of their biggest circulation features, special one-sheets have been placed on their delivery trucks and everything possible will be done to put it over in a big way. Over $500.00 in prizes will be awarded. The Herald's slogan is "Over 100 Cash Prizes." Loew's Ohio theatres will put on the contest sponsored by the Cleveland Press with over $500.00 in prizes.

The Sun Theatre of Omaha, Nebraska, Masked Players Contest will offer as first prize a trip to the M-G-M studios at Culver City, California, with other prizes worth hundreds of dollars.

Loew's Warfield Theatre in San Francisco puts on the contest with the San Francisco Bulletin with cash prizes amounting to over $1,000.

Nine West Coast theatres will run the contest simultaneously sponsored by the Las Angeles Examiner.

Loew's Aldine Theatre in Pittsburgh starts the Masked Players Contest on January 25 with the cooperation of the Pittsburgh Press. More than $500.00 in prizes will be offered.

Loew's Grand Theatre in Atlanta puts on the contest sponsored by the Atlanta Constitution with over $500.00 in prizes.

With the cooperation of the Washington Times, Loew's Palace Theatre will run the contest with a first prize of $500.00, and other prizes to the value of $2,000.

In St. Louis, Loew's State Theatre will conduct a Masked Players Contest in conjunction with the St. Louis Times. Hundreds of dollars, worth of prizes will be awarded.

Theatres and newspapers in Minneapolis, Nashville and many other cities are now preparing contracts covering the presentation of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Masked Players Contest.

Special posters, a complete press book and sundry other aids in putting the Masked Players Contest over have been prepared by M-G-M and no detail has been neglected that would help make this one of the biggst things of its kind ever attempted.

Exhibitors are unusually enthusiastic over the Masked Players Contest. They have seen its money making possibilities as well as the opportunity to get a tremendous amount of publicity for their theatres.

The six reels comprising the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Players Contest are furnished free of charge to the theatres showing them.

Thus, the theatre runs in place of some of its short subjects a reel that is intensely interesting, a splendid box office magnet and a publicity getter that would be hard to beat.

Laemmle's Twentieth Anniversary Will Be Celebrated By Industry

Friends and Admirers In and Out of Trade Planning Events for Veteran Film Executive—Laemmle Returning to America —Many Congratulations Received

ONE of the most interesting and important milestones of 1926 in the motion picture industry will be Carl Laemmle's Twentieth Anniversary. The President of Universal made his entry into the screen world when he opened his first theatre in Chicago, February 26th, 1906. He has been a theatre owner and exhibitor ever since, in addition to his great strides in the production and distribution fields.

Twenty years ago, when Laemmle entered the motion picture business, it was struggling along in an infancy of store-front grind shows, short split-reel pictures, mostly of the novelty variety, and erratic production and distribution. Much of the progress since that date, progress to a state of artistic perfection in production, closely-knit organization in distribution and elaborate and unequalled presentation, has found Laemmle and the organization at his command, well to the fore-front. His far-sightedness and consistent driving power and his progressive steps towards the advancement of the industry offer striking reasons for celebration, not only by the Universal organization, but by the entire industry.

Laemmle's twentieth anniversary celebration will not be limited to his Universal associates. His admirers and well-wishers of the entire industry and out of it will join with him.

Already he is receiving congratulatory wires and letters, felicitating him upon the approaching anniversary.

Will H. Hays, at the head of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, was one of the first to communicate with the Universal chief.

George Eastman, of the Eastman Kodak Company, was equally as ardent in his praise and congratulations.

Other communications are pouring in from prominent exhibitors, from the heads of various film companies and other important figures in the industry.

The Universal chief is now in Europe, but will sail for America next week aboard the Steamship Olympic. He will arrive in New York February 2nd, to be on hand for the many activities which will take place in connection with the 20-Year celebration.

Laemmle's entry into the film world was the opening of the White Front Theatre on Milwaukee Avenue in Chicago. It was a crude little affair with only 190 seats—camp chairs rented from a neighboring undertaker. No blare of trumpets in the daily papers heralded this enterprise; no electric marquee flashed its beckoning beacon to the crowds; no imposing front drew them in.

Original Investment Has $3,600

The crowds came, however, and it is fortunate for Carl Laemmle that they did, for the erstwhile clothing store manager of Oshkosh had invested every nickel he had in the world in that enterprise. His investment amounted to about $3,600. In twenty years this modest sum has grown to millions and has evolved into a globe encircling institution employing many thousands of people.

The little White Front theatre did so well that Laemmle acquired another. Within a few months he was operating four in all. Exhibitors remembering the difficulty of getting film in those days realize why he finally took the bull by the horns and opened a small exchange, partly to acquire a sufficient supply of film for his own houses, and also to help out other exhibitors in similar circumstances.

Having a film distributing service, he next found difficulty in getting enough film to distribute. The next step for the present Universal chief was to essay production on his own part, in a small way at first, but rapidly increasing. He never let go of his theatres, however, and although the original White Front Theatre and its humble brothers long since have been superceded by more pretentious houses, there or elsewhere, Laemmle has continued to retain his interests in the exhibiting end of the game.

Laemmle has an invigorating outlook on the motion picture business. In his recent letter to his Universal associates, in which he anticipated his approaching anniversary, he said:

"A Wonderful Business," Laemmle Says

"It's a wonderful business. It's a crazy business, not half so crazy as it was in the early days, but still a bit daft in spots. It's a business of big features. It's a business of terrifically hard work. But I love it!

"It has a lure no one can resist. And it still has boundless possibilities. It has never been plumbed to the bottom. It will go on improving and improving with each year. You can't get away from it. I've seen many men 'leave it forever'—only to come back to it.

"Standing off to one side and getting a better perspective view of these twenty years of ceaseless activity, I wonder how we have all weathered the innumerable gales and tempests we have struck. Attacks from within and attacks from without have all been met and overcome—and the old business goes smoothly, beautifully, triumphantly on its way.

"Twenty years of glorious friendships! All the money in the world could not induce me to give up the friendships I have found in this industry. Friendships in every possible walk of life, in every corner of the civilized globe—friendships among the rich and the poor, the high and the lowly.

"All the greed we have battled against—all the intolerance, all the hatred and envy and opposition of every description—all these are cast aside from the memory when faced with the goodness, the fineness, the sportsmanship and the friendships!

"Do you wonder I love it? Do you wonder that I view these twenty years with pride and joy and a softness of the heart?

"Well—here goes for another twenty years even better than the first twenty!"

Banks on Exhibitor's Point of View

Carl Laemmle's rise to fame and fortune from his humble beginnings twenty years ago is regarded as one of the most colorful stories of success in the entire business world. He, however, attributes his success in no small degree to the fact that he has always retained the exhibitor's point of view. Always close to his theatre interests, he has been able to look at every question from the

Hays to Laemmle

Will H. Hays, President of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., in his letter to Mr. Laemmle, said:

"I am pleased indeed to join with the others in commemorating the twentieth anniversary of your successful career in the motion picture industry as exhigher, distributor and producer.

"I congratulate you.

"Your years in the industry have been years of usual service—service to the industry and service to the public whose servant the industry is.

"As splendid as these years have been there are ahead of you those of still greater fullness, of still further constructive service and the greater consequent happiness.

"For all you have done for the industry, I am grateful and with the others I rejoice in your success."

Universal President Opened His First Chicago Theatre in 1906

George Eastman to Carl Laemmle

George Eastman, Chairman of the Board of Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., in his letter to Mr. Laemmle, said:

"I have just learned that you are about to complete a connection of twenty years in the motion picture industry. This is an event in which I take great pleasure in sending my personal congratulations together with the hope that the industry may continue to have the benefit of your influence and constructive force for many years to come.

"Twenty years have seen great changes and progress in the industry, more perhaps than even you as one of the pioneers foresaw, but I feel it must be a source of great personal pride and satisfaction to know that you have helped make this great advance possible.

"In expressing my congratulations I feel that I should also include my deep appreciation of the friendly business relations which have so long prevailed between us and to say that the success of Universal Pictures Corporation has in no small way contributed to the success of the Eastman Kodak Company."

CARL LAEMMLE

It is said of him on good authority that he often has passed up handsome profits in order to give small exhibitors the break. The best instance of this is his great 1925 Complete Service Contract policy, by which he agreed to supply exhibitors with the entire Universal output at a nominal weekly rental. This move astounded the industry and was characterized as a throwback to the early days of film distribution. The thousands of letters of thanks and praise which have reached him from small exhibitors, who, without this Complete Service, might have been forced to the wall, is regarded by Laemmle as ample recompense for the move. He has always announced his stand on the side of the small exhibitor and his leadership of the independent cause is one of the unswerving factors in the industry.

The Carl Laemmle Twentieth Anniversary celebration is coming at an opportune time. Never has Universal enjoyed such widespread success and prosperity. Never before has its influence been so great. Laemmle today is one of the most important forces in the industry, with world-wide power and momentum. His recent deal, by which he got important concessions out of the Ufa situation in Europe, places Universal in a strongly entrenched position, both abroad and in the United States. The new Universal Theatres Chain Corporation, which will assure to Universal a proper representation in towns and cities from which that company's pictures are now frozen out, is another great force in Universal's present and future progress.

But most important of all is Universal's great strides during the past year or so in the quality of its pictures and in the percentage of successful pictures released by that company during the past twelve months has been the talk of the industry, and the coming months promise a repetition of that record.

In its big special productions Universal has carved a deep niche for itself in motion picture history. "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," and its more recent successor, "The Phantom of the Opera," are establishing box-office records that even Universal will find it difficult to top. The coming year will see, not one, but three big Universal specials presented to the public.

Max Fleischer, Creator of "Ko-Ko," Elected Head of Red Seal Pictures

Ardent Supporter of "Laugh Month" Will Continue His Unique Work at the Inkwell Teaching His Clown New Tricks

By JOHN PYCROFT SMITH

MAX FLEISCHER, recently elected president of Red Seal Pictures Corporation, and known throughout the world wherever Ko-Ko, the Clown, star of the Out-of-the-Inkwell Cartoon series and the Ko-Ko Song Car-Tunes, is known, will stick to his inkwell.

The business of being president of a national distributing organization sets lightly on the shoulders of this creator of fun pictures.

Mr. Fleischer recently decided to take a personal interest in the distribution of his films in order to get direct reaction from the exhibitor so that he might properly gauge the product which he produces. With the recent organization of Red Seal, Mr. Fleischer stepped into the presidency. And—he will go right on putting Ko-Ko through his stunts!

"Do you know," Mr. Fleischer asked, "that a lot of people have got me sized up as some kind of a grouch? It sounds funny, doesn't it? I suppose the folks think along the line that a chap who throws out these cartoons must be an awful tough nut to crack. The fact is, I've successfully managed to laugh myself half way through life, trying all the time to keep the other fellow from bursting into tears, and when I deliberately set out to try to be serious, very few people take me seriously. Every laugh month is laugh month to me, and I hope some of the folks who have been looking at my humble contributions to the screen during these recent years have managed to get an occasional smile out of the antics of Ko-Ko. I'd hate like the deuce to feel that all of those hours, crouched against my inkwell, have been wasted on my public. The showmen tell 'em that everything is all right—and I like to think so.

"Laugh Month" Will Do World of Good

"I've been going around for years with a chip on my shoulder telling everybody that 'Laugh Month' will do a world of good along the lines of bringing to exhibitors a better understanding of what it's all about. I never found it difficult to convince an exhibitor that his show should be brightened up by various bits of humor. I'm the strongest booster (or I hope I am) of the other fellow's funny stuff. I was a laugh fan before I took a keen interest in production, and I see no reason why I should rent a safe deposit box to store away one iota of my optimism.

"I may not be funny, but my daughter thinks I'm a scream."

"Max" was little more than a boy when he joined the staff of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle as a cartoonist. Popular Science Monthly made him its art editor shortly thereafter and it was while with this publication that he applied himself to scientific subjects. Mr. Fleischer's knowledge of science stood him in good stead in recent years when editing such profound films as "Einstein's Theory of Evolution," in collaborating with Prof. Garrett P. Serviss, the noted astronomer, and "Evolution," edited in collaboration with Edward J. Foyes.

Began Production Eight Years Ago

Mr. Fleischer entered the motion picture field eight years ago, associating himself with his brother David, now production director of the Out-of-the-Inkwell Studios.

The product of these studios is protected by various patents, and President Fleischer is constantly experimenting to elaborate upon the several processes which he now controls.

During recent years, the demand upon Mr. Fleischer's time has extended to include his repeated appearance in a number of leading radio broadcasting station in Eastern cities.

Cartoonist Talks on The Radio

"Ko-Ko's boss" has talked to millions of listeners, and has regaled them with chats regarding his clown, these chats being almost as funny as the cartoons. Recently, at WIP Station, Philadelphia, Mr. Fleischer promised his listeners that if they would send their names to him in his office in number 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, he would send them a Ko-Ko card. Max graciously promised to print in the names of those who wrote to him. The following day he received 1,082 requests. He was dizzy when the day's work was done! Next morning, on reaching his office he was confronted with 8,391 additional names, and was obliged to hire a couple of experts to properly letter the cards to be mailed out. The third day 15,427 urgent requests for Ko-Ko cards arrived! And now, when Max talks over the radio, he soft-pedals all reference to "personally lettered Ko-Ko cards!"

The creator of Ko-Ko "sat in" on the first conference of the series that resulted in the designation of January, 1926, as "National Laugh Month" and his Ko-Ko cartoons are included among the most amusing features of "Laugh Month."

"Hello, Boss! When did y' fix up this here new Prexy job of yours? Why not let an old Pal in on some of this "Hip-Hip" stuff? Any good reason why Ko-Ko shouldn't slip you the Glad Mit?

"I'm the only guy who hadn't heard the news!"

"The Sea Beast" Premiere Triumph For John Barrymore, Warner Star

Tremendously Powerful Addition to the Most Virile Picture Offerings Wildly Cheered— Screen Stars in Audience

By CHARLES EDWARD HASTINGS

"THE SEA BEAST," John Barrymore's first starring vehicle on Warner Bros. 1926-27 schedule of big specials, had its premiere at Warners Theatre, New York City, Friday evening, January 15.

An epic of New England sea life, when three- and four-masters set out from New Bedford in search of whales, "The Sea Beast," directed by Millard Webb from Herman Melville's novel, "Moby Dick," and acted with an intensity that Mr. Barrymore thus far has withheld from his screen offerings, is compelling in its suspense.

Women attending the premiere were deeply affected by the realism of Mr. Barrymore's acting, coupled with the intricacies of camera and dramatic effects. The suspense held men who classified themselves in the "hard-boiled" division; it also held motion picture stars "spellbound." It seems impossible to expect more from Mr. Barrymore than he gives in his "Captain Ahab."

Story, direction and acting set "The Sea Beast" apart as a tremendously powerful addition to the most virile offerings of the screen.

Nothing more can be expected from any premiere than the scenes witnessed outside and inside Warners Theatre at the premiere of "The Sea Beast." Ticket holders fought their way through a dense crowd on the sidewalks adjacent to the theatre, where celebrated guests were photographed. The foyer was next to impassable. Uniformed policemen had difficulty restoring and maintaining order.

It was apparent that the personality of Mr. Barrymore dominated the throng surging about the front of the house, vainly seeking an opportunity to purchase tickets.

Some few of the stars, particularly the earlier arrivals, were forced to fight their way into the theatre, but by 8:30 o'clock the police had the crowds in hand, and the late arrivals experienced less difficulty.

"The Sea Beast" Is a Fine Achievement

Once inside, however, the crowds saw the best screen characterization ever done by Mr. Barrymore. This feature affords the star his first opportunity to portray a "rough-and-tumble" character, and he revelled in it to such an extent that his every move on the screen brought applause.

Critics and public alike were unanimous in agreeing with Barrymore himself that this is the greatest thing he has ever done in the silent drama. This does not except "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" or 'Beau Brummell."

Telegrams and flowers were received from all over the world congratulating the star on his first opportunity to portray a "rough-and-as Charles Chaplin, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Gloria Swanson, Vera Gordon, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Syd Chaplin.

But a galaxy even larger than these attended in person. These included Monte Blue, May McAvoy, Mae Murray, Richard Dix, Adolphe Menjou, Lois Wilson, Rolland Flander, Dorothy Mackaill, Lila Lee, James Kirkwood, Alice Joyce, Flora Le Breton, Mildred Ryan, Franklyn Farnum, Jesse L. Lasky, Al Santelle, Dorothy King, Sigrid Holmquist, Lois Moran, Hal Roach and Thomas Meighan.

Stars Address Radio Audience from WBPI

The ceremonies were broadcast from Warner's new station, WBPI, and most of the stars spoke a word to the radio audience during the intermission.

Next day "The Sea Beast" settled down for a long Broadway run.

The New York newspapers gave praise to Warner Bros. for a magnificent picture, to Millard Webb, the director, for his interpretation of the novel, "Moby Dick," to Mr. Barrymore for his greatest characteriation, and hailed Dolores Costello, the feminine lead, as the coming "great actress of the screen."

Following are excerpts from leading New York dailies:

Mr. Barrymore's Best Characterization

Telegraph—"John Barrymore justified his reputed desire to abandon purely romantic roles by presenting at Warners Theatre, last night, one of the most powerful and virile characters ever seen on the screen. * * * 'The Sea Beast' is a fine achievement for Barrymore and from the standpoint of production a tremendous victory for Warner Bros."

Herald Tribune—"We are sure 'The Sea Beast' is a magnificent production. It is so big. * * * If anyone ever doubted it before he must now admit that John Barrymore is as great a make-up artist as Lon Chaney."

American—"Another saga of the seas opened last night at Warners Theatre * * *. 'The Sea Beast' is a grim tale * * *. The whaling episodes are well worth seeing * * *. Their realism is splendid."

The Sun—"The Warner Bros. have a picturesque, melodramatic success * * *. The scenes of the ships are all effective as are those of the wild crews, the storms and the whales * * *. Barrymore gives what is called a superlative characterization."

First National's Hollywood Plant Making Explosive Sales Ammunition

General Manager Finds Eager Workers Colleen Moore's "Irene" Her Biggest Other Features Shape Up Wonderfully

By RICHARD A. ROWLAND
General Manager, First National Pictures

HOLLYWOOD, CALIF:—I am in Hollywood with our executives, stars and producers and watching with keenest interest the activity that seems to fairly explode from the studio lot.

In all my visits to the coast I have never experienced so much genuine activity, so much production wealth, so much enthusiasm as that now being displayed among the West Coast units of First National.

To say I am enthusiastic is putting it mildly. I am enthusiastic—very much so and for many reasons and about many things out here. First of all, I have seen Colleen Moore's "Irene." What a picture it is, everything we anticipated from the start—and more. I had the feeling that "Irene" would make a great picture when we purchased the story. It is far beyond all expectations. I liked "Sally" much better than any picture Colleen More ever made. I like "Irene" even better. It is a bigger picture from all angles and coupled with the beautiful fashion show, it will easily rank as the finest Colleen Moore picture ever produced. John McCormick, the producer of this picture, should feel very happy over the new offering. As for First National, all I can say is that we are very fortunate with this new feature on our program.

After sitting through "The Viennese Medley", I am thoroughly convinced we have something here of which to be proud. The story has a tremendous note and carries a deep everlasting message. Showing the atmosphere of Vienna, as it does, both before and after the war, and still not having a single war scene throughout the story, is one of the many features of the film. The story preaches a lesson against war but does so without any propaganda—something decidedly unusual. Anna Q. Nilsson never looked more beautiful and does some excellent work in this picture as does Conway Tearle, Mae Allison, and the many others in the cast. To June Mathis, who has fairly lived with the story for a year and who has seen it through from the beginning on into the cutting, editing, titling stages, goes great praise. She has given us a production that will make those who see it talk, and those who have not seen it will want to see it. We have no occasion to predict what "The Viennese Medley" will do when released. We can rest assured it will be everything we anticipated, which, I am frank to admit, was considerable.

"The Far Cry" Exceeds All Expectations

In the Far Cry" I feel confident we have a picture that is far beyond our expectations. I consider it a corking good picture —one that is unusual in many ways and one in which Blanche Sweet and Jack Mulhall give the finest performances of their screen careers. This picture is a surefire box-office hit and Balboni, the director, deserves much credit. After looking at "The Far Cry," I closed a contract with Balboni covering his services to our organization for a period of years. His continental experience will be valuable to us and he can obtain a series of productions that will suit his directorial abilities ideally.

I have seen Harry Langdon's "Tramp! Tramp! Tramp!" picture as far as he has gone with it. If he finishes this story as well as he started it, we will have one of the finest comedies of feature length ever released. I am perfectly sincere in this statement. Langdon measures up to every expectation we held forth for him. His picture can easily be made the comedy hit of the season. There are big laughs throughout and a story that everyone will agree is unique.

I am going to see as much film as possible. On my schedule is the new Corinne Griffith Production "Mlle. Modiste," I have not seen any of this as yet. The picture has just been started, but I am convinced that in it, Miss Griffith will give us another "Classified." The story lends itself to great possibilities and like Colleen Moore's "Irene," is an adaptation from a stage presentation that ranks with the biggest foot light attractions in stage history.

Norma's Next Suited to Her Talents

I want to see the footage so far made on Norma Talmadge's "Kiki" and will do so as soon as possible. I feel that Miss Talmadge will lend herself in admirable fashion in this noteworthy story. She should give First National one of her finest portrayals in the piece and I know that is one of the objectives in both Joseph Schenck's and her mind.

Lambert Hillyer is directing "The Second Chance" and I will see this picture as far as it has been photographed before I leave for New York. I have seen the company at work—a colorful series of settings with many fine artists portraying their respective parts. Anna Q. Nilsson will have the principal feminine role in this story and I know her part is one that will give her some unusual opportunities. She has a fine cast surrounding her.

I am in daily conference with John McCormick and am highly pleased with the progress so far on our new schedule. The future for First National's West Coast units is a big one. Never has there been so much activity and genuine pep and so many definite objectives ahead. I am talking with Frank Lloyd about his new production plans. He will start soon on a new special for our release. I am also conferring with E. M. Asher on the Corinne Griffith production to follow her "Mlle. Modiste." Both Marion Fairfax and Sam Rork are out here and have started work on "The Desert Healer." We will have a good talk prior to my departure. Edwin Carewe is working hard on "Heirs Apparent" with Mary Astor and Lloyd Hughes in the principal roles. I will look at the film made to date at the earliest opportunity. Carewe feels he has a picture that is going to measure up with "Joanna." His story is an excellent one and he is very enthusiastic over the progress made so far.

M. C. Levee Planning "Molasses"

M. C. Levee is mapping out his production plans for "Molasses." I have never seen Levee so excited over a story. He tells me his plans and I have agreed heartily with him that in this vehicle, he will have a surefire attraction both from exploitation and entertainment values.

When I left New York for Hollywood, I was very much interested in the future activities on the Coast. Being on the ground and seeing with my own eyes just what is going on out here, has given me enthusiasm I have never experienced so fully before. Everybody is working hard—striving to do his or her best. Our Scenario Department has some of the finest stories on hand for adaptations. Our units are well supplied with advance production material and it looks like a big year—a very big year—the biggest year in production history for First National.

Idlesmen Can't Go Wrong With New Product

We are in the midst of manufacturing pictures that will give our sales force ammunition to go out and fairly shoot up the field. They can't go wrong with the list of pictures and stars that is theirs for the coming season. The managers should feel highly pleased with this schedule and the salesmen in turn should go out with the thought that the First National product for 1926 is unbeatable from every angle that can be conceived. I personally feel that way and I am on the ground and have rubbed elbows with our stars and our producers—have watched their daily work and the progress on the individual units. I am coming home with the greatest encouragement and if I am able to reflect my enthusiastic spirit into those in our organization just half as much as it really is, then I will be happy.

Dorothy Gish in "Nell Gwyn"

A Herbert Wilcox Production—A British National Picture

Miss Gish is seen in one of the most delightful roles of her screen career as "the apple girl" smiled upon by the King.

The American premiere of "Nell Gwyn" has been set for Monday, January 25, at 8:30 P. M. at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York City. An invited audience, made up from exclusive lists of celebrities in the motion picture industry, national, state, municipal officials, society, and special writers, will be present.

Motion picture fans who raved over Dorothy's antics in "Hearts of the World" and "Romola" will love her now.

There is love—and drama—and suspense—and fascination in the sequence here depicted. The alluring actress, who climbed to fame on the London stage, is seen with the King. This "set" reflects its dazzling grandeur. Miss Gish is a thing of beauty here! It is apparent that "English pictures" have gone forward!

Eight Fox Film Productions Set In As Many Parts of the World

Magic of Screen Creation in West Studios Will Carry Theatre Patrons to Siberia, the South Seas, Iceland, etc.

TO stroll through Fox Films West Coast Studio at the present writing, where eight big productions are being created before the camera, is to condense a Cook's World Tour into one small hour.

Not only is every section of America—North, South, East and West—the background of various pictures in production, but the magic of screen creation at the Western Avenue Studio is extending to distant lands—Siberia, the South Seas, Ireland.

Possibly the most spectacular of these pictures is "Siberia," which Victor Schertzinger is directing. The studio's united efforts have been concentrated on this production to make it a mirror of Russian and Siberian life. A feature of this photoplay is the elaborate sets constructed for its production. The cast was selected with the utmost consideration and among the players in this picture are Alma Rubens, Edmund Lowe, Lou Tellegen, Vadim Uraneff, Thomas Santschi, Paul Panzer, James Marcus and Daniel Makarenko.

"Yellow Fingers" is another photoplay which pictures distant lands. Its locale is the South Seas and the story is woven so that it is a combination of well-known actors in unusual but convincing situations and settings. The cast includes Olive Borden, Ralph Ince, Edward Piel, Nigel de Brullier, Armand Kaliz, Otto Mathieson and Claire Adams.

Near home, but also as little known as is the South Seas, is the setting for "Tony Runs Wild," starring Tom Mix. This picture is set in the ruggedly picturesque mountains of Arizona, in the wild horse country along the Apache trail, near the Pueblos of the Cliff Dwellers, the race which vanished even before Indian traditions began. Archaelogists hold that the Tonto ruins, the locale of this picture, were old before the foundations of Babylon were laid and the new Fox Film will give an accurate impression of both the interior and exterior of this ancient habitation. The cast for this picture includes, besides Tom Mix and his famous horse, Tony, Jacqueline Logan, Marion Harlan, Lawford Davidson, Duke Lee, Vivian Oakland and Raymond Wells.

"The Dixie Merchant" takes the theatregoer to the heart of the South and pictures characters familiar in that section of the United States. In the cast are Jack Mulhall, Madge Bellamy, J. Farrel MacDonald and Claire McDowell.

A bit of the Pacific coast is pictured in "Sandy," a story that gives wide opportunity to portray accurately this far flung section of the United States. The cast includes Madge Bellamy, Gloria Hope, Leslie Fenton, Bardson Bard, Harrison Ford, David Torrence and Edythe Chapman.

A jump across the United States is made for the locales of two other plays. "Dangers of a Great City" pictures crook life in New York, which takes the characters through the business districts, into the ballrooms of an exclusive home and then into their resort in the slums. Cast in this picture are Pauline Starke, Rockliffe Fellowes, Johnny Walker, Grace Darmond and Mickey Bennett. The other New York picture shows a bit of Broadway life, including the resorts of the gold diggers. It is "Hell's Four Hundred," starring Margaret Livingston. In the cast are Harrison Ford, Henry Kolker, Wallace MacDonald and Marceline Day.

From New York, the Fox Films productions jump to one of New York's suburbs—Irelnd. The locale for a sequence in "Corn Cob Kelly's Benefit" is in the Green Isle. The story for this picture is one of the little classics of the screen and is written by Peter B. Kyne about a jockey who is injured and cannot ride again.

Buck Jones is now completing another of his screen masterpieces, "The Fighting Buckaroo," which takes in a wide locale that extends from a big seaport to Arizona. Others in the cast are Frank Butler, famous for his trained eye and educated monacle; Sally Long, one of the Wampas stars for 1926; E. J. Rathcliffe and Lloyd Whitlock.

"Rustling for Cupid," a Peter B. Kyne story of the cattle country to be directed by Irving Cummings, pictures the ranges of Texas, while "Hard Boiled," which Tom Mix is preparing to make, will show other sections of the West. " Separate Rooms" is another play which is almost ready to go into production and rounds out the world tour which Fox Films has arranged for picturegoers.

"The Gilded Butterfly"

When Ascher Bros. opened their newest theatre, the New Terminal, Chicago, they chose "The Gilded Butterfly," a Fox Films production, to head the bill and the enthusiastic reports which filled the papers of Chicago on the following day testified that both producer and exhibitor are the best of showmen. Alma Rubens scored heavily in this picture.

"Tony Runs Wild"

Lucien Littlefield, one of the foremost character comedians on the screen, will support Tom Mix in his newest Fox Film starring vehicle, "Tony Runs Wild." This picture will be directed by Thomas Buckingham. ony, as the title indicates, runs wild in this production.

Schertzinger Has All-Russian Staff To Aid Him In "Siberia"

"Siberia," Victor Schertzinger's latest and most pretentious superproduction for Fox Films, marks a definite and comemndable advance in dramatic photoplays.

This picture, featuring Alma Rubens and Edmund Lowe, was many months in the making and the production cost was enormous. Six months before the cameras started grinding technical experts were deeply involved with multitudinous detail.

Schertzinger, whose work with Mabel Normand, Jackie Coogan, Charles Ray and other box-office headliners won him international fame, is a stickler for absolute fidelity.

At the outset it was understood that no expense would be spared in making "Siberia," one of the greatest pictures of the kind ever attempted in the United States.

"To slight the background," said the direcor, "would be to mar the picture. We must be true to the smallest detail."

With this end in view, every assistance was given the director. Herman Bing, assistant to F. W. Murnau, German cinema ace, was commissioned to "sit in" with Schertzinger throughout the life of the story. Dan Makarenko, Russian actor and former member of the Czar's military family, was pressed into service as technical assistant. Nicholas A. Dunaev, Russian director and playwright, was consulted concerning the script and the stage settings. Once a prisoner in Siberia, Dunaev described his own dramatic escape—and this was incorporated in the story.

Scores of Russians, talented and some descended from royalty, were used in scenes in the Petrograd sequences. Russian musicians were employed. Acording to Dunaev the copy of the prison of Yamsk was so faithfully done that he had to look twice in order to convince himself he was not back in that dreary wasteland.

In a sincere effort to give Schertzinger the best cast obtainable, many months were spent in obtaining the actors required. Alma Rubens, selected after mature deliberations, was regarded as ideal for the role of "Sonia Vronsky," patient and long-suffering daugter of the peppery old overlord, "Andrej Vronsky." According to Dunaev, Makarenko and other Russian experts, Miss Rubens makes a perfect daughter of troubled Russia. Edmund Lowe was selected from a list of sixty-one aspirants for the role of "Leonid Petroff," a dashing officer of the Czar's guard.

Lou Tellegen, seen as a temperamental radical, fits admirably into the part of "Egor Kaplan," while Tom Santschi invests "Alexis Vetkin" with a subtle villainy peculiarly his own. Vadin Uraneeff, gifted young Russian and a former resident of Petrograd, portrays the role of "Kyrill," the delicate brother of Miss Rubens. Others in the all-star cast are Lilyan Tashman, Helena D'Algy, Paul Panzer, James Marcus, Daniel Makarenko, Samuel Blum, Monty Collins and others.

"Siberia" is from the play by Bartley Campbell. Fox Films scenario is by Eve Unsell.

"The Dixie Merchant"

Harness racing is picturized in Fox Films screen version of "The Dixie Merchant," taken from "The Chicken Wakon Family," a novel by Barry Benefield. The historic old race course at Pleasanton, Cal., was selected as the ideal spot to shoot the thrilling racing scenes in "The Dixie Merchant.', It was at Pleasanton in the early nineties that society of San Francisco and the Bay Cities gathered for these races.

Story by Howard Hawks

"Dangers of a Great City," Fox Film crook drama, featuring Pauline Starke, Johnny Walker and Rockliffe Fellowes, is another story from the pen of Howard Hawks, now a director at Fox Films West Coast studio and probably the youngest man who holds such a post. He is only twenty-eight years old, and arrived at his directorate when the Fox Films started to make his own story "The Road to Glory."

"The Johnstown Flood"

Irving Cummings has completed his first screen production for Fox Films, "The Johnstown Flood." George O'Brien and Florence Gilbert have the leading roles. Janet Gaynor, 1926 wampas star who reecntly signed a long time contract with Fox, and Paul Panzer are also importantly cast in this thrilling screen melodrama based on the American disaster of 1889.

Mack Swain in Fox Cast

Mack Swain has just been added to the cast of "Dangers of a Great City," a crook melodrama which has already been started on the Fox lot in Hollywood under the direction of Chester Bennett. Swain is portraying the role of Bendy Joe. Pauline Starke and Rockliffe Fellowes are playing the leading roles, with Johnny Walker, Grace Darmond and Mickey Bennett in support.

"Yellow Fingers"

May Foster, John Wallace, Josephine Crowell and Charles Newton have been added to the cast of "Yellow Fingers," Fox Films supreme attraction, which has just been started in production at the West Coast Studios of the Fox company with Olive Borden in the leading role. Emmett Flynn is directing this production which is an adaptation of Gene Wright's novel of the same name.

Starts New O. Henry

"From the Cabby's Seat" is the latest comedy to be picturized by Fox Films in its series of two-reelers based on the short stories of O. Henry. Gladys McConnell is playing the O. Henry girl, and Gene Cameron has the leading male role opposite her. Art Rowlands and Ernie Shields are the two crooks who figure in the entertaining story. Banjamin Stoloff is directing.

W. R. Sheehan Returns To the Metropolis

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, Vice-President and General Manager of the Fox Film Corporation, returned on Tuesday, January 19, from the Fox West Coast Studios to his desk in his New York office, after an absence of four months. Mr. Sheehan went West shortly after his return from Europe, in September last, allowing himself about two weeks in New York to catch up with work on his desk. He then went to Hollyood, and has been in close touch with every phase of production on the 1926-27 program of Fox specials up to a week ago, when he started East again, stopping off in Chicago. The high standard of the Fox 1926-27 specials has resulted in phenomenal sales. Plans are in working, however, for the addition of two, and possibly more, big specials to augment the schedule previously announced. Following a series of conferences in the home office, the General Manager will return to his West Coast studios shortly and remain indefinitely.

TENSION! —YES! — Cecil B. DeMille knows it and gets it in this bit from his personally supervised "The Wedding Song" for Producers Distributing Corp.

DeMille Completes Second Big Special for Producers Dist. Corp.

Producer Considers "The Volga Boatman" as His Greatest Effort to Date; Story of Russian Revolution Now in Editing Room

THE last foot of film on Cecil B. DeMille's second personally directed production, "The Volga Boatman," has slipped through the camera, and work is now under way in the cutting room on this vivid story of the Russian Revolution.

The final two weeks of actual "shooting" found DeMille and his company working most of the time from sunset until morning filming night scenes on a huge exterior set 300 feet long, which was erected on the DeMille lot.

In announcing the completion of "The Volga Boatman," Cecil DeMille makes the unqualified statement: "This is the greatest picture I ever filmed." In the opinion of the producer, it is not surpassed by even "The Ten Comandments," generally considered not only DeMille's finest production to date, but an outstanding picture in cinema history.

DeMille is not given to sweeping statements wthout well-founded facts, and he points to the setting of "The Volga Boatman" as a reason for his enthusiasm. "The story," says DeMille, "deals with the Russian Revolution, and adapted itself admirably to screen interpretation under the deft hand of Lenore Coffee, whose treatment of the original by Konrad Bercovici is being filmed.

"The Russian Revolution provides much better plot material for the modern audience than the French or American revolutions because it occurred in contemporary times and therefore the story strikes closer home. A great dramatic epic with which we are all familiar—a nation throwing off the shackles of centuries—presented in modern environment is certain to be impressve, and Bercovici has woven into a strong situation a wonderful love-story, involving a boatman on the Volga River and a daughter of nobility. 'The Volga Boatman,' a classical folksong that is really a voice of Russia, gives the picture both a splendid title, and an unusual musical theme. Then," continues DeMille, "I have been unusually fortunate in my cast. It is headed by William Boyd, an actor in whom I have the greatest confidence. Elinor Fair, Victor Varconi, Theodore Kosloff, and Julia Faye complete an ensemble of dramatic artists that any director would welcome, and I am convinced 'The Volga Boatman' will be my finest contribution to motion pictures."

Chadwick Soon to Start Big Horse Race Drama

I. E. Chadwick, president of Chadwick Pictures Corporation, is making preparation to start production on "Winning the Futurity," a melodramatic horse race story, which will be relased immediately on completion. It is expected that twelve weeks will be required to finish the production.

Cullen Landis will play the leading role. Clara Horton, who will be seen opposite him, and others of the company which is now being assembled will leave for location early next week.

Production In High At First National's Eastern Plant

ANOTHER production got under way at First National's New York studios this week. It is "The Savage," with Ben Lyon and May McAvoy in the featured roles, and Sam Hardy and Philo McCullough in the cast. Several prominent roles still have to be filled. Fred Newmeyer is directing this picture under the supervision of Earl Hudson. "The Savage" is an adaptation of an original story written for the screen by Ernest Pascal. The scenario was written by Jane Murfin and Charles Whittaker.

Shooting on "Men of Steel" is now in its twelfth week with approximately another four or five weeks to go before completion. Seven weeks were spent in Birmingham, Alabama, shooting exteriors and steel mill scenes, then the unit returned to New York to do interiors. Sometime late this month the unit expects to jump back to Alabama to film one of the biggest exterior scenes in the picture. That will probably be saved until all interiors are completed.

On the completion of "Men of Steel" A. L. Rockett will start his first production under the First National banner. It will be "Puppets" from the stage play by Frances Lightner. John Fish Goodrich is writing the script under Rockett's supervision and all preparations are being made to start it as soon as the steel picture is out of the way. Milton Sills will be starred and George Archainbaud will direct.

"Little Annie Rooney" Breaks St. Louis Record

In an 800-seat neigborhood theatre in St. Louis, Mo., Mary Pickford's "Little Annie Rooney" recently grossed in a one-week run $608 in excess of the house record. This phenomenal business caused Ben P. Stromberg, manager of the theatre—the Ritz—to write United Artists Corporation as follows:

"We deem 'Little Annie Rooney' the outstanding production of this most highly talented star. She is today in this production the same twelve-year-old 'kid' she was years ago. We grossed for the week $608 in excess of our house record, and when you consider that the house record was established in our opening week at a higher admission price than that charged for 'Little Annie Rooney,' this is truly a remarkable performance. In addition to breaking our record for the week we also broke our house record for each individual day of the week."

Signs With First National

Immediately after attaching his signature to a five-year contract with First National Pictures, Philo McCullough left Hollywood for the Eastern studios of that company to appear in "The Savage," an Earl Hudson production featuring Ben Lyon and May McAvoy. Mr. McCullough and his wife arrived in New York last week.

Lubitsch to Make "The Door Mat" For Warners

ERNST LUBITCH'S next picture for Warner Bros. is to be an adaptation of "The Door Mat," a stage play that scored a big success throughout the country recently. Announcement to this effect was made at the Warner West Coast Studios, in Los Angeles, this week, coupled with the statement that the Warners have already purchased the screen rights.

Lubitsch and his assistants are starting work on the script immediately. "The Door Mat" is the last comedy drama the famous director will make before starting on his long-promised big spectacle.

"The Door Mat" is by Ethel Clifton and Brenda Flower, and both they and Louis McLoon, the owner, signed the contract transferring the film rights to Warner Bros. The play made a great popular appeal and its story is said to be not only particularly well adapted to screen use but of the characters which has come to be known as of essentially of the Lubitsch type.

"The Door Mat" is not to be confused with "The Doormat," which had its premiere at the Punch and Judy Theatre, New York, New York, in 1922.

"Tracked In Snow Country" Goes Big in Small Town

The Warner Bros. attraction, "Tracked in the Snow Country," one of the Rin-Tin-Tin starring productions, played to 92 per cent of the residents of Grain Valley, Mo., recently—probably a world's record. The town has a population of 352, and 325 saw "Tracked" at the Royal Theatre. This remarkable showing and the enthusiasm of the audience led T. D. Peal, managing director, to write:

"This picture is a S. R. O. It can't be beat, so our patrons say."

Crosland Assigned to Direct "Tavern Knight"

Having directed John Barrymore in "Don Juan," the big Warner Bros. special which is to be released on the 1926-27 schedule and promises to create a sensation, Alan Crosland has now been assigned to direct the same star in "The Tavern Knight," which is to follow on next year's program.

De Mille Signs Sullivan

G. Gardner Sullivan, an outstanding figure in the world of screen writing, has been signed to a long-term contract by Cecil B. DeMille, according to an announcement from the DeMille studio.

Sullivan's first work under his new contract will be on the continuity of "Bachelor's Brides," Rod La Rocque's next starring picture, for which Garrett Fort wrote the treatment. Sullivan handled the adaptation of "Three Faces East" which has just been released by Producers Distributing Corp.

HAND OVER HAND HE CLIMBED INTO HER HEART, but whether he stayed is to be learned in First National's "Girl from Montmarte," with Barbara LaMarr and Lewis Stone.

E. Mason Hopper is directing a spectacular Beaux Arts Ball sequence of "Paris at Midnight," Frances Marion's second Metropolitan production. This was adapted by Miss Marion from Balzac's "Pere Goriot" and features Jetta Goudal, Lionel Barrymore, Mary Brian, Edmund Burns and Emile Chautard.

"Whispering Smith," George Melford's current Metropolitan picture, is a screen version of Frank H. Spearman's novel of the men who modernized the railroads across the Rockies. The company, headed by H. B. Warner, Lillian Rich, John Bowers and Lilyan Tashman, are now on location at Mojave.

Sebastian has his production of "The Prince of Pilsen" well under way. Paul Powell is directing this Belasco feature for Producers Distributing Corporation release, with Anita Stewart and George Sidney in the leading roles.

All of these productions are parts of the Cecil B. DeMille unified program.

"MEMORY LANE" shows to advantage the capabilities of Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagel in First National's film of that title.

Miss Frederick has long been recognized as one of the foremost American emotional actresses of the stage and screen. Her new productions for Excellent Pictures Corporation will follow closely the type of modern, domestic dramas in which she has scored her greatest successes.

Janet Gaynor Signed By Fox to a Long Term Contract

AN important contribution to the fresh screen personalities discovered this season has been made by Fox Films in the signing of nineteen year old Janiet Gaynor to a long term contract which provides for her appearance in featured roles for a number of years to come.

The need of new faces on the screen is a constant demand, voiced by exhibitors and public alike and the introduction of Miss Gaynor will prove, according to the Fox officials, a noteworthy answer to both. This little actress, possessed of a Gish appeal and a Pickford beauty in addition to an individuality entirely her own, will make her first appearance in Irving Cummings' spectacular melodrama, "The Johnstown Flood"—founded upon the disastrous catastrophe of 1889.

New Fairbanks Series To Be "Thrillodramas"

"Thrillodramas" is the general name for the new series of eight pictures featuring William Fairbanks to be made by the recently incorporated Camera Pictures Corporation and which will be released through the Lumas Film Corporation.

The designation of the subject under the general head of "thrillodramas" does not imply that there will be any continuity or series style in the productions as each picture will be a complete production with an entirely new story and cast with the exception of the star.

Mr. Fairbanks is under a three year contract to Camera Pictures who have some very ambitious plans for this athletic actor.

Universal Signs Moore For Lead in Big Feature

Matt Moore has been signed to play the featured leading role in "The Mystery Club" a production soon to be made at Universal City.

Herbert Blache will direct the picture, and is now selecting the other members of the all-star cast. "The Mystery Club" is a unique combination of comedy and mystery, written by Arthur Somers Roche. Moore, strangely enough, has made two of his biggest hits in this type of story, one Universal's "White Tiger," and the other in "The Unholy Three."

EDMUND COBB

Always an interesting figure on the screen, this "Western Comedy" star has many good friends among those who enjoy Universal Western Comedies.

Sax to Use Complete Circus for New Gotham Film

IMMEDIATELY upon his arrival in Hollywood Sam Sax closed a deal whereby the complete menagerie, live stock and ring equipment of a big circus would be available for the production of the next and tenth Gotham Production of the present series of twelve which is entitled "Hearts and Spangles."

As the title indicates this is a story of a circus with practically all the scenes laid in and around a large travelling tent show.

One of the high lights in the picture is a sequence of scenes where a disgruntled circus employee turns several of the wild animals loose into the audience. This promises to be a genuine thriller and extraordinary arrangements are necessary in order to stage this scene without loss of life.

The production will be made under the supervision of Renaud Hoffman.

To Begin on "The Savage"

"The Savage," adapted from an original story by Ernest Pascal, is slated to go into production at First National's New York studios within the next few days. Ben Lyon and May McAvoy will have the featured roles. Fred Newmeyer will direct. It will be an Earl Hudson production.

Rockett's First for F. N.

"Puppets,' an adaptation of the stage play of the same title by Frances Lightner, will be A. L. Rockett's first production for First National at this company's New York studios. This will mark the start of the new policy recently inaugurated whereby Rockett will handle one unit and Earl Hudson another. Milton Sills will be starred in "Puppets" and George Archainbaud will direct. It will start at the completion of "Men of Steel."

LOIS BOYD
Isn't "on the rocks." She's rather gone up in the world, being in F. B. O.'s Standard Fat Men Comedies.

"THE HOME MAKER" brings out the power of Alice Joyce's charm and Clive Brook's ability. Universal will show you.

Walsh Picking Players For Stallings Big Play

RAOUL WALSH, who has been assigned by Fox Films to direct the screen version of "What Price Glory," has arrived in New York from Hollywood to put the final touches on the scenario and select actors to portray the principal roles. While in New York, he will hold a series of conferences with Laurence Stallings, co-author of the play, who wrote the screen adaptation.

Actors have not yet been selected for the parts of Captain Flagg, Sergeant Quirt and the French girl, Charmaine, according to the dispatch announcing Mr. Walsh's projected visit to New York. Mr. Walsh will make screen tests at the Fox New York studios of any actors who believe they are qualified to portray the various roles. Mr. Walsh expect to complete his conferences with Captain Stallings and secure players in time to begin filming on the Fox lot in Hollywood by February 10.

"Beau Geste," an adaptation of P. C. Wren's novel, is a thrilling story of the French Foreign Legion.

"IS SHE STAR MATERIAL?" Not us asking. We know! It's Earle Williams asking the opinion of his art director (in the film) of Peggy Hopkins Joyce in Associated Exhibitors' whiz, "The Skyrocket."

Rockett Inaugurates Round Table At First National's Eastern Studios

Once Each Month All Department Heads Will Meet and Thresh Out Various Problems and Work for Efficiency

BELIEVING that a weekly meeting of all department heads for the frank discussion of all annoyances and difficulties that have come up in the course of picture production will result in a closer co-operation, a better understanding and a general, all-around feeling of confidence, Ray Rockett, studio manager of First National's Eastern production units, has inaugurated a round table at this organization's New York studios.

Here once each week all the department heads meet and lunch together and thresh out their various problems in a way that is rapidly greasing the production wheels and is welding the organization into what might be termed a big, happy family working zealously and earnestly for efficiency and the welfare of the organization.

"In any studio you will always find many little troubles that are often too small to warrant a department head carrying them to the general manager," says Rockett in commenting on his method. "But sometimes, if left to develop some of these grow into annoyances that in the end will be big ones and perhaps cause ill feelings or retard production and make themselves felt generally. Difficulties and problems too trivial to make an issue of are bound to come up with so many people working to their limit of capacity. There is no place where they may be brought up and discussed so satisfactorily as over the lunch table.

"Oftentimes a department head may have an idea or suggestion to make which eventually may save thousands of dollars. It may seem so trivial to him at the time that he does not like to come to the manager's office. But over the lunch table he will speak of it and the entire oragnization will benefit.

Greater Efficiency Will Result

"In my opinion there is nothing that will make for complete confidence and close co-operation quite so well as a weekly gathering such as this. It establishes a spirit of friendliness and intimacy among the department heads that is a vital necessity. It gives the head of one department an insight into the problems of the other departments. And the social side is a factor that is a big one, too."

Harry Warner Makes Dolores Costello A Star

HARRY M. WARNER, who arrived from the coast last week, remained in New York long enough to attend the opening of "The Sea Beast" at the Warner Theatre Friday, January 15, and with Motley H. Flint, Los Angeles banker, sailed the next day for Europe on a six weeks' trip of the Warner exchanges in England and on the Continent.

Mr. Warner's trip abroad, he stated, was to see that Warner pictures were given the best distribution possible in Europe and to arrange for the super-specials that are to be part of the production schedule of his company for the next season. This schedule he said was about ready and an announcement would be made in a few days.

In relation to the company's operations next season, he also stated that there would be several new faces among the Warner Bros.' stars and he was happy to state that Dolores Costello would be elevated to stellar honors. Miss Costello he considered one of the real finds of Warner Bros. and pointed to her work in "The Sea Beast" and to the unanimous praise she has won for her work in the pictures of other companies who have borrowed her for special roles. Miss Costello, he said, is a Warner Bros. discovery and the company expects to use her to the best advantage, placing her in productions where she will be of the most value to exhibitors.

Mr. Warner will return from Europe on March 2 and will spend most of his time on the coast.

Rowland Gives Balboni Long Term Contract

Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National Pictures, was so impressed by the work of Balboni in directing "The Far Cry," the first of his productions for First National, that he has placed the young Italian director under a long term contract, according to a wire just received from Hollywood.

From past training and achievements, Balboni appears to be ideally equipped to handle big productions for the screen. First, as a cameraman, he gained an enviable reputation, then as an assistant director he contributed much to pictures such as "The Viennese Medley" and now as a director of "The Far Cry" he has displayed a rare aptitude for picture work.

Bessie Love in "Lovey Mary"

Bessie Love, noted film player who recently returned from Europe, was signed by Mr. Mayer to appear in Irving Thalberg's production of "Lovey Mary" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

In "Lovey Mary," the widely read novel by Alice Hegan Rice, Miss Love will play under the skilled direction of Harry Millarde. Agnes Christine Johnson wrote the continuity for this popular story.

Lois Moran Has Lead Feminine Role In "Padlocked"

ONE of the biggest roles in the Paramount production schedule for next season has been awarded to Lois Moran, it was announced yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky.

Miss Moran, who has just finished playing opposite Richard Barthelmess in "Just Suppose," will have the leading feminine part in "Padlocked," Rex Beach's story, which is shortly to be published in book form.

"Padlocked," which is a story of a young girl who is the daughter of a fanatical reformer, will be directed by Allan Dwan and production will begin at the Lasky Studio in Hollywood January 25.

Kane Buys Current Post Serial by Stringer

ROBERT T. KANE has purchased "The Wilderness Woman" by Arthur Stringer, a serial beginning in the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post. The serial will run through two more issues of that magazine.

"The Wilderness Woman" was greatly sought after by all the leading producers. By the author of "Manhandled" and "Womanhandled," it reveals the story of a young woman from the north woods, utterly unacquainted with the world of civilization. The drama arises from her contact with modern society, following an almost unbelievable rise to affluence.

Judges of stories pictorial claim that "The Wilderness Woman" will make as great entertainment as did "Manhandled." Mr. Kane will put the story in production at an early date at the Cosmopolitan studio. It will be a First National release.

De Mille Ready to Produce "Silence"

With the screen adaptation of "Silence," Max Marion's mystery melodrama, in the hands of the DeMille production department and preliminary arrangements for the filming completed, actual work on the production will commence within a few days.

H. B. Warner, star of the original New York state presentation, who was brought to the Coast by DeMille for the featured role of the screen version, is now finishing an engagement with Metropolitan Pictures, in "Whispering Smith," and will be ready to start work in "Silence" when called back to the De Mille studio.

Rupert Julian, whose most recent directorial effort for DeMille was "Three Faces East," will direct. The supporting cast has not yet been definitely decided upon.

Raboch Renews Contract

Al Raboch, for some time past a member of the directorial staff at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, has been placed under a new contract to the big studio, according to an announcement given out by Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production.

HE'S HIS OWN LAWYER, is "Warren," in the William Fox comedy, "His Own Lawyer," which is another of the now famous "Helen and Warren" comedies.

Peak of Midwinter Production Reached at M-G-M Studios

Big Schedule Planned That Will Keep Production Department Busy for Months to Come; Other Units Will Be Added to Take Care of Demand

WITHIN the next two or three weeks Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will reach the peak of midwinter production, with practically every unit busy. The big Culver City plant will see greater activity than ever before. An unusually elaborate schedule has been mapped out that will keep the production department working steadily for several months to come.

In addition to the units already at work, or preparing to begin filming, there will, in all probability be several other units added to take care of the productions demanded by the M-G-M schedule.

The first two directors to get under way will be Jack Conway, with "Brown of Harvard," and Archie Mayo, with the Rupert Hughes story, "Money Talks." The Rida Johnson Young story was adapted by Dorothy Farnum with continuity by A. P. Younger. Conway is now lining up his cast with no names announced as yet. Claire Windsor and Owen Moore has been cast for the leads in "Money Talks," the scenario for which was prepared by Frederic and Fanny Hatton.

Tod Browning will start on "The Four Stragglers," by Frank L. Packard, author of "The Miracle Man." Leon Abrams is scheduled to begin "Nocturne," by Frank Swinnerton. Both directors are now casting.

Victor Seastrom is preparing to begin filming "The Scarlet Letter," with Lillian Gish starred. King Vidor starts "Bardleys the Magnificent," starring John Gilbert, in two weeks. This will be filmed in Technicolor and Dorothy Farnum prepared the scenario from Sabatini's story.

Marcel DeSano soon will start on "In Praise of James Carabine," by Donn Byrne, and Mauritz Stiller is ready to begin on the Cosmopolitan production of "The Temptress," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez. Antonio Moreno will play the male lead.

John M. Stahl is scheduled to start his initial production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, within a short time. It will be "King Toto" with Lew Cody. Hobart Henley and Al Raboch are both trying to decide between several potential vehicles. Robert Z. Leonard will be back on the M-G-M lot to begin another picture as soon as he completes the production of Corinne Griffith in "Mme. Modest."

Monta Bell is fast completing his preliminary plans for the production of "Charm," adapted from the play by John Alexander Kirpatrick by Alice D. G. Miller.

Service to Exhibitors Basis of F. B. O. Sales Policy, Says Marcus

Making Plans for Company's Biggest Year, Must Not Overlook the Small Town Showmen, Have Productions Suitable for All Types of Theatres

WHILE F. B. O. is making preparation for next year in the expectation that it will be the biggest in the history of the company, with production plans and sales policies already under discussion, an important factor in its plans as a distributor is an extension of its service to the exhibitor.

Lee Marcus, General Sales Manager of F. B. O. commented on this phase of the company's plans before leaving New York for a tour of the company's exchanges:

"Today the attention of the entire industry is being focussed on big theatres. Trade journals and kindred publications of the picture industry are devoting their contents almost exclusively to stories of big theatre amalgamations and combines. The general press of the country is also carrying in detail stories of big theatre operations.

"During this period of big theatre mergers, national and international, the industry must not neglect the small town exhibitor. There still are thousands of theatres serving small rural communities, and surely these small theatres are entitled to service. F. B. O. pledges itself to give the small theatre owner the same excellent quality of service that we always have offered. We will have box-office attractions suitable for the small theatre as well as the large. F. B. O. realizes, that the thousands of small theatres scattered through the country, in the early days formed the backbone of what now is one of the greatest industries in the world, and we feel it our duty to see the little fellow is not neglected.

"People in small towns crave amusement just as much as their more sophisticated brothers and sisters in the larger centers of population. Since the motion picture is practically their sole source of recreation, it is the duty of everyone in the industry to see that the smaller communities are provided with entertainment. The industry must provide service at all times for these small town theatres on a basis that will enable the theatre owner to keep open his doors.

"F. B. O. has made in the past, and will make in the future a determined effort to provide every small town theatre with suitable box-office attractions, and above all SERVICE."

Hamilton in Universal Picture

Mark Hamilton, well known character actor and comedian, has been signed for a supporting role in "Chip of The Flying U," the popular novel by B. M. Bower in which Hoot Gibson is being starred by Universal. Lynn Reynolds is directing the picture, and the supporting cast includes Virginia Brown Faire, Philo McCullough, Harry Todd and others.

THE LEFT ONE OF THE TWO is the middle one of the three —Joan Crawford, "Irene" of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Sally, Irene and Mary." That's Douglas Gillmore with her.

OLIVE BORDEN
Did so well opposite Tom Mix in "The Yankee Senor" that William Fox has placed her under a long-term contract —and she will star in "Yellow Fingers," on the Fox schedule, and one of the big ones.

"Don Juan" Completed Barrymore to Start "Tavern Knight"

PRODUCTION work on "Don Juan," the big special on which John Barrymore began work as soon as "The Sea Beast" was finished, ended a few days ago at Warner Bros.' West Coast Studios, and the star left immediately for a brief vacation.

On Barrymore's return to Los Angeles, probably late this month, he will start "The Tavern Knight." Both these productions are to be on the Warner, 1925-26 schedule of releases. Because of her highly commendable work in preparing the scenarios of "The Sea Beast" and "Don Juan," Bennie Zeidman selected Bess Meredyth to perform the same task for the next Barrymore picture and she is now busily engaged, with the assistance of Maude Fulton and the entire research department at the studios.

"The Tavern Knight" is regarded by many as the greatest and most fascinating of Rafael Sabatini's novels. It is quite as adaptable to film purposes as were "Captain Blood" and "The Sea Hawk," both memorable screen successes, and, with the dash and color of its old world settings, is a splendid vehicle for John Barrymore.

Gloria Swanson's Next To Be "Fine Manners"

Gloria Swanson's next production for Paramount will be "Fine Manners," an original story by James Ashmore Creelman, it has just been announced by William LeBaron, associate producer in charge at the Long Island Studio. Eugene O'Brien is to have the leading male role.

Mr. Creelman is also adapting the story to the screen in collaboration with Townsend Martin, who is to be the supervising editor. It has a background of modern society life.

MARCELINE DAY
Will lend her charm to Principal Pictures Corporation's "The Winning of Barbara Worth," which United Artists will release from the Harold Bell Wright novel.

Constance Talmadge's Next Story Is Now Titled "Silky Anne"

AN original story by Edward Clark, temporarily titled "Silky Anne," has been selected as the next starring vehicle for Constance Talmadge for the First National program, according to an announcement just received from the office of that company.

The screen adaptation of "Silky Anne" is being made by Raymond L. Schrock and Edward Clark. Sidney Franklin will direct.

Miss Talmadge has been peculiarly fortunate in her last few pictures, notably "Her Night of Romance" and "Her Sister from Paris," and it is probable that she will continue for the time being to give portrayals in a similar comedy vein. The story in preparation now profits by the colorful atmosphere which provides such an appropriate setting for Miss Talmadge.

"The Vanishing American" Grosses Over $10,000

"The Vanishing American," Paramount's epic of the Indian, seems destined to follow in the footsteps of "The Ten Commandments" as a money maker.

At the Princess Theatre, Toledo, O., the picture grossed more than $10,000. Richard Dix, Lois Wilson and Noah Beery are the featured players in this special, which was directed by George B. Seitz.

Books F. B. O. Gold Bonds

L. E. Harrington, manager of the F. B. O. exchange at Dallas, has sold "When Love Grows Cold," "A Poor Girl's Romance," "Flaming Waters," "The Midnight Flyer," "Parisian Nights," "If Marriage Fails," and "Lilies of the Streets," to S. Charminsky of the State Amusement Company for early showing at Pantages Theatre, Dallas.

Sol Lesser and Hiram Abrams Confer on Principal Release

"The Winning of Barbara Worth" Heads Schedule; Marceline Day Selected for the Featured Role; Charles Brabin Will Direct H. B. Wright's Story

SOL LESSER, president of Principal Pictures Corporation, has been in New York for several days in conference with Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, in regard to product which Principal is to distribute through the latter organization.

The first big production from Principal scheduled for United Artists release is the Harold Bell Wright novel, "The Winning of Barbara Worth," which is to be filmed in a most pretentious manner.

Mr. Lesser has just chosen the featured lead for this story in Marceline Day, an unusually promising young actress.

The picture will be filmed largely in the Imperial Valley of California where the action of the novel is laid. Charles Brabin is to direct.

It is forecast by Mr. Lesser that "The Winning of Barbara Worth" will be produced without limitations of any resource that will lend impressiveness to the interpretation of this literary "best seller." In fact, Principal Pictures is expected to outdo itself in the preparation of this, its first release for United Artists.

Sally Rand in "Red Dice"

Sally Rand has been added to the supporting cast of "Red Dice" which already includes such prominent players as Marguerite De La Motte, Gustave von Seyfertitz, Ray Hallor, George Cooper, Alan Brooks, Walter Long, and Clarence Burton in addition to Rod La Rocque, the star. William K. Howard is directing the picture under Jennie Macpherson's supervision.

Starts "Old Army Game"

W. C. Fields will begin work in "The Old Army Game," his first starring picture for Paramount, about February 15, it was announced today by William LeBaron, associate producer in charge at the Long Island Studio. Edward Sutherland will direct and Clara Bow will play opposite Fields. Most of the scenes will be made in Florida.

Luther Reed has finished the screen play based on J. P. McEvoy's stage production, "The Comic Supplement." Thomas J. Geraghty, who has supervised most of the recent Meighan pictures, will be supervisor of this production.

Schenck and Goldwyn To Do "The Garden of Allah"

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK and Samuel Goldwyn have united their production forces to produce a mammoth picturization of the famous Robert Hichens novel, "The Garden of Allah." Norma Talmadge will star in the production and Ronald Colman, from the Goldwyn organization, will play opposite her. Henry King will direct the picture from a scenario to be prepared by Frances Marion. According to the plans of the two producers, the love interest in the picture will be intensified more vividly than in the novel.

The picture rights of the novel are owned by Mr. Schenck and he and Mr. Goldwyn will produce the picture in Egypt and Northern Africa, the exact locale of the story. The production will start in September with Biskra the center of operation. "The Garden of Allah" will be a United Artists special.

"WIVES AT AUCTION," the second Bernarr Macfadden True Story Picture, with Edna Murphy and Gaston Glass, directed by Elmer Clifton, will reach, within a fortnight or so, the screens of leading theatres. The story is an adaptation from True Story Magazine.

Chaney to Remain with M-G-M; Big Films Planned

Last week Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, announced his organization had exercised the option which extends Lon Chaney's contract and that the popular star would be with the company for some long time to come.

Mr. Mayer likewise announced that plans were now being perfected whereby Chaney would appear in a series of notable productions which will afford him even greater opportunities than he had in such pictures as "The Unholy Three," "The Tower of Lies" and his latest, "The Black Bird," to be released January 11.

Chadwick Releases "Sweet Adeline" Generally

"SWEET ADELINE," Chadwick Pictures Corporation's film version of the popular ballad of the same name, featuring Charles Ray, is released generally, following a series of prerelease showings in all of the Keith-Albee houses in the New York territory. "Sweet Adeline" was written especially for Ray by Charles E. Banks, who also wrote "Some Pun'kins," Ray's first Chadwick picture of the season. Jerome Storm personally directed the production.

Gertrude Olmstead is said to have one of the best roles of her career in the title part of "Sweet Adeline." Gertrude Short, one of the most promising younger actresses of the screen, plays an important comedy role. Other well known players in the cast are Sybil Johnson, Jack Clifford, J. P. Lockney and Ida Lewis.

Nagel Signs New Contract

Conrad Nagel, the popular Metro-Goldwyn Mayer stock player, has signed a new contract with that corporation according to announcement by Mr. Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios.

Menjou Chosen for Role of Satan in Coming Griffith Film

ADOLPHE MENJOU has been chosen for the role of Satan in D. W. Griffith's next Paramount production, "The Sorrows of Satan," it was announced by Jesse L. Lasky. This ends a six-weeks search for an actor who could fill the exacting requirements laid down by Mr. Griffith in his plans for the filming of Marie Corelli's famous book.

Screen tests have been made of more than a dozen of the best known actors in America considered suitable for the part, and for many days Mr. Griffith has been screening old films of would-be candidates for the role.

Several days ago Mr. Griffith decided that he wanted Mr. Menjou, but was not certain that he would be able to secure his services, as he is now completing "A Special Celebrity" under the direction of Mal St. Clair and has been planning to begin work early next month in "The Ace of Cads," a Michael Arlen story. William LeBaron, associate producer in charge at the Long Island Studio, rearranged the production schedule so that Mr. Menjou could work first in "The Sorrows of Satan."

Thalberg Signs Millarde

Harry Millarde, famous director, has signed a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, according to announcement by Irving Thalberg, associate studio executive, and will direct "Lovey Mary."

Mr. Millarde is known for his work on "Over the Hill" and "If Winter Comes" and other successes.

"Lovey Mary" was adapted by Agnes Christine Johnson from the widely read novel by Alice Hegan Rice. No cast has been announced for this production as yet.

Julian to Start "Silence"

Rupert Julian, director of "Three Faces East" for De Mille, will start shortly after the first of the year on "Silence," adapted from Max Marcin's powerful play. The picture will feature H. H. Warner. It will be produced at the De Mille studio for release by Producers Distributing Corp.

IN ADDITION to the studio space used at the Metropolitan studios for Gotham Productions, Sam Sax has contracted with the Film Booking Offices, Inc., for the use of studio space at their large Hollywood studios for a second production unit which will start work in February.

By the middle of February Mr. Sax will have four distinct production units at work at the same time. The first company will finish up the three remaining subjects on the 1925-26 Gotham program of twelve, the subject to be completed being, "Hearts and Spangles" "Racing Blood" and "The Sign of the Claw."

Unit number two which will start at the F. B. O. studios will start work on the "Golden Web" the E. Phillips Oppenheim story which is scheduled as the first of what will be known as "Greater Gotham Productions."

Publix School for Managers Graduates Its Initial Class

Group of Thoroughly Trained Men Is Turned Out with Finishing Touches in the De Luxe Theatres; Intensive Courses Given Under John F. Barry

By Epes W. Sargent

JANUARY 15 marked the end of the classroom courses of the institution originally known as the Paramount Training School for Theatre Managers, but now designated as a Publix enterprise. There were no formal graduation exercises, but a dinner at the Hotel Roosevelt was tendered the graduates by the corporation, at which A. M. Botsford, Director of Advertising, was toastmaster and speeches were made by Sam Katz, Harold B. Franklin, Harry Marx, George Weeks and John F. Barry.

One member of the class went to the Fenway Theatre, Boston, with others taking charge of the Scollay Square, Washington Street, Olympia and Fields' Corner Theatres in the same city. Others have been assigned to Publix theatres in New Haven, Haverhill and New Bedford, Mass., and West Palm Beach. One man has gone to a Paramount exchange for training in practical exploitation before going to an assignment in South America, two men have been sent to the home office of Publix; one in the Statistical and the other in the Advertising Department, and the others have been divided between the Metropolitan Theatre, Boston, and the Balaban and Katz Theatres in Chicago for an additional two weeks' practical work before going to their assigned

When it was announced that Paramount was about to open a training school for managers, it was generally regarded as an exploitation gesture. Even the most hopeful pointed out that managers are born rather than made. The scheme was to select a class of promising material and give the members six months of theoretical and practical training, and few believed that qualified men could be turned out within a short time.

Just what the ultimate result will be time alone can tell, but what the Public Corporation itself thinks of the idea is best expressed by Sam Katz in the words: "The Publix Theatre Managers Training School is one of the most important divisions in the organization of Publix Theatres."

Time alone can tell, but those who have had opportunity to come in contact with the first class are inclined to share Mr. Katz's opinion. Certainly it is the most promising experiment ever made in the direction of better management.

That this is so is very largely due to the tireless work of the director of the school, John F. Barry. In less able hands the students might have been put through a perfunctory course which would lead to no particular end, but the originators were fortunate in obtaining the services of a man who would put heart and soul into the work. It is no disparagement to the others to say that ninety per cent of the result is directly attributable to Mr. Barry.

Offices and classroom were established in the New York Theatre building, where most of the lectures have been given. This is fitted with a small stage and screen, provided with a projection machine and much of the other apparatus used in theatres, and here lectures have been given by the school instructors and experts in every line of theatre conduct.

In addition to the classroom work, laboratory work has been done at the Rivoli and other theatres, where the students have taken their turn as ushers and as assistants in every division of the house, each man getting his practical experience in every department.

Following the historical portion of the course; the origin and growth of the picture, there came practical demonstration of distribution, exchange handling and booking which traced the course of the film from the studio to the theatre projection room.

Theatres were studied as to site, type, and in their relation to the various communities, and in this connection there was a brief course in public speaking, that the prospective manager might appear before his patrons to the best advantage.

House service was taken up in its various branches, with courses on music, house conduct, presentations and prologues, program building, the creation of good-will and accounting.

Publicity was taken up in its various phases of exploitation, newspaper and program work, lithography, the utilization of accessories and other branches.

In each course the school instructors were supplemented by guest speakers, and practical demonstration. In studying cuts, for example, the pupils were taken through an engraving and electrotyping plant, where every process was explained and demonstrated. An entire week was spent at the Edison Lighting Institute, in Harrison, N. J., where every phase of lighting was gone into from the angles of house, stage and sign work. Supplementing the latter branch there was a survey of the electric signs on Broadway under the guidance of an expert with lectures and demonstrations on the installation and upkeep of signs.

There were practical courses in advertising layout and exploitation campaigns under the guidance of the Publix experts, and there was even a talk by one of the leading typographers, who prepares the magazine displays for some of the largest national advertisers.

A course in projection included the actual handling of the machine by every pupil, who was required to thread, focus and go through the entire routine of projection.

There was a demonstration in organ maintenance and music at the Wurlitzer Auditorium, and a practical insight into mat making and other things was gained at the plant of the Western Newspaper Union.

The amusement pages of thirty newspapers from representative cities were studied each week, as were all the trade papers, and all this was supplemented by a varied course of reading.

Out of several hundred applicants only the most promising material was selected; mainly through personal interviews, and the result is that some thirty men have been added to the Publix staff who possess a fund of practical knowledge that is enjoyed by few old-time managers. They are thoroughly grounded in every division of their work and they carry to their tasks the combined knowledge of more than half a hundred men, each a leader in his particular line.

It is one of the most forward strides taken in the exhibition end of the motion picture business from its inception, and it will be far reaching in its results, for not only will these men avoid the mistakes common to the novice, but they will establish standards to which the entire business eventually must conform. With a less conscientious director another story might have been written, but John F. Barry has fully realized the highest ideals of Harold B. Franklin, to whom the inception of the idea is accredited.

A second class will go into training February 20.

Meredith With Walsh

Joan Meredith, 1925 Wampas baby star, who is under contract to Chadwick Pictures Corporation, will be seen in a prominent role in "The Test of Donald Norton," George Walsh's latest production for that company. Miss Meredith, who is generally looked upon as one of the "finds" of last year, has appeared in several recent Chadwick pictures, including "Blue Blood," "The Perfect Clown" and "The Count of Luxembourg." The balance of the cast of "The Test of Donald Norton" will be announced next week. Reeves Eason, who directed the chariot race squence of "Ben Hur," will direct the production under the personal direction of Jesse J. Goldberg.

"The Greatest Show on Earth" To be Produced by Paramount

Monte Katterjohn Writes Story on Life Of P. T. Barnum; Werner's Biography Will Supplement Scenarist's Version

TWO years' research into the life of P. T. Barnum, is at last to bear fruit on the screen as a Paramount picture, it was announced by Jesse L. Lasky.

The picture will be called "The Gr eatest Show on Earth" and will be a screen version of a story on Barnum written by Monte Katterjohn, who was commissioned by Mr. Lasky more than two years ago to study the life of Barnum and put into scenario form the amazing episodes in the career of the great showman.

To supplement Mr. Katterjohn's story with additional biographical material Mr. Lasky announced that Paramount had purchased the screen rights to W. L. Werner's biography, "Barnum," published two years ago.

Indicating that plans for the early production of the picture were going forward with a rush Mr. Lasky said that Wallace Beery had been chosen to bring to the screen the personality of Barnum and that Mr. Beery would arrive in New York Sunday to discuss the part with Mr. Lasky and Mr. Katterjohn.

"Having spent most of my adult life in the show business," said Mr. Lasky, "I naturally have always been interested in the personality and exploits of the greatest showman that ever lived. Several years ago I had the idea of making a picture around Barnum's life. However, I could not find anybody at the time who was sufficiently conversant with Barnum's life and who was sufficiently imbued with the idea to write a story. About two years ago Monte Katterjohn, who has been with this company for years as a scenario writer, revealed to me that he had been studying the life of Barnum with a view of making a screen story of it. He was just the man I was looking for, so I told him to go ahead and write the story, but not to bring it to me until the screen story showed the real Barnum.

"Mr. Katterjohn turned in his story several months ago and it was the most complete, most human picture of Barnum I had ever read. We were all enthusisastic about it and were eager to put it into production right away. But almost immediately we were faced with the great difficulty of getting the right actor to interpret the role of Barnum. We canvassed the entire field, and found that the only motion picture actor in the world who could do complete justice to the character of Barnum as written by Mr. Katterjohn and as revealed in the numerous biographies of the showman was Wallace Beery. Unfortunately, however, Mr. Beery was not available at that time so we were obliged to defer production until now.

"Inasmuch as Mr. Werner's biography contained stories of one or two episodes in Barnum's life which we wanted for our picture we decided to buy the screen rights to his book and thus supplement Mr. Katterjohn's story."

First National's Broadcast of Films Pronounced Big Success

One Production a Week to Be Put on the Air Through Station WJZ; Arrangement Calls For Specially Prepared Treatment of Story

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES, INC., in conjunction with Station WJZ of the Radio Corporation of America, has introduced a unique motion picture-radio tie-up, the effects of which are being watched with the greatest interest. Executives of both First National and the radio company are confident that they have hit upon a broadcasting plan of tremendous popular appeal. It should result in nation-wide publicity of the most effective character for the First National product. The first picture to be broadcast by WJZ was "Too Much Money" at 8:30 o'clock last Thursday evening.

The following day thousands of wires expressing approval were received at WJZ Station from all parts of the country. First Nation executives report that the first responses from exhibitors are highly favorable but that it is too soon yet to get the full reaction from the country at large as exhibitors have not had a chance to test the effect of the broadcast at their box offices. According to conservative estimates, WJZ reaches an audience of fifteen millions.

The arrangement between First National and the Radio Corporation calls for the broadcasting of a specially prepared treatment of the story of each production on the Thursday preceding the week of its release, thus giving first run exhibitors full benefit of the publicity for their Sunday openings. The hour will always be 8:30 in order that radio fans may count on tuning in at that time, for the radioized version of the story running approximately twenty-five minutes. "Just Suppose," starring Richard Barthelmess, is the next picture to be exploited in this way. It will be broadcast January 21 and shown by first run exhibitors on the 24th. The following week "Memory Lane" is scheduled.

A dress rehearsal of the broadcasting of "Too Much Money," held at the Hotel Astor, New York, last Wednesday evening, January 13, was attended by prominent representatives of magazines and newspapers and executives of the Radio Corporation, as well as First National Pictures and allied producers. Following an informal dinner, at which addresses explaining the scope and purpose of the innovation were delivered by

To Make "Kid Boots" With Cantor in Stellar Role

WHILE Edward Sutherland is in Chicago to confer with W. C. Fields, comedian in Ziegfeld's Follies whom he will direct in "It's the Old Army Game," he will consult also another Ziegfeld star, Eddie Cantor, now appearing in "Kid Boots."

The long-run musical comedy will be transferred to the screen as a Paramount picture, to be started at the Long Island studio early in the summer, with Sutherland at the megaphone and Cantor duplicating his stage role in films. Townsend Martin, who is to supervise "Kid Boots," is also in Chicago with the director and the star.

Colonel C. F. Davis, Harold T. Melhuish of the Radio Corporation and Samuel Spring, representing First National, "Too Much Money" was broadcast for the benefit of the diners. An impromptu radio studio had been erected in an adjoining room of the hotel in which the broadcasters enacted the roles before a microphone that sent the sound waves only across the hall into a loud speaker in the dining room.

In the treatment accorded "Too Much Money," an adaptation of the play of the same title by Israel Zangwill in which Lewis Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson are co-featured, four characters were introduced in a scene with which the story stars and which affords the impetus for subsequent action. The dialogue was cleverly devised to give an idea of the characters concerned and to build up a dramatic situation, leaving the audience in doubt, however, as to the outcome. The radioized version of "Too Much Money" carried the appeal of a one-act dramatic sketch, but care was taken to pique the interest in order that listeners-in- would want to follow the story in its complete form on the screen. Orchestra music was made a natural background for the dialogue.

No special form will be followed in the handling of subsequent stories, the idea being to find a treatment most suitable to each. The greatest care is being taken in the preparation of the scripts, which will be presented by actors skilled in talking over the radio.

The broadcasting of "Too Much Money" was pronounced a signal success by officials of First National and the Radio Corporation. Among those at the speakers' table at the dress rehearsal dinner were: Robert Lieber, Samuel Spring, Spyrous Skouras, Mrs. Florence Strauss, Ralph Day, J. Boyce Smith, Lois Moran, Harry Ham, Colonel C. F. Davis, Elmer E. Bucher, Johnny Hines, C. C. Burr, Capt. Howard Angus and Charles B. Popanoe.

McKenzie Scenario Head of Joe Rock Productions

Bob McKenzie, well known screen writer and "gag" man, has been named to head the scenario department of Joe Rock Productions. Besides writing original stories for the Standard and Blue Ribbon fun films produced by Rock, McKenzie will pass on all story material submitted to this producer by freelance writers. Before joining Rock, the well known scenarist was identified with Universal for a number of years. The Joe Rock productions are being distributed by F. B. O.

"Tall Tower Topics" Gives Tall Tribute

AN estimate of her work in motion pictures, expressed by an editorial writer in the Waterbury, Conn., Democrat, has greatly pleased Mary Pickford. The article, written by E. Christie Erk, in his department, "Tall Tower Topics," for the Democrat, is a tribute such as is seldom accorded motion picture stars, and is especially weighty in that it is an appreciation of basic worth from a department of a newspaper that is not usually responsive to motion pictures. The article is believed to reflect that unwavering approval of Mary Pickford's efforts which makes her strong as a rock with her public.

"Mary Pickford has the soul of an artist," writes The Man in the Tower. "Which means when she makes a picture, the gods bow in adoration. "Little Annie Rooney," in which the ever delightful Mary played this week at the Rialto, threw us back again time and again to Chaplin's 'The Gold Rush.' We see in Mary as we do in Charley, the creative genius, the originator of ideas, thoughts. Where Pickford and Chaplin create, the other not so luminuous stars imitate. They are guilty of celluloid plagiarism, if you will. In order to enjoy 'Little Annie Rooney' and 'The Gold Rush' one has to realize the beautiful way in which these two master builders constructed their vehicle. Comedy and pathos, the twins of humanity, are apparent in both productions. And just as Chaplain prepared the holiday supper for the chorus queens of the Klondike dance hall, so Mary sets the candled cake in honor of her dad's birthday. The chorus queens didn't come to sup with Charley and his castle of dreams went out with the tidal waves of despair. Mary's 'popsy' doesn't come home to see the pretty candled cake and receive the tie she knitted for him. In Mary's own words, 'He's not coming home—no, never,' give us that tug at the heart strings and forces us to tighten the tear ducts to escape being sentimental. In her case death removes—in Chaplin's irresponsive minds. But it might have been death up there in the Klondike, so keen was the sorrow. It is really remarkable, the simple sweetness and purity that runs through a Chaplin and Pickford production. There is never the third man in the American home, the supposed to be forgotten wife of the financier selling herself to the 'heavy man' for a few hours' pleasure. Rather do Pickford and Chaplin go deeper into the real strata of America, to show characters that so singularly belong to us, those intrepid minds that were baptised by the same spirit that rode in the pony express and nursed the new born babe under the cover of the covered wagon. So long as the American screen has a Chaplin and a Pickford and a few others, just so long will movies appeal to the appetites of amusement lovers."

"Sons of the Sheik," Valentino's Next

RUDOLPH VALENTINO'S next starring photoplay will be "The Sons of the Sheik." Joseph M. Schenck, mentor of Valentino's productions, has just acquired the new novel by E. M. Hull, author of "The Sheik." He has also cabled Valentino to curtail his European tour as much as possible, since work on the new picture is to begin February 15th.

Decision in favor of "The Sons of the Sheik" followed a world-wide canvass of theatregoers through executives of United Artists Corporation. Fans were asked whether they preferred the star to play next in a story similar to "The Sheik" or "Blood and Sand" or "The Four Horsemen" or "The Eagle."

"More than ninety per cent. of the replies," says Mr. Schenck, "favor Mr. Valentino appearing again as a hero like 'The Eagle.' We immediately opened negotiations for Miss Hull's newest novel, and were fortunate in obtaining it."

John W. Considine, Jr., producer of "The Eagle," the current starring picture of Valentino, will produce "The Sons of the Sheik." He hails the story as the logical successor to the tremendously popular "The Sheik." Like "The Sheik," the new novel is a story of love, action and adventure, and abounds in the romantically dramatic situations in which the theatregoers admire Valentino most. It was expressly written as a sequel to "The Sheik," and its hero is one of the second generation of the dashing tribesman who was impersonated by Valentino in the earlier story for the screen.

Metropolitan Buys Current Big Serial

THE acquisition of story material of more than usual interest was recorded this week in the purchase of George Agnew Chamberlain's new, six-part serial, "Man Alone," for production as a Metropolitan Picture, to be released through Producers Distribution Corporation.

"Man Alone" deals with the intricate and absorbing problem of domestic deception with the characters moving before a commercial background picturing the novel and intensely interesting glass making industry. The story is set in the southern part of New Jersey where an old glass mill employing obsolete methods of blowing and moulding glass is still in operation, while close by is a modern mill with the most up-to-date equipment. It is quite probable that Metropolitan Pictures in filming the story will send a company to the locale in the interest of securing absolutely authentic detail in recording these novel scenes.

The first of the six installments of "Man Alone" is published in this week's issue of the Saturday Evening Post and in March it will be published in book form by George Putnam.

"World of Promise" Title of Ford Picture

FOX FILMS' "3 Bad Men," John Ford's epic production which has been in the making for more than fifteen months, has been given another title and will be released as "The World of Promise," according to an official announcement just made by Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager, who has been on the West Coast for the past four months.

In a telegram to General Sales Manager James R. Grainger, Mr. Sheehan said he had looked at the practically completed Ford picture and with considerable emphasis predicted even greater success for "The World of Promise" than was accorded Ford's great picture, "The Iron Horse," acclaimed by many as the best picture of the present season. Only a few scenes remain to be filmed.

"Picture too big to have suggestion get abroad that its action centers around the activities of three bad men," wired Mr. Sheehan. "Picturization of story of early west contains too much of absolute historical value to have its magnitude dwarfed by a misleading title. 'The World of Promise' is true title for this great picture and you can believe me when I say it is beyond question the most stupendous effort Fox has made. It will reflect much credit on the picture industry as a whole."

The notable cast of screen stars chosen to play the important roles in "The World of Promise," includes George O'Brien, the handsome young athlete who leaped into fame as the result of his work in "The Iron Horse." O'Brien will play the leading male role in "The World of Promise" and principal among those supporting him are J. Farrell MacDonald, the inimitable Corporal Casey of "The Iron Horse," Tom Santschi and Frank Campeau. These three latter will portray the characters of the three bad men in the picture. Lou Tellegen will be seen in the leading heavy role. The principal feminine role was given to Olive Borden, one of the newest beauties of the screen, who has distinguished herself in a number of Fox special productions of the present season. Others in the cast include Alec B. Francis, Otis Harlan, Georgie Harris and Priscilla Bonner.

The principal exterior scenes in "The World of Promise" were made in the Jackson Hole section of Wyoming. More than three thousand Indians, one thousand cowboys and two thousand horses were employed in making the picturesque sequences which will bring the famous Jackson Hole section to the screen for the first time.

New Stromberg Pictures Under Way

ANNOUNCEMENT of the starting of several new productions comes from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Culver City, California.

Hunt Stromberg announces that "Monte Carlo," a satirical comedy with American tourists in Europe as the theme, will go into production this week. It is an original story by Carey Wilson with adaptation and continuity by Alice D. G. Miller. Christy Cabanne will direct and Lew Cody will play the leading male role.

Stromberg also announces that Archie Mayo will begin the direction of Rupert Hughes' "Money Talks", immediately after Christmas. The scenario was prepared by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. Claire Windsor and Conrad Nagel have the leading roles. "Money Talks" is a comedy of modern life, and treats of the advantages, as well as the disadvantages of extravagance.

Monta Bell's next picture for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, it is announced, will be "The Book of Charm", Alice D. G. Miller's adaptation of John Alexander Kirkpatrick's dramatic success. It is a comedy-drama of modern society. No casting has been done as yet.

David Torrence, as Mr. Wharton and Charles Clary, as Homer Lane, have been aded to the cast of Rex Beach's "The Auction lock," which is now being directed at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios by Hobart Henley. Charles Ray and Eleanor Boardman have the leading roles. The adaptation was made by Frederic and Fanny Hatton.

"THE GOLDEN STRAIN," the Fox-Peter B. Kyne picture, seems to offer a fanfare of musketry. But, after storm, sunshine follows inevitably, and, we guess, the golden strain then becomes love's own song. The players are Madge Bellamy, Kenneth Harlan, Hobart Bosworth, Ann Pennington, Frank Beal, Lawford Davidson and Frank McGlynn, Jr.

"ALOMA OF THE SOUTH SEAS" has Gilda Gray in the title role, with Percy Marmont, Warner Baxter, William Powell and Julienne Johnston in support. Paramount releases the picture.

Metropolitan Starts "Prince of Pilsen"

WITH the photographing of a number of lodge-room scenes depicting a riotous initiation ceremony of "Cincinnati Lodge No. 777 of the Royal and Loyal Order of Squirrels," actual production was started last week on "The Prince of Pilsen," A. H. Sebastian's current production to be made at the Metropolitan Studios in Hollywood under the direction of Paul Powell.

Appearing in the featured comedy role of Hans Wagner, the "Imperial Prince" of the lodge, is George Sidney, who has recently been co-starred with Alexander Carr in the two latest "Potash and Perlmutter" films, "Partners Again" and "Potash and Perlmutter in Hollywood." Sidney spent thirty years as a stage comedian, beginning his theatrical career as an entertainer in beer gardens, and later creating the Jewish character of Izzy Mark, which he played continuously for fourteen years. His first legitimate engagement was with Douglas Fairbanks in "The Show Shop."

Allan Forrest, whose recent appearance in the principal male part in the latest Sebastian production, "Fifth Avenue," served to increase his standing as a leading man of exceptional qualifications, has been cast for the leading romantic role of the Prince; in which he plays opposite Anita Stewart.

Miss Stewart, as already announced, plays the principal feminine role of Hans' daughter, having lately been placed under contract by Sebastian following her unusual success in the Cosmopolitan Production, "Never the Twain Shall Meet."

Maurice Sebastian continues as production manager of the company, and is now superintending the erection of an elaborate setting representing a street in the Bohemian village of Altheim.

Director Powell has W. von Brincken as his assistant, and photography is in charge of James C. Van Trees, with second camera operated by Ned Connor.

John Drew Enthuses Over "Sea Beast"

"IN all its phases the most wonderful picture I have ever seen." This is John Drew's opinion of "The Sea Beast," Warner Bros.' great special production starring John Barrymore, which was released January 15.

The veteran actor attended a private preview arranged for him by Warner Bros. a few days ago, and afterwards wrote a letter expressing his delight and admiration. That he considers the work of his nephew, John Barrymore, worthy the best traditions of the Drew and Barrymore families is evidenced by the fact that he expressed impatience for the arrival of the date of the premiere, when he purposes to see the film in company with his daughter, Louise Drew, and his niece, Ethel Barrymore.

In his letter to Warner Bros. Mr. Drew said:

"I was so thrilled by the exhibition of the picture, 'The Sea Beast,' which you were kind enough to show me, that I have wanted to write you and thank you for it.

"It is the most wonderful picture I have ever seen, in all its phases.

"I am looking forward with impatience to January 15, when I hope to see it again with my daughter, and my niece, Miss Barrymore.

"I am sure 'The Sea Beast' will be a great success."

Work on New Dean Film

With "The Danger Girl," Priscilla Dean's first picture under a new contract with Metropolitan, being edited in the cutting room, preparations are under way for her second vehicle. It will be "Forbidden Waters," an original story by Percy Heath, who is a member of the Metropolitan scenario staff. Charles A. Logue will prepare the scenario.

Directs "Sweet Sixteen"

Slim Summerville has started production of a new "Sweet Sixteen" comedy starring Arthur Lake at Universal City. It is titled "A Swell Affair" and it has to do with a case of mumps.

Universal Signs McDermott

Jack McDermott, well-known screen writer and comedy director, has been signed by Universal as a writer of feature comedies, according to Edward Montagne, scenario editor.

The addition of McDermott gives Universal the largest staff of comedy scenarists in Hollywood, and is in line with Carl Laemmle's plans to concentrate on comedies in his 1926 program.

Schnitzer Working on Next Season's Films

THE last week of the old year and the first of the new, found the F. B. O. Coast studios functioning at top speed with the production staff completing the current season's program in good order and the executive group headed by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president, assembling many big features for the season to come.

Emory Johnson is casting for his new melodrama which dramatizes the recent dash to Hawaii by the United States Navy. The naval authorities at San Diego are co-operating with the producer to insure the highest degree of realism in the production and the historic plane D. N. 9 will be seen in the photoplay.

The last day of the year signalized the completion of "The King of the Turf," F. B. O.'s new racing melodrama which James Hogan has directed. The story is by Louis Joseph Vance and John C. Brownell, and in the cast are Kenneth Harlan, Patsy Ruth Miller, Mary Carr, Eddie Phillips, David Kirby, George Irving and many others.

Still another important feature completed during the last week of the year was "The Tough Guy," in which Fred Thomson is being starred. The story is by Howard Clifton and David Kirkland directed. Lola Todd plays opposite the star and the latter's horse, Silver King, also has an important role.

Evelyn Brent has completed "Queen o' Diamonds," her last starring vehicle of the current season. She will shortly enter upon a new series of special productions which promise to elevate her still higher in the ranks of the screen stars. "Queen o' Diamonds" is a story of the New York show world which Chet Withey has directed. Theodore Von Eltz plays opposite the star.

Lefty Flynn, who has discarded the name Maurice, for good, has completed "The Traffic Cop," based on Gerald Beaumont's story, "The Kitten and the King." Flynn will doubtless appear in a number of other stories during the coming year.

Associated Arts Corp. has shipped to New York the master print of "Flaming Waters," a drama of the oil fields in which Mary Carr, Pauline Garon and Malcolm McGregor are featured. It is by E. Lloyd Sheldon.

Work is progressing on preparations for "A Poor Girl's Romance," another Laura Jean Libbey story. An all-star cast will be assembled for the production.

Plans are also being pushed for "The Isle of Retribution," another of F. B. O.'s Gold Bond specials for the current season. The director has not yet been chosen.

Richard Talmadge is shooting "The Night Patrol"; Tom Tyler is working on "Born to Battle" and Bob Custer is filming "The Half-Breed Hostler."

Alberta Vaughn and F. B. O.'s crack two-reel company has started the new Sam Hellman "Fighting Hearts" series with Al Cooke, Kit Guard, Larry Kent and Grant Withers in the cast.

Metropolitan Secretaries Toil Overtime

TWENTY-SEVEN secretaries are now busy on forthcoming releases for Producers Distributing Corporation at the Metropolitan Studios, taking dictation from the scenario staff headed by Jack Cunningham, for the scenarios of forthcoming pictures. Finis Fox, Percy Heath, Charles A. Logue, Elliott J. Clawson and Will M. Ritchey are each writing a script for a new production.

Finis Fox, who adapted "The Danger Girl" for Priscilla Dean from the stage play "The Bride" by George Middleton and Stewart Olivier, is now writing the screen version of "Shipwrecked" from the play by Langdon McCormick.

Elliott Clawson and Will M. Ritchey are preparing the adaptation and scenario of "Whispering Smith," from Frank H. Spearman's popular novel of the men who fought storm and steel to modernize the railroads across the Rockies. Clawson wrote the continuity for "Rocking Moon," recently filmed by Metropolitan in Alaska.

Percy Heath is writing "The Dice Woman" as his first picture under a new contract with Metropolitan. It will be a future starring production for Priscilla Dean and filmdom's celebrated woman scenarist, Frances Marion, is putting the finishing touches to the script of "Paris at Midnight."

To Direct "Fresh Paint"

Arthur Rosson has been signed to direct Raymond Griffith in his next starring comedy, "Fresh Paint," according to Hector Turnbull, associate Paramount producer in charge of the Raymond Griffith unit. Production will commence January 11.

Books F. B. O. Pictures

Eph Rosen, manager of the F. B. O. exchange at Minneapolis, has sold the series of 13 Standard Fat Men Comedies, the 13 Blue Ribbon comedies and the Bray Cartoons to the Orpheum Theatre, Duluth, Minn. The Orpheum, which is one of the largest first run houses in the country, will start to play these short subjects during January, Laugh Month.

Bessie Love Assigned Lead Role In "The Rainmaker"

Bessie Love left this week for California to play one of the principal roles in "The Rainmaker," a Gerald Beaumont racing story which Edward Sutherland will direct for Paramount.

This will be Miss Love's first part since her return from a recent European trip. Her latest appearance was in Herbert Brenon's production "The Song and Dance Man" in which the petite player was cofeatured with Tom Moore and Harrison Ford.

THE WAY OF A DOG WITH A MAID—"Thunder," the marvel dog, shares the honors with Betty Francisco, James Mason and Eddie Phillips in the Gotham picture, "The Phantom of the Forest."

George E. Planck Uses Electrical Show To Advertise Hines in The Live Wire

JOHNNY HINES in The Live Wire carries his own hook-up in the title of this lively farce. George E. Planck, of the Sedalia Theatre, Sedalia, Mo., saw the point and at an extra cost of about $25 he got a co-operative stunt that brought hundreds of people right into his lobby, while the free advertising alone represented several times this moderate cost.

The reproduction of his three sixes shows the small space he took in his own display for the special feature. It was all he needed to take, since the City Light and Traction Co. was giving him three tens in the same issues, with street car dash cards and a window display to boot.

THE LIVE WIRE AD

The theatre has a rest room opening on the lobby. Planck turned this over to the electric company to be used as a show and demonstration room for various labor saving devices and a display of its best floor and table lamps.

It was precisely the same display that the company had made week in and week out in its own showrooms, but moving the outfit over to the theatre and advertising it as an exposition, tying it in to a picture gave the same material a greater interest, and brought persons down to the theatre who never would have gone into the city's own showrooms.

The psychology is very simple. If they went to the store, they figured they would be importuned to buy. At an "exposition" they were supposed only to look. It was safer. And yet the display materially helped sales to these very people who were supposedly playing safe.

Another feature was the fact that the lamps showed to greater advantage in the tastefully decorated rest room. There was a better setting, and at the same time an electric washer in a parlor was more conspicuous than the same washer in a showroom.

There were no active demonstrations, but where it can be arranged a demonstration of the waffle irons and the percolators would help materially.

In addition to a three tens before and during the show, the electric company gave dash cards on all eight of the street cars. There are only eight to cover the town, but they cover it completely. Three thousand special heralds were printed, and there was a heavy window display to back up the theatre showing.

As a by-product hardware stores and other places also handling electrical equipment made minor displays with stills and window cards.

As a result of this extra work the theatre played to a better than usual business with the local stock company offering two-for-one tickets and in spite of bad weather.

And this was just before Christmas, too.

More Crown Jewels

E. P. Briggs, of the Rialto theatre, Pueblo, Col., used a display of the crown jewels of Princess Yetive, of Graustak, to put over Norma Talmadge, but he got a local insurance man to write a policy covering the gems, which was displayed in the window and did a lot toward getting attention. Even the newspapers gave the display a write up.

Local Lip Reader A Help to Tom Mix

Canton, Ohio, has a man who not only claims the gift of prophecy but is a lip reader. There are thousands of lip readers among the deaf and more, than one school where the art is taught, but the public does not know this and lip reading seems to be an uncanny gift.

A box exploitation man took advantage of this fact when he persuades the man to visit the Mozart Theatre and tell the world what Tom Mix and Clara Bow were saying in The Good Bad Man. It proved good for a column story and a two column cut with a three column head.

The "Marvel Man" reported that mostly the sub titles were spoken, though in the final close-up instead of the love making that registered on the screen, it was found tha tTom was suggesting to Clara that she needed a drink after her immersion in the cold water which pours from the blasted dam.

Some ten or twelve years ago there was a lot about the lip readers and the difference between what was said and what was supposed to be said, since when the players have been more careful. We wrote a story for the Eidson Company ni which the subtitles were all spoken in close-ups and prizes were awarded for the most accurate readings, but it's new stuff again, and can be used on any picture. Keep it in mind until you need a little publicity.

A Long Run

Most contests cover only a single week and a two weeks contest is unusual but in Philadelphia the News ran an Amateur Critic's Contest to cover 37 days.

One criticism of The Phantom of the Opera at the Aldine was printed each day and the best were awarded prizes at the end of the contest. With the preliminary notices this gave about 40 days of publicity for three small prizes.

THE SEDALIA THEATRE REST ROOM AS AN EXPOSITION

George E. Planck, of Sedalia, Mo., put over Johnnie Hines in "The Live Wire" with a live wire display of electric fixtures that brought him street car and newspaper advertising and hooked the title into a show of interest to women.

Meeting the Strike Situation in a Hard Coal Town

Meets the Situation In a Hard Coal Town

Clyde D. Klinger, of the Refowich Theatre, Freeland, Pa., in common with other managers in other towns in the hard coal mining region, has had to face a falling off in business during what they refer to locally as "the suspension."

During the strike the miners have little money for the theatre, and Mr. Klinger has issued "Suspension Tickets" good for a free admission when accompanied by a paid one every Wednesday night. The ostensible reason is a desire to boom the special features, but the miners know that Mr. Klinger is trying to make it easy for them and after the settlement is made and full prices go on, they will remember his thoughtful act and have a kindly feeling for the Refowich.

The tickets were put out through ten stores, one being given with every purchase. As a by-product, the ten merchants united in a four sixes in the daily paper.

This not only brought in good will, but it made an immediate improvement in the receipts and kept the miners and their families in the theatre-going habit. It's a novel idea handled to get the utmost in value, and we compliment Mr. Klinger.

Saved Printing

Recently a Universal publicity man got the idea of making passes for serials so large that they had to be carried like a banner. That was good at the time, but F. R. Cleaver, another Universal hustler, figured that it was capable of improvement. He sold the Record, of Alma, Mich., the idea of using this as a circulation stunt and the Record ran the banner in the shape of a three twelves, which had to be carried to the theatre unfolded.

It brought eleven hundred kids to the first episode of Ace of Spades and five hundred brought in for the second chapter.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

ENLARGED stages, new settings and drapes, and improved lighting equipment were introduced with "The Phantom of the Opera", inaugurating the theatre's Greater 1926 policy. For the occasion a program was devised which contained the feature film, running one hour and thirty minutes; the Topical Review, eight minutes; overture, eight minutes; a Gypsy Musicale, ten minutes, and scenes from "Faust", nine minutes. The complete show ran two hours and five minutes, with the music as outlined above requiring twenty-seven minutes of the time.

Each deluxe show was opened by the overture, "Home Sweet Home the World Over", by Famed Mark Strand Orchestra, being a composer's idea of how the melody might sound if written by musicians of other countries. Special film titles for each country were run upon the new screen, which was lighted, between the titles, by a varicolored Mestrum flood from the new bridge. With the new lighting apparatus nearly all lights are from the stage instead of from projection room and dome as formerly.

A Gypsy Musicale employed four girl violinists billed as Gypsy String Quartette, a male dancer and eight members of the ballet costumed as gypsies in keeping with the number. The setting had a landscape back drop with gypsy covered wagon to the foreground. Props included wagon, tent and tripod holding boiling kettle. Routine as follows: "Zigeunerweisen" (Sarasate) by violins; dance by men; "Gypsy Love Song" by bass-baritone, and "Second Hungarian Rhapsody" by ballet assisted by other characters. Lights went from sundown to night and near the finish 200 stars in the new overhead coves were brought out.

After the Mark Strand Topical Review came the scenes from Faust. First was the ballet, using twelve girls, with a tableau opening which brought a good hand at each show. The background was a series of voiles rigged on travelers, with lights in between the curtains. At the close of the ballet the new orange colored draw curtains closed and were lighted by Mestrum floods of light blue from dome and projection room, while Lilly Kovacs, solo pianist, played the "Faust" waltzes as the stage was being changed. Then came the prison scene, with soprano, tenor and basso, closing the presentation. A twenty-four foot set-piece of prison windows was placed in front of black cyclorama for this scene. One of the new bridge lights shone through a window, reflecting onto a pil of straw representing Marguerite's bed. A shaft of red was used on the devil.

The Difference

The ever-willing life saver people came to the relief of Rodney Bush at the Galax theatre, Birmingham. He printed up 2,500 envelopes reading "Life savers will sweeten your breath, but Douglas Fairbanks as Don Q., Son of Zorro, will hold you breathless at the Galax all next week."

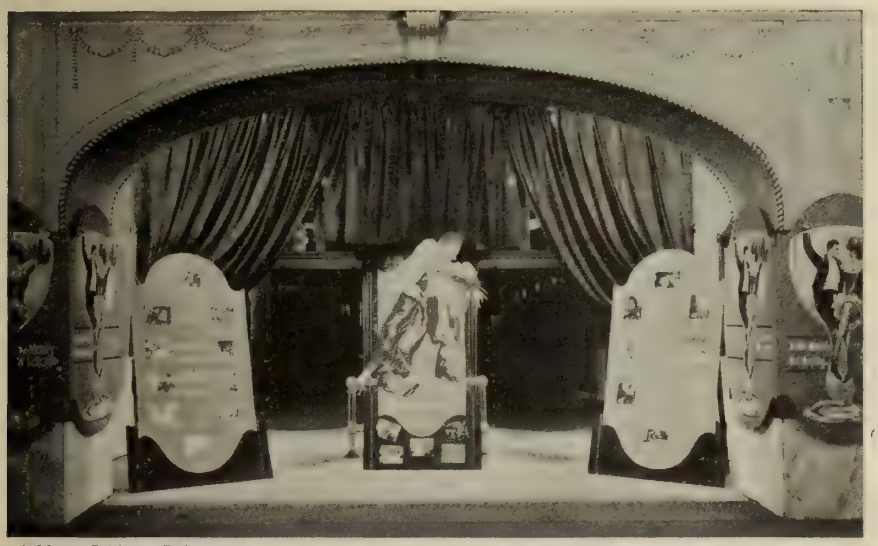
This was about all he needed to get a big business, but he made a nice lobby display mostly red and yellow, with a portrait of Fairbanks and four stills.

A Pathe Release

A STIRRING FRONT ON "THE FRESHMAN" FROM THE LIBERTY, McKEESPORT, PA.

Banners and stills fairly plastered the front of the house with an auto perambulator to take the message around. Pennants on this picture are particularly appropriate, and here the under side of the marquise is covered with them, not all of them showing up fully in the picture. The photograph does not show the details of the lobby, but the display goes all the way in.

Calgary Stampede Was Record Breaker in Home Town



A Metro-Goldwyn Release

AN ARTISTIC FRONT ON THE MERRY WIDOW FROM ASHEVILLE

Ernest Morrison got an artistic effect with satin drapes as a background for some well-painted announcement cards and still frames. The chief charm of this layout is the color, which does not come through the photograph, of course.

Calgary Stampede Pleased Home Town

Perhaps a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, but the record breaker in Calgary, Alta., was Universal's The Calgary Stampede. At the Regent theatre it swept away all records and hung up new ones that will be broken only when the house prices are raised.

Six shows a day for a week did not suffice, so the picture was held over for a second week. That's a lot for Calgary.

Guy Weadick, manager of the Stampeed, was gald to work with K. M. Leach, the manager, and F. Vaughn, of the Universal exchange also kicked in, with the result that they put over the most highly organized campaign that Calgary ever knew.

A window tie-up was made with the Hudson's Bay Company, which a line of department stores all through the Northwest. In addition to the window it donated a blanket coat, and a hatter gave a Stetson which was awarded to the boy and girl who wrote the best essay on the value of the Calgary Stampede to the town and Province.

For Pre-Showings

There were two advance showings, one for the directors of the Stampede and the other for the children. There was a ten cent gate at this last event and somehow 2,000 children crowded into the house.

The front was built up with a slab marquise, fronted with a 24-sheet, and the Mayor gave permission to banner a street car and run it wherever there were tracks.

During the last Stampede 174,000 feet were shot, of which only a small portion could be used. Two reels of the best of the surplus were made up and run with the picture and then presented to the city for its archives. The pictures will be shown through Alberta and then be stored for the benefit of the city.

Treasure Hunt Was for The Seven Keys

Oscar White used a new angle treasure hunt on Seven Keys to Baldpate. Both on the screen and in his newspaper work he described the route taken by the man who was supposed to have lost the seven keys to Baldpate Inn.

Somewhere along the route the seven keys actually had been dropped and passes to the Liberty theatre, Greenwood, S. C., were offered the finders.

That the stunt was not as simple as it sounds is attested by the fact that only six of the seven keys were turned in, though the entire town was searching for them.

For the lobby he used a keyhole the full size of a sheet of compoboard, surrounded by seven keys in cutout. Back of the keyhole opening was a black cloth to which was pinned a skeleton.

With the almost inevitable hardware hookup, he had plenty of help on this picture, and ran the money up.

Phantoms Got $300

The Bridgeport Star had a Santa Claus fund and wanted money for it. Bob Wood, Universal exploiteer at New Haven, knew about it. The Star got out a special edition to be sold for whatev people wanted to pay, and Wood supplied thirty "Phantom Newsettes" to do the selling. They took in more than $300, and the grateful newspaper gave Wood a splash story on the Phantom of the Opera that took nearly half the page, and which he could not have gotten in otherwise short of paid ad rates. And the chances are that the Majestic theatre made more in extra sales than the $300 the newspaper got. Pretty nice work, yes? Yes!

Miniature Dinos

Up to now the idea of exhibitors seemed to be to get the largest possible Lost World monster. Charles F. Shire, of the Lincoln Theatre, Lincoln, Neb., went to the other extreme.

The University of Nebraska loaned from its museum miniatures of the prehistoric monsters used in the play, and these were worked to land window displays. One of the professors wrote an article on the monsters for the Sunday paper and later followed with a second story praising the fidelity of the beasts in the picture.

More generally useful was the idea of hooking an auto agency to the bannered statement that their make of cars were used to transport the Lost World expedition.

BROKE RECORDS WITH CALGARY STAMPEDE IN CALGARY

Printer's Error Turned a Stunt Into a Big Sensation

Waltz Number Helps Break Big Records

Usually it takes Harold Lloyd or Chaplin to break house records on the Southern Enterprises, but H. C. Farley smashed his regular admission figures with The Merry Widow, and he did it very simply.

For two weeks in advance the orchestra played the Merry Widow Waltz in the regular program. This was followed by a slide asking the spectators if they remembered the waltz from the famous operetta of twenty years ago. When that had sunk in and definitely established the connection, a second slide told that it had been made into the best picture of the year. It was a different approach, and everyone decided to see the picture.

The lobby display was a hand-painted cutout of the waltzing figures, the excellence of the work carrying with it the suggestion of class. All the rest was standard campaign, but the waltz put the picture over to top money.

Printer's Error is Unexpected Knockout

When planning for the Merry Widow at Wells Theatre, Norfolk, Va., J. J. Madeen and Norman W. Pyle, M-G exploiteer, sold the Willis-Smith-Crall Furniture Store a contest lifted from the campaign book.

The idea was to offer ticket prizes in a large ad and receive the replies in Merry Widow Lane, a special aisle in the store. As part of the stunt every item in the entire store carried a cutout of Mae Murray and John Gilbert in the trademark pose.

The press book gave the proper solution, but the printer made an error in stating the problem. An "is" for a "was" allowed a diversity of replies, all of which would be correct according to the problem as it was stated.

MAKING BIG ONES OUT OF LITTLE ONES IS SOMETHING ELSE
How the Regent Theatre, Toronto, used the stills on "The Iron Horse" to make some different window cards. The copy on each card is suited to the business of the store in which the card is displayed, as "The Iron Horse" did not wear shoes. You do, etc.

When the break came they had thousands of replies, and announced the winners according to the supposedly correct answer.

That touched off the bomb. The President of the University of Virginia, in Charlottesville, wired the Virginia Pilot that the published solution was incorrect. A committee of citizens called upon the editor to demand that he work out the problem, and the theatre office literally was in a state of siege while the harassed manager tried to get hold of Pyle on the wire.

Groups actually stood on the street corners to discuss their various solutions, each member able to prove his answer was correct, and even the Rotary Club discussed the matter at a luncheon.

Then Pyle came flying into town in response to Madden's fervid plea and oiled the troubled waters. Several replies were correct. Seventy five tickets would be awarded each of the correct replies, and what promised to develop into a riot turned out to be the best advertisement either store or theatre ever had received, and the Widow went to S. R. O. and stayed there.

THERE WAS A MERRY WIDOW CUTOUT ON EVERY ARTICLE OF FURNITURE IN THIS STORE
Several hundred cutouts were used by the Willis-Smith-Crall Furniture Store to decorate every sales item in the place. This was part of a stunt the feature of which was a problem as to the age of the Merry Widow. A printer's error hoisted this from a contest into the Burning Question of the hour in Norfolk, where the stunt was used to help Wells Theatre break some records.

A FOOTBALL THAT EVEN THE FRESHMEN WOULD RESPECT

A perambulator designed by the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, for the run of the Harold Lloyd picture. Storage batteries were carried and at night the star's name is spelled out in electric lights, the title getting the advantage of the illumination.

Change Sold

Instead of the usual 14x22 tack cards, Rodney Bush used 11x11 for Lovers in Quarantine at the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala. And instead of printing them across he made them diamond shape.

The cards were so different that his thousand tackers made a lot of talk and helped sell the idea of going.

The lobby display was a large scarlet heart apparently resting on the seashore. From behind the heart were stuck the legs of a man and girl, as seen at the close of the picture, while on the left a cupid tacked up a sign which carried the title and the brand name, with Miss Daniels announced below in the body of the heart. It made for an an exceptionally nice business.

Modified

Instead of using a boat model for The Midshipman, H. G. Griffin, of the Plaza Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., used only a jib and mainsail on a flat auto float. It materially cut the cost and gave practically the same attention value and the same suggestion of ships. He did not even bother to rig cloth sails but made them of compoboard. The Novarro picture has been cleaning up all through the Southern Enterprises territory and he got his share of the business.

Midnight Kisses

Midnight matiness are not common in Jacksonville and when Guy Kenimer stages one the very fact that he is doing so helps to give the impression of a better play. He used the stunt for Kiss Me Again, with stress given the musical numbers, and banked an appreciable increase over the usual receipts.

Wooden Express

One of those carved wooden horses used by harness makers was towed through the streets of Durango, Col., for the showing of The Pony Express at the American Theatre. The motive power was an auto disguised as a locomotive, and the stunt might have worked as well for the Iron Horse, but it helped to put the Paramount over to big business.

There were four different rides into town from surrounding places.

De Haven Improves On Christmas Idea

A. Milo De Haven, of the Opera House, Bangor, Maine, went our Christmas shopper suggestion one better. He established a "Christmas Cheer Station" in the lobby of the Opera House as we suggested, and then got the merchants to advertise for him. He sends in the spaces of a number of stores each of which advertises "Free! Tea served and parcels checked at Bangor Opera House." Merchants figured that it would help get the shoppers out early, and they were glad to cooperate with Mr. De Haven.

For Old Clothes

He also sends in some very pretty throwaways on Old Clothes. These are printed on wall paper, not with "we are tearing the paper from the wall to make more room for—" but merely to get a stock that will appeal to the children. He gives a special matinee whenever he has a picture that will especially appeal to the children, and he sends a picture of rainy morning with the kids packed out to the middle of the street waiting to get in. They like best the community songs led by Mr. De Haven himself.

Using the king of hearts cards supplied by Paramount on The King on Main Street, he used this catchy copy:

"There's no JOKER in the fact that the KING of HEARTS is coming here. He has QUEENS in every land and they don't all wear DIAMONDS either. Take it STRAIGHT from one who knows, the KING can bring a FLUSH to any damsel's cheek. He's got plenty of JACK to purchase a SOLITAIRE. He'll visit the best CLUBS and they can expect a FULL HOUSE and if you don't want to miss a TRICK, just LEAD your friends to the OPERA HOUSE on Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 9 and 10, and buy your CARDS to see THE KING. You can't better it for THREE TENS."

Different Campaign For The Lost World

Guy O. Kenimer, of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, made his campaign on The Lost World dun on new lines. He did not send a prehistoric monster around town, but he made two models of the old-timers that were small enough to go into a jeweler's window, were they got plenty of attention. You can cover the business section of Jacksonville in a quarter of an hour, and most everyone does, so everyone got to see the monsters.

A LOBBY PAINTING

A week before the opening he put up a painting shown in cut on this page, depicting the jungle scene. In the photograph this looks like a flat, but in reality the foliage is put on the front piece with the river and hut on a middle section with a jungle backing. With trick lighting this was an attraction that brought most patrons to a halt. It's one of these things you cannot photograph properly, but it certainly was a winner.

For the showing he used a smaller painting reproduced above. This also is a three piece display with the backing, the monster and the foreground on different planes and with skillful lighting to heighten the effect.

These displays did more for the picture than a perambulated monster and tilted the business to top notch.

space looked like a million dollars, though in point of fact it carries too much talk for its size—or for any size, for that matter. The inset for the closing attraction is hand lettered, and little more than a title, but it helps to decorate the space, and the picture has been advertised for six days, so either it has or has not been sold, and it doesn't matter. Most of the text is decidedly jazzy, but there is too much of it. Evidently it takes a lot of coaxing to get Boston to part with its small change. Most cities would be sold on half this talk.

Hazy Cuts Are Not Always Detrimental

Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, uses two cuts on May Murray in The Masked Bride. One of them is a total loss, but the other gains somewhat in being a bit vague. Done in a strong black, the cuts may pull out materially in the reproduction, in spite of the smaller size, but in the original four eights the cuts print out very weakly. You can barely make out the figures of the bride and groom in the oblong cut on the right. As far as any illustrative value goes this cut is a total loss, for it tells nothing. On the other hand, the light printing of the figure on the left is an advantage. There is a certain indefiniteness that appeals to the imagination that would be lacking in a more definite printing. It has almost the effect of a nude figure, but a closer inspection will show that the star is dressed. This cut will sell better than anything else in the space other than the allusion to The Merry Widow. That line appeals, but the sales talk below the reverse panel is too general. It could be kept standing and used each time a jazz play comes to town. It would have been better to have left this material out and to have trusted to the "It will make you gasp." You cannot sell on lines too general in their appeal. There is always the feeling that the writer not knowing what to say just said something, and so there is no conviction to what is supposed to be argument. The layout is not pretty, and the hand lettering in the panel is pretty poor, but there is a certain strength to the display that helps the space, not a little of which strength comes from the white space. This contributes practically all of the display since the panel of reverse is sadly overcrowded.

Nearly All Type Is Best Display

Announcing the second week of The Iron Horse, the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, achieves a fine display with a small cut and a title block. All of the rest is type, and since it is well set, it looks well and is a better seller than most cut displays. Probably the cuts carried the picture over the first week and the theatre felt safe in cutting down for the holdover, but we think that this example would prove adequate for a first week display. The single cut used is more of a decoration than an attractor. It just dresses up the space nicely and takes from the severity of all type without being in the least intrusive. There is a nice valuation of size here. The house name and the title get the big display with the top line doing the bulk of the selling and the talk below clinching the uncertain readers, if there are any. The two all-cap lines are held well apart, so they can be read with the least difficulty, but most of the text is in upper and lower case and can be read without the slightest effort. It's a very pretty example of straight type work, and the more unexpected because the Baltimore theatres so seldom use all type. Of course the job room sets plenty of all type displays for the commercial accounts, but this is not the same as amusement advertising, and generally a commercial man does not appreciate the value of the lines in amusement work. Here each line is given display in accordance with its value. Naturally the title gets the best display, so the title is given almost a third of the three tens. The place where the play is to be seen is the next most important point, so the Rivoli is given second play, with the "Second and last week" sharing this play-up, partly through the size of the type but more through the placement of the line. In Baltimore the fact that a picture is held over is in itself the stamp of value. The next most important line is the long run in New York City, so this is given the best play, and all of these are held together. The length of the run is hooked directly to the title and not put down below where part of the force would be lost. The rest is just filler, and goes below, but it is not slighted just because it is less important than the major factors. It gets a careful display with those two lines of all caps to separate the banks of upper and lower, and so gain the full effect of three distinct approaches. The same result might have been gained through the use of a markedly different face for the middle bank, but there is so little to the all cap matter that it is more excusable here than it often is. This is one of the best type displays we have had an opportunity to run in a long time.

sole on display for a couple of weeks before it was connected to the pipes. But instead of putting it in the lobby, he laid it off to a prominent shop for a window feature and then worked the papers for four stories.

Dressing a Cut to Suit a Local Need

This seems to be a worked over cut from the plan book on The Freshman, the Stillman Theatre has taken the cut from the Pathe plan book and has worked it over to suit its own needs; which is exactly what plan book cuts are for. In this instance the Stillman appears to have painted directly on the reproduction from the book instead of trimming up a mat, using the sample ad illustration as the basis for the art copy. This saves a lot of work, but is practicable only where the services of an engraver are obtainable. This cut has had a wide circulation in ads for The Freshman, generally being mortised. It gets attention because it looks odd, and if anyone reads it the title is solidly impressed on the memory. The exhibitor who gave expression to the belief that The Freshman would not outlast the football season has permission to change his mind. Winter football is going to be popular in the theatres whether Red Grange can put over the Florida season or not. It may have helped some to put the picture out just before the gridiron was put on the fire, but Lloyd is more than seasonal.

Distinctive Space a Chicago Novelty

One of the outstanding displays of recent weeks in the Chicago amusement pages was that for Annie Rooney at the Roosevelt theatre. Set into the usual page of efforts to get a big display with cuts and at the same time do more talking than the space warrants, this simple form stood out like a searchlight on a dark night. It is safe to say that this was the first space seen as the reader turned to the amusement page, and if the tendency was to pass along, the eye was at least held until this space was read. The strip across the title reads: "You can read this ad in 22 seconds, but it means 2 HOURS of fun for you." It was so different that it got the attention of every reader. It is hand lettered, but so little off a rugged type face as to be perfectly legible, and this adds the third of the essential factors of display, legibility and conviction, for the text is written to sell the idea of real amusement without excess of adjectives. To get the full effect you need to see this in the page, so that you can appreciate how it was marked from all the rest. It beats any possible cut in this sized space, and is only 5 182 inches by two columns; which is a lot of space for Chicago, where the line rate is high. If your competitors are running to black type faces and heavy cuts, try this style some time when you want to get more than usual attention for an attraction. It can be worked about as well with type as in hand lettering, and unless you have an exceptionally good sign writer, the type is to be preferred, but pick out a distinctive face. You can get as much out of two fives as you can with a four tens in the usual combination of type and cut, but of course, you cannot do this every week. It works best as a now and then unless you can write copy so strikingly individual that people will look for it weekly just for the sake of reading it.

Last Week Appeal Sells the Wind-up

For the fourth week of The Merry Widow in Washington, D. C., the Columbia Theatre made the talking point the end of what is a phenomenally long run for Washington. The Widow is a picture most persons can enjoy on a second or third visit, and we think that some allusion to the repeat would have strengthened the appeal a little, but "final" is the best seller in this space and the rest is merely supplementary. The layout is simple and rather conventional, but entirely adequate, though the looks might have been helped a little by softening the lower edge of the cut to get vignette effect. This can be done with a coarse file using only downward strokes to prevent the formation of a burr. However, it does very well as it stands and gives good selling text for a closing of an engagement. There is one thing to note in these displays from the two Loew theatres. You seldom find a title beclouded by other text. It is seldom they run other lines too close or permit the cut to kill down the letters of the title. If you will make this your own rule, your advertising will profit greatly. Perhaps the most common layout fault is the use of a too-heavy line so close to the title that it reduces the latter's importance, and the only thing that even approaches the title in importance is a star whose popularity is greatly in excess of the play. Don't make this mistake yourself and teach your printer not to, for often he will overplay a line and you'll let it pass. An insistence on a full display for the title will mean real money in the box office; money you cannot see when it is not there, but which none the less is a very real loss. In merchandising if you buy an article for 83 cents and sell it for a dollar, you know you have made a profit of 17 cents. But if you rent a play for a certain sum and sell perhaps 5,000 admissions, you cannot always realize that a better advertisement might have given you 5,500 admissions, or an additional profit of 500 admissions. You can only see what you get; not what you lose. If all managers could visualize the people who do not come, there would be a decided improvement in many advertisements.

Shea's 4,000-Seat Buffalo Opens

BUFFALO'S newest and handsomest theatre was christened with all the ceremony on the evening of January 15, when Michael Shea welcomed a few thousand friends to the formal premiere of Shea's Buffalo, which was opened to the public on the following day. As the representative and fashionably attired throng of guests began to arrive early on Friday evening, their eyes were greeted with a feast of color, light and sound. A piano recital preceded the regular program.

Stately walls of marble are relieved with the regal sweep of crimson draperies, gold fringed and tasseled; there are mural decorations in rich and chaste color effects that vie with the finest theatre decorations of the world's capitals; electroliers and candelabra in the most elegant and recent effects, in which crystal predominates, cast myriad rays of soft light over the scene; the foot sinks into deep piled rugs and there are divans and sofas in harmony with the Louis Quatorze scheme in which the entire building is carried out.

Most striking of all is the great staircase that winds up to the mezzanine from the spacious front lobby. Forty ushers snap into their duties with precision. The seating capacity is close to 4,000 and is admirably arranged to give comfort and easy access. The orchestra personnel of fifty and the organ console are on platforms, both of which rise to concert position on a level with the stage when numbers are played.

Just before Mayor Schwab spoke on the opening night, Mr. Shea was presented with a beautiful loving cup by merchants who are now neighbors of Shea's Buffalo. Mayor Schwab spoke briefly, lauding Mr. Shea for his work in the past and congratulating him for his present accomplishments in the fields of amusement.

Heading the list of guests from New York was Adolph Zukor. With him came Spyros Skouras of St. Louis, Philip Reisman, John Hammel, Herr Rochman of UFA, Patrick Casey, Sam Katz, Harry Marx and A. N. Botsford of Publix, Samuel Denbow and others. Following the opening program a large number of the guests went to the Hotel Statler to complete the celebration, and when Mr. Shea had bid farewell to the New York party, he went to the Statler and was given an enthusiastic reception there.

On Saturday morning, one hour before the doors opened, a line totalling a thousand or more began to form on Main street. Floral contributions continued to arrive, including a large basket of roses from Mary Pickford.

Vincent R. McFaul, the new manager of the Buffalo, has been in the employ of Mr. Shea practically all his life, having served at several houses controlled by "Mike." Mr. McFaul has been at Shea's Hippodrome as manager ever since Harold B. Franklin left that post to accept the position as head of the Paramount theatre department. Mr. McFaul is now a member of the board of directors of the Shea Operating Company, the new organization formed of Publix and Shea officials.

Shea's Buffalo was built at a cost of $2,000,000 in just one year's time. The architects were C. W. and George L. Rapp of Chicago. Mr. Shea is continuing as the directing head of the Shea houses in Buffalo.

HI-ART REOPENS

Publix Theatres Corporation, which recently took over the Hi-Art in Lockport from J. J. Lanigan, reopened the house on January 17 with "The Light of Western Stars." Harold LeValley, formerly assistant to George T. Cruzen at the Palace, also a Publix house, has been appointed manager of the Hi-Art.

PALACE NOW PLAYING

The new Palace was opened in Hamburg on the evening of January 14 with "His Secretary." Supervisor George B. Abbott spoke, as did the architect, Lawrence Bley. The Palace has an orchestra of ten men. George Biehler is operating the house.

BECKERICH HONORED

Al Beckerich, manager of Loew's State, has been elected a director of the Greater Buffalo Advertising Club. Al now is putting on an exploitation campaign for "Mike," which includes a tie-up with the Times through which a double for Sally O'Neill is being sought. He is also using liners in the papers asking the folk: "Have you seen Mike?"

A SUCCESS

John R. Osborne, manager of the New Family in Batavia, reports Junior Movies as going over big on Saturday mornings under the auspices of the local Parent-Teacher Association.

ROBBINS IN CITY

Al Robbins, who has opened the Little Theatre in Ithaca, N. Y., was in Buffalo over the week-end lining up some big attractions for the Cornell town house.

Prize Month in Massachusetts

JANUARY is prize month for the managers of the theatres in the circuit directed by William P. Gray. Increased business as compared with that of last year is the object of the contest and by an exact measure of receipts some lucky manager will be made winner of a prize of $250.

RENAMES THEATRE

Theodore B. Baylies, manager of the State Theatre in New Bedford, has renamed the house the "Greater State." Here's the reason: Although Manager Baylies has been presenting the cream of photoplays he has just installed a 15-piece orchestra under the direction of Ray M. Kavanaugh. This made its first appearance on the program headed by "The Phantom of the Opera."

A SUNDAY FIGHT

Residents of Southbridge are up in arms over the action of the board of selectmen in revoking permits for the exhibition of pictures in theatres on Sunday. An official statement asserted that the action was the result of "bitter denunciation from clergy of this town again Sunday movies." Several organizations are preparing to fight the verdict of the selectmen.

DRAWN BATTLE

Counter charges of assault and battery against Curtis B. Shea, manager of the Globe Theatre in Springfield, and George H. Dooley, manager of a hardware store in that city, were thrown out after the judge had heard the testimony. Rhea claimed he was assaulted by Dooley when he went to the latter's store to inquire about some money he owed the store. He alleged blows were struck by Dooley after he had been ejected from the store.

SEEKS HINSDALE HOUSE

J. De Vallerie of Worcester is negotiating for the purchase of the picture theatre in Hinsdale.

CRONIN HAS NATIONAL

Frank Cronin, who owns and operates the Central Square Theatre in East Boston and the Crescent Gardens at Revere Beach, has just taken over the National Theatre in Boston.

H. J. HUNT ILL

Henry J. Hunt, treasurer of the New York Theatre in Boston, is seriously ill of pneumonia. He was stricken three weeks ago. His condition was such that word was sent to his father, Jay Hunt, film actor, at Hollywood, to come to his son's bedside. Mr. Hunt, Sr., left for Boston immediately.

A MYSTERY

Joseph Brennan, manager of Loew's State Theatre in Boston, is keeping the folks guessing about his new policy which he will open January 25. Joe's promise is that there will be the world's best photoplays, augmented orchestra, stage presentations, special stage settings and wondrous lighting effects. He has been doing a lot of changing in his house staff so as to insure the best of service for his patrons.

CASEY REAPPOINTED

Malcolm E. Nichols, the new mayor of Boston, has reappointed John J. Casey as chief censor of things theatrical. Mr. Casey has held that position since 1904. His salary is $4,000. The Mayor also has retained Joseph J. Mikolajeska, assistant to Mr. Casey.

GENIAL MR. BOAS

A genial exhibitor and one with a smile for everybody is Louis Boas of Boston, head of a circuit of New England houses. One of these days we'll present a photograph of this trail blazer of film exhibitions in New England.

AL'S STUNT

Speaking of enterprising exhibitors we can not overlook "Al" Somerby of the Bowdoin Square Theatre in Boston. The street on which the theatre fronts has been widened in connection with the city's project of enlarging the streets in the neighborhood of Scollay Square. So Al dedicated the week of January 18 as Bowdoin Square Boulevard Celebration Week, to mark the opening of the improved thoroughfare. And "Al" put over a whale of a program, too. Here 'tis: Valentino in "The Eagle," "The Primrose Path," "Wild Justice,"—three feature photoplays, all on the same bill—and also five acts of vaudeville, comedy and news.

Rhode Island

Famous-Players already has leased for a term of fifteen years the theatre that is included in the $500,000 building now in the process of construction at Woonsocket. The theatre is to have 1,500 seats.

Efforts are being made to prevent the reopening of the Strand Theatre in Woonsocket, recently damaged by fire. However, the mayor has announced that the city lacks the authority to condemn the Strand. The police commissioner has stated that the playhouse is a "fire trap." The mayor said the building inspector has reported to him that the fire exits at the Strand are "good ones."

New Hampshire

William Buckley of the Colonial Theatre at Laconia, N. H., has returned after a visit to Boston, all pepped up with new ideas for making the rest of the season the biggest in the history of the Colonial.

Some Comedy Gambling in Albany, N. Y.

WHILE one might never gain the impression from a casual acquaintance with Clarence Gardner, owner of the Pine Hills Theatre in Albany, N. Y., that he is a gambler, he frankly admits it. Not poker nor bridge nor any of the more common forms, but still a chance with one of the neighbors in the vicinity of Mr. Gardner's house. It came about in the following manner: In front of Mr. Gardner's theatre there is a long stretch of sidewalk, and of course in winter it is necessary for someone to shovel this sidewalk more or less frequently. The neighbor showed up two or three weeks ago, and meeting Mr. Gardner, remarked:

"Are you a gambler?"

"Well, I gamble on pictures," replied Mr. Gardner.

The neighbor then made a proposition that if he and his wife were admitted free to the theatre during the winter, he would shovel the sidewalk in return. Mr. Gardner lost no time in taking him up. The neighbor was the winner up until about a week ago when it started to snow. True to his word, he worked away and cleared the long stretch of sidewalk as Mr. Gardner stood by grinning. Up to the present, the odds are about even, but of course there is a long winter ahead.

FROM EAR TO EAR

No wonder Julius Berinstein was all smiles at the Colonial in Albany the other night when "The Iron Horse" was packing them in and Mr. Berinstein stood in the lobby at 7:30 announcing that there wasn't a seat in the house.

A HANDY MAN

Frank Braymaier, manager of the Barcli in Schenectady, is fortunately a sort of jack-of-all-trades and seems to be able to turn his hand to most anything around the house. Last week, when the organ went wrong, Mr. Braymaier repaired the instrument. The house is now running part time to first-runs and part to second-runs, so the operating company has so many pictures booked that it is almost impossible to play them all first-run at the various theatres.

GOOD NEWS

Another village has come out in favor of Sunday picture shows, Canastota going on the records. The only theatre there is operated by M. J. Kallet.

HIS MIDDLE NAME

No wonder Charles Sesonske of Johnstown is a strong feature in local picture circles. It has just been disclosed that his full name is "Charles Hercules Sesonske." That's that.

THE HABIT

After one has been taking tickets for fourteen years or so, it becomes almost second nature to reach out for a ticket, no matter who enters the theatre. Joe and Charlie Weidman, running the Central, have the habit. They are old-timers in the game, making a good living on a 10-cent admission, but now seriously considering installing a motor-driven projection machine and doing away with elbow grease.

NEW UTICA THEATRE

Harry Brooks of Utica is erecting a 900-seat theatre in that city which will be handled by S. L. Wolf, former manager of the Orpheum in Utica. The house is being erected in one of the restricted zones and it was several months before the necessary permit could be secured.

RAECHELL MOVING

Although Del Raechell, who has been handling the Van Curler in Schenectady, will be out of a job in a week or so so far as that theatre is concerned, he will go to one of the Berinstein houses, but whether in Elmira, Albany or Troy hasn't been decided.

NEW IDEAS

Joe Saperstein of Harmanus Bleecker Hall in Albany lies awake nights thinking up new ideas to attract the crowds. His latest is an old fiddlers' contest with the winner to meet Mellie Dunham. Here's another: In an old-fashioned dancing contest Mr. Saperstein plans to jam the theatre. His song contests featured each Monday will conclude on February 1. On Thursday night he runs his amateur acts, and on Friday night a dance voyage. Double features prevail each evening, and 25 cents admits to all.

BOOKED SOLID

Bill Donovan of Tupper Lake, who must have reached Florida by now, announced in the dance program of last Friday night's affair that he was booked solid until 1927. Not such a bad way of keeping the film men off, at that.

"POP" PROGRESSING

"Pop" Linton of Utica, is making such good headway in the erection of the theatre to replace the one burned last year, that the house will open about March 15. And you can bet your bottom dollar that everyone in Utica will be on hand when Mr. Linton opens.

VAN CURLER TO FARLEY

The biggest picture deal of several months transpired last week when W. W. Farley of Albany, head of the Farash Theatre, Inc., operating the State, Strand, Albany and Barcli in Schenectady, took over the lease of the Van Curler in Schenectady from Julius Berinstein, who operates theatres in Albany, Troy and Elmira. The lease has five years to run. The house will be given over to road shows and its acquisition by Mr. Farley is entirely apart from his Faash Theatrical Company. Mr. Farley, accompanied by Mrs. Farley and daughter, left on Wednesday for Miami, where they will remain for the next month or two at the Biltmore.

DONATES THEATRE

C. H. Buckley of the Leland donated his theatre last Saturday night to a trade showing of "The Skyrocket," which took place from 11 o'clock on.

HIS LITTLE JOKE

Dave Seymour of the Pontiac in Saranac Lake will have his little joke and the latest is that the theatre will remain open all the year, and then the word "perhaps" is added. Mr. Seymour, however, is too good a showman to worry about snow and cold weather, and if any house in the Adirondack region stays open during the twelve months, it will be Dave's.

NEXT TO GODLINESS

What do you suppose W. W. Farley of Albany now is up to? Papers filed in the secretary of state's office last week reveal Mr. Farley, who owns a dozen or more theatres, as one of the directors in a concern that will manufacture soaps and perfumes.

TO RESEAT HOUSE

The Broadway Theatre in Schenectady, which will be run by Frank Hickey and James Roach, is to be reseated before its opening next month.

PERSONALITY

Size isn't always necessary when it comes to making an impression. Betty Feuer, who runs the Crescent in Schenectady, weighs about 95 pounds and is about five feet in height, but when it comes to preserving order, all that it is necessary for her to do is to march up and down the aisle a few times and the house is as quiet as a mouse.

BARNSTORMING

Bob Wagner, former manager of the Rialto in Little Falls, and Nick Servatius, who handled the Majestic in Utica, are picking up many an extra dollar this winter barnstorming with pictures in the small places through the Mohawk Valley.

AMATEURS NEEDED

Ed Walsh, who has the Albany in Schenectady, is having a hard time these days to dig up amateur acts that haven't been seen at the house before. Amateur nights are taking well but the patrons want new faces and new features.

STRONG FOR COMEDIES

Claude Fish of the American in Schenectady declares that the people of today, or at least those in his neighborhood, want comedy dramas and he is booking all he can lay his hands on.

HELP WANTED

Mike Kallet of the Madison Theatre in Oneida has recovered from his recent illness and states that he is now indulging in a few bottles of beer each day to restore his nerve. The only trouble with the beer is that it's about one-half of one per cent.

LEADS ALL THE REST

Sam Aaron, manager of the Regent in Albany, is the first man in the Capital City, at least his name appears first in both the city and the telephone directory.

MADE A HIT

George Loomis, who has a theatre in Frankfort, tried out an all-comedy evening one night last week with considerable success. He ran five two-reel comedies and the people seemed to like the idea.

THE JEROME OPENS

Louis Jerome has just opened a theatre in Mayfield which will be known as the Jerome.

A GET-TO-GETHER

Employees of the Farash Theatrical Company of Schenectady are planning a get-together dinner within the next two weeks or so, which will be held in the basement of the Barcli. It is expected that similar affairs will take place at frequent intervals.

THE KALLET'S MESSAGE

Mike and Joe Kallet carried a little message to Albany film men in last Friday night's dance program. Here it is: "The Rome custodial asylum will take care of all film men." Of course the film men say that perhaps the same institution may sometime take care of Mike and Joe.

Poor Man!

There is a pretty good story going the rounds these days of a little incident that occurred the other night at the Rialto Theatre in Glens Falls, N. Y., which runs a combination of vaudeville and pictures the last three nights of the week to big business.

It appears that a young man arrived rather late at the ticket office and handed in a slip which read as follows:

"I can not hear. Vision is my only pleasure. Please give me two good seats."

The seats were handed out but as the young man stepped aside a young lady came over and quietly asked him how he succeeded, referring to the tickets. He replied that he had secured a couple of dandy seats.

A New Patron

In Glens Falls, N. Y., there is an Airedale by the name of "Tige" that enjoys the movies three or four times a week without paying so much as a single cent of admission. The dog accompanies his master to the State Theatre and then stands near the doorway until someone lets him in. Straight down the aisle he goes sniffing his way until he comes to his master. If the seat alongside him is unoccupied, up hops "Tige" and there he sits for the remainder of the evening.

At the Empire Theatre in the same city, a black cat may be found sitting each evening beside the ticket-taker. The cat, however, takes no interest in the pictures shown inside.

Silverman Gets Fourth Chicago Theatre

EDDIE SILVERMAN of Universal and his associates are adding more theatres to their circuit, last week putting over a deal for the Buckingham Theatre at 3319 North Clark street, Chicago, formerly in the Teter and Foster circuit. Other houses under the Silverman banner are the Shakespeare, Belmont and West Side.

FOUR OTHERS COMING

With the big opening of the Terminal, Chicago, last week by the Ascher circuit, this leaves four other houses that are now building for later openings this year for the circuit. The houses under construction at the present time are the new Colony, Drake, Highland and new Sheridan Road.

BIG PROFITS

There is money in residence theatre property in Chicago, as the records show a profit of $140,000 in two years for the Cosmopolitan Theatre property at 7924 South Halsted street. Charles K. Schwartz took over the property two years ago for $250,000. Last week the property was sold for $390,000 to a syndicate headed by W. Merle Fisher. Until recently the house was under the Ascher management but upon the opening of the new Capitol Theatre the Ascher Circuit sold its lease to the Cooney Circuit, now operating the house, as a second-run theatre.

COLUMBUS PROPERTY SOLD

The Ascher circuit has sold the Columbus Theatre property at 6238 South Ashland avenue to Matthew Dillon and William Johnston, who will remodel the property for other business purposes.

EARLY OPENING

The new Balaban & Katz Theatre going up on Randolph street is expected to be ready for opening early in March, which is several weeks ahead of the scheduled opening. The house will seat 3,500. As yet no name has been selected nor has the picture policy been announced.

RUMOR DENIED

According to the executive of the Chicago offices of Balaban & Katz there is no truth in the story that Frank Cambrian, director of art and stage of the circuit, is to go to Publix. The same thing is said about Will Harris, production manager, and Leo Starr of the production staff.

Winnipeg Theatre's Music Changed

A REORGANIZATION of the music feature at the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, has been brought about, following a recent trip by Earle C. Hill, director of the Capitol orchestra, to several cities of the Middle States. Manager H. M. Thomas has christened the orchestra "Earle Hill's Capitolians" and every afternoon and night the theatre's band presents a thirty-minute concert on the stage. The orchestra has been augmented, a unique feature being that two grand pianos are now used in this program.

ANOTHER CHANGE

Another important change has taken place among Hamilton, Ontario, theatres. George Swanwick, for years proprietor of the Princess Theatre, Hamilton, has taken over the Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, which he reopened January 18 with a program of pictures and vaudeville, prices ranging up to 30 cents, children half price. Performances are given continuously. This development follows the re-opening of the Hamilton Capitol Theatre as a picture house with Ray Tubman, for years a Calgary exhibitor, as the manager, and also the appointment of H. E. Wilton, formerly manager of the Savoy Theatre, Hamilton, as manager of the Strand Theatre, which he formerly directed. The Temple Theatre, Hamilton, also re-opened January 11 under the direction of G. Gillan. Maxwell Morrison, former manager of the Capitol Theatre, Hamilton, has gone to Toronto. The Savoy Theatre is now closed.

Moxley, manager of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, and later manager also of the Russell Theatre, has re-entered the amusement business in Ottawa, having been appointed house manager of the Imperial Theatre. Cleveland's Circle Changes Policy

ACCORDING to negotiations consummated between Warner Brothers, managers of the Circle Theatre, Cleveland, and Alexander Pantages of the vaudeville circuit bearing his name, the Circle will hereafter feature vaudeville and pictures instead of first-run pictures only, which has been the policy since the Warners opened the house recently. Three shows a day will be presented, with the house open from 1 to 11 p. m. This gives the Pantages circuit their only house in Cleveland, their nearest franchises now being Detroit, Toledo and Indianapolis. The Circle is located on Euclid avenue near 105th street.

Atlantic City's Gaiety Traced to O'Keefe's 13 Big "Laugh" Years

Much Cash Has Gone to the Bank in Those Years, or This Pioneer Would Have Quit—Long Ago

By S. BARRETT McCORMICK
Director of Exploitation, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THERE'S a long, long trail winding back through the years for anyone who would trace the origin of "all-laugh day," "all-comedy week" or "all-fan show" in motion picture theatres.

The Exploitation Department of Pathe has been in touch with many veteran showmen in order to get an expression of opinion as to the first exclusive "laugh-week," "fun-feast" or "laugh-day" in motion picture history. Some old-time follower of Barnum has no doubt originated the idea of the present-day "all-comedy circus," the "joy carnival" or "all-comedy day" and from these no doubt "Laugh-Month" has been a further development.

Jack Pegler, of our Exploitation Department, was in Atlantic City recently organizing showmen for Laugh Month and he brought back with him the story of how Edward O'Keefe, director of the City Square Theatre, started an all-comedy day nearly fourteen years ago and has retained this feature of his program presentation to the present day. We believe O'Keefe gets a place in the Hall of Fame for those who believed Voltaire when he said, "Laughter makes men gods."

Mr. O'Keefe is chairman of the Laugh Month campaign for Atlantic City, and he was also general manager of the Greater Movie campaign in that territory. He is a progressive showman known up and down the Coast and the story of how he paved the way for an all-comedy feature in the face of ridicule—and laughter—from fellow exhibitors, and how he has made box-office history with the plan through long years in which the motion picture industry has been turned topsy-turvy is an interesting one.

Early in 1912, Mr. O'Keefe went to the City Square Theatre from the vaudeville field, and there he met with little success with the two-a-day. Pictures were just starting to attract attention and Mr. O'Keefe hiked to Philadelphia to look them over. He had a tough time finding many available films, but in the single reels put out by the old-time Mutual Company, he saw a ray of light in the dark clouds that rolled by slowly. The General Film output was tied up in Atlantic City by a fellow exhibitor. Mr. O'Keefe contracted for all the single reelers he could get from Mutual and one or two other film concerns. It meant a weekly cost to him of $65, but they immediately, in his own words, "made the vaudeville look sick."

Mr. O'Keefe and vaudeville parted and were never company in that house again.

Early in 1913 the Keystone Comedies came in, with Mack Sennett and Ford Sterling in the leading roles. In the two comedians O'Keefe got the idea for a strictly all-comedy bill, and he promptly decided to introduce a program of five reels to contain nothing but Keystone Comedies—four repeats and one first-run film, of the custard pie and dizzy-stick vintage, of course.

Showmen Told O'Keefe He Was Crazy

Showmen with whom O'Keefe conferred about the plan told him he was crazy and that nobody would sit through five reels of comedy except a few kids.

"Well," says O'Keefe, "I decided to try it out anyhow—and from the first day until now it has been a real success.

"First I called the feature Keystone Comedy Day, but when that famous company went out of existence I called it All-Comedy Day. I ran the feature one day a month—and would have run it often but couldn't get enough film. A year or two later I introduced it twice a month and have held to this period ever since. It never fails and my claim is that if it is handled intelligently it will go over anywhere. There is an old saying that is as true as any ever uttered, 'Laugh and the world laughs with you, weep and you weep alone.'

"You know when spring comes around and the circus comes to town the old men will be heard saying, 'Well I guess I will have to take the kids to the circus.' Well, as Goldberg says, that's a lot of bologna, for the old man is just as anxious to go as the kid and that applies to my All-Comedy bills, too. There are just as many grownups who patronize this laugh feature as there are kids and if you doubt it just drop into my theatre on one of these special days and see for yourself."

Of course there will be those who will say that the all-comedy day will go over only in certain communities. Mr. O'Keefe proved the fallacy of this hypothesis. He had two theatres on the Atlantic City Boardwalk at one time which catered almost exclusively to visitors from all over the world, and for ten years he featured a semi-monthly All-Comedy Day in these houses. The wise ones predicted failure for the plan, just as they had done previously for the City Square Theatre—and again O'Keefe's patrons got the first laugh and he the last one.

At the present time, O'Keefe gives his patrons nine reels of fun, four two reelers and one single reel.

"The comedies," says O'Keefe, "must be carefully selected and it is necessary to repeat a few of them. I keep a little book and when the comedies come on I jot down the names of the best ones and bring them back later. I rarely get a complaint, for a good comedy is often enjoyed more at a second showing than the first.

"One should never grow too wise for so great a pleasure in life as laughter," says O'Keefe, the showman who has successfully staged laugh-months for thirteen consecutive years.

"Laugh Month" an Assured Popular Success

Laugh Month as a popular success is an assured fact. Julian M. Solomon, secretary of the National Laugh Month Committee, reports that National Headquarters have been swamped with requests from newspapers from Maine to Florida and from Jersey to California, for the Laugh Month mats. Messenger boys form a regular parade with telegrams and the postman adds his bit every time he calls.

That the newspapers are 100% behind the move is shown by such comments as: "When I opened the envelope and found the Ha Ha faces, I began to laugh and am in the mood to make January a real Laugh Month in this community."

Another one reads: "We will be glad to use some of the mats throughout the editorial and news columns. Will also see what we can do with smile copy in our advertisement department."

Western Newspapers Using Mats

From Indiana another paper says: "Believe we can use all the mats during the month in features and adds and will be pleased to receive the mats and will use the Laugh Month Calendar."

From Oklahoma: "We will do our best to put this through."

Indiana again says: "We commend your progressive movement. There is no reason why it should not bring results both for your committee and for the local publishers. There is no reason why it should not make a great hit."

The publisher of two Ohio papers says: "I think the idea is fine. With Christmas bills pouring in during the month of January, we need something to make us laugh."

From Pennsylvania comes: "We are with you in anything that will make people laugh."

Another one from Penn. State says: "We will try to make Carbondale laugh in January."

West Virginia adds: "We will use your material and think it a very fine idea on your part."

"HOTSY-TOTSY," Alice Day, Mack Sennett laugh-stuff for Pathe that is all there is to say.

Comedy-Circus Program Due for Repeat

That the comedy-circus program stunt may be repeated time after time with considerable success measured in box-office results, is proved by the experience of the Roberson Theatre in Dierks, Arkansas, which staged its first laugh-making bill on Christmas Day and followed it up with another similar program on New Year's Day, just a week later.

Pathe subjects played a dominating part on the programs. Of four films presented on the first comedy-circus screened on Christmas Day, three bore the rooster trade mark. The Pathe pictures shown were: Harry Langdon in "The First Hundred Years," Charley Chase in "Position Wanted" and one of the "Aesop's Film Fables."

Special New Year's Day Performance

The initial circus show was so successful that the management staged another all-laugh program on New Year's Day, with Harry Langdon in "Luck of the Foolish," Hal Roach's "Our Gang" in "High Society," and another cartoon comedy of the "Aesop's Film Fables" series.

The management issued a circus dodger to advertise the second comedy-show and headed it with: "Our Christmas Comedy Circus proved such a success that we are giving one for the first day of the great coming year, with our best wishes." Numerous cartoon cuts were used to add attractiveness to the dodgers.

"Fighting Tailor", a "Laugh Month" Release

F in its release schedule of comedies for National Laugh Month, "The Fighting r" having been substituted for "Officer of the Day." Both are Imperials.

"The Fighting Tailor" is the second of the East Side, West Side" series, faturing Georgie Harris and Barbara Luddy, and it brought veritable howls of laughter from reviewers at a recent pre-release showing. Harris in this film has the role of Abie, a Jewish boy who decides that the profits of the prize ring are much bigger and quicker than that of the second-hand clothing business and resolves to go after the heavy money. His father protests that a box-fighter is only a high class loafer, but Abie can hear nothing except the imaginary tinkle of golden ducats.

His big chance comes when a fighter fails to show up for a match and he is invited to substitute. The matchmaker is his Irish sweetheart's father, so Abie feels that he can strengthen his suit as well as line his pockets by clashing with the Irish Demon.

CHARLEY CHASE will chase gloom in "Charley, My Boy," a Hal Roach-Pathe contribution in two Laugh-Month reels.

This fight is one of the funniest pieces of business ever put on celluloid. Abie makes up in determination what he lacks in science and skill, and the audience is evenly divided between Jewish and Irish fans.

When Abie lands a lucky punch—or ducks a vicious one—the Jewish sector rises and cheers lustily. This process is repeated by the Irishman's adherents as occasion permits. In the midst of the battle Abie's father enters—his scruples against the manly art having been swept away by finding a ringside ticket—and he is horrified to discover that his own son is one of the principals. However, when Abie shows him the proceeds of his first match, the father beams upon him and asks, "When do we fight again?"

Other Fox comedies scheduled for release during the first half of Laugh Month are "Cupid a la Carte," an O. Henry and "His Own Lawyer," one of the Helen and Warren married life series, adapted from Mabel Herbert Urner's newspaper stories.

The whole list of Fox comedies available for Laugh Month showing includes fourteen two-reelers, released during November, December and January.

Langdon's Three-Reel Comedy In Pathe's "Laugh Month" List

HARRY LANGDON in a three-reel comedy special, "Saturday Afternoon," is a highlight of the Pathe short-feature program for the closing of "Laugh Month."

Other releases for the week of January 31st are Glenn Tryon in "Long Pants," Paul Parrott in "Soft Pedal," "Aesop's Film Fables," "Topics of the Day," a chapter of the Patheserial, "The Green Archer," Pathe Review and two issues of Pathe News.

"Saturday Afternoon," the three-reel comedy special starring Harry Langdon, was produced by Mack Sennett, who developed this famous comedian into one of the foremost box-office magnets of the day. Langdon's supporting cast includes Vernon Dent, Ruth Hiatt and Peggy Montgomery. Harry Edwards directed.

"Long Pants," a two-reel comedy starring Glenn Tryon, was produced by Hal Roach. Tryon is supported by Vivian Oakland, Cissy Fitzgerald, Jack "Rube" Clifford and Sue O'Neill. Fred L. Guiol directed.

"Soft Pedal" is a Hal Roach one reel comedy with Paul Parrott featured. This release is typical of this series of short comedies which fit so well into the exhibitor's program.

Pathe Review No. 5 presents another chapter of "Plundering the Sea," a camera record of the Octurus Oceonagraphic Expedition led by William Beebe, which is released in cooperation with the New York Zoological Society. Other features of this release are "Marriage on Faith," how the marital bargain is struck in Korea; and "The River Boats of Dresden," Pathecolor scenes of the Elbe in and around the Saxon capital.

"A June Bride" is the latest of the "Aesop's Film Fables." Every release of "Topics of the Day" during Laugh Month" contain special fun material.

The Demand Has To Be Met

By GILBERT PRATT
Mack Sennett, Director

We are all interested in "Laugh Month" because the thing that is showing the greatest advancement is the thing to boost. Two-reel comedies are written, cast and produced with just as much care as longer features. This is not accident. It is because the demand has been created and has to be met. The world wants to laugh! Try to make them and see what happens if comedies don't keep three laps ahead.

Andy Gump Comedies Are Great For Laugh Month

"Babbit on the screen."

That is how Samuel Van Ronkel, producer of the popular Andy Gump comedies, for Universal release, characterizes the famous character of Andy Gump which he is reproducing in celluloid.

Van Ronkel's series, based on the nationally famous comic strips by Syd Smith, are so popular, the producer believes because they satirize that national institution, the American family.

Andy, the producer declares, is a Gargantuan George F. Babbitt, a burlesqued, humorous edition of Sinclair Lewis' most famous character.

"Andy, of course, is broadly burlesqued, but his actions, essentially are human. He has all the conceits, vanities, weaknesses and strong points of the ordinary man. Syd Smith, the cartoonist, has created more than just another comic strip, that both the cartoons and the film comedies have made so tremendously popular."

In Van Ronkel's series of comedies, Joe Murphy plays Andy; Fay Tincher his wife, Min, and Jackie Morgan is a particularly like-life Chester.

Pretentious Sets for New Standard Comedy

A two-story house, probably the most pretentionus set of its kind ever constructed for a two-part comedy film, is being erected in Laurel Canyon for use in "Heavy Love," a forthcoming Joe Rock-Standard comedy, which F. B. O. will distribute. The structure is of a substantial nature and was designed after plans by a well known Los Angeles architect. Following the filming of this elaborate set, the dwelling will be turned over to a salvage concern to be wrecked, as the property upon which the house is being builded is zoned for other purposes.

"Saturday Afternoon"

(Pathe—Comedy—Three Reels)

HERE'S another Harry Langdon-Mack Sennett scream, with Harry as the dutiful husband of a domineering wife until a friend takes him on a joy-ride with some chickens. From beginning to end it's a series of laughs. It isn't choked with gags, but moves at a pace leisurely enough to allow Harry footage for real comedy acting. And he can act! Another great thing about the comedy is the titling. A. H. Giebler has provided some pippins, including, "Just a crumb from the sponge cake of life," in introducing our hero. Well, every payday Harry has to hand over the envelope to wifie. But first he secretes a few coins under the carpet. Wifie catches him hiding the money and tells him that he has to stay at home as punishment for dishonesty. Harry, however, does a reversal from domestic form and slides out the window and away to meet his chum and two flappers. They have various ludicrous adventures in a flivver, ending in a smash-up from which Harry's wife extricates him. The cast includes Vernon Dent, who is very effective, Ruth Hiatt and Peggy Montgomery. Harry Edwards directed Langdon in most intelligent style. The subject ought to tickle highbrows and medium brows alike.—Sumner Smith.

"Parisian Modes in Colour"

(Educational—Fashions—One Reel)

FILMED by means of the new Kodachrome Process this reel shows in natural color a wide variety of the very latest gowns and wraps designed by the foremost Parisian couturiers, such as Lanvin, Philippe et Gaston, Worth, Martial et Armand, Drescoll, Paul Poiret, Cheruit, Boue Soeurs, Charlotte and Jean Patou. The models are all displayed by Hope Hampton. The color effects are remarkable, bringing out the fine tints and shadings, especially fine are the gray blue and gray green shades and the lifelike colors in the furs. In fact, the entire effect is beautiful and striking, for Miss Hampton is an exceptionally fine subject for color photography with her high coloring and reddish tinted hair and the gowns themselves are wonderful. Women will rave over this reel but the men will also admire the beauty and perfection of the color work.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Man With the Scar"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

IN addition to the familiar type of western "action" situations, including considerable riding and fighting, this Mustang two-reeler featuring Fred Humes has considerable comedy, making a hard-hearted rancher who demands that any suitors for his daughter must have $1,000. Fred starts out to get this amount by capturing a noted bandit. His "spotting" a prize fighter and a butterfly hunter as the bandit and also his experience with the real bandit in disguise furnishes several laughs. Finally he discovers the deception, chases the bandit to the border and overcomes him on the international boundary line, winning the reward and the girl.—C. S. Sewell.

"Whispering Whiskers"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

THIS Mack Sennett subject, featuring Billy Bevan and Andy Clyde, gets off to a slow start but speeds up rapidly thereafter and ends in a riot of fun. The plot involves stolen rubies, clairvoyants and "detecative" disguises. It is fast burlesque after the first couple of hundred feet, with terrible damage to furniture by the two nuts and their rivals in search of a famous lost ruby. Bevan and Clyde are very funny and fine work is done by Madeline Hurlock as the clairvoyant and Kewpie Morgan as the Oriental villain. Del Lord directed.—Sumner Smith.

"The Little Brown Jug"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

IN this Paul Terry subject the farmer goes fishing with a jug of liquor and the cat and dog by his side. His lack of success is shown by sub-sea views of a fish school in which the little fishes are taught to avoid hooks. Then the former imbibes too freely and the result is a horrible dream of revenge in the fish world.—Sumner Smith.

"A Flaming Affair"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

WHEN a brawny fireman aids a girl who is being insulted by a masher, she insists that her sweetheart become a fireman. He fails in trying to join the department but does become a street car conductor and seeing him in uniform she insists that he take her through the engine house. In making his bluff good, Sid finds himself at a real fire where he is acclaimed a hero. This is the idea on which the newest Imperial Comedy starring Sid Smith, is based. There are some amusing bits in the street-car sequence including a wild ride when the car jumps the track and even gets on a ferry without the boys knowing it. The best part of the picture consists of the fire sequences with Sid struggling with a hose on a high ledge. His falls and near falls are of the thrill comedy type and the use of the hose allows for some novel effects. Up to the high laugh standard of this series of slapstick comedies.—C. S. Sewell.

"A Honeymoon Squabble"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

EDNA MARIAN has the chief role in this, and as a newlywed arrives at the honeymoon hotel. She makes hubby scratch off "and wife" from the register and takes a separate room. Another couple do likewise. Naturally the suspicion of hotel employes is aroused and the house detective assigned to ferret out the mystery. From behind a potted palm he watches the couples tossing messages back and forth, then he orders the husbands to leave. Wives and husbands become all mixed up, and the detective makes things worse by a stiff pursuit through the halls and rooms. Marriage licenses finally clear everybody. Though most of the comedy is based on the chase, the subject has a lot of humor, thanks principally to some accomplished work by the gent burlesquing a detective. He is very good.—Sumner Smith.

"Long Pants"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

GLENN TRYON, his first long pants and a merry widow are the chief things of humorous interest in this subject. The widow vamps, Glenn gets a ducking and the trousers shrink. Glenn's film father also gets into the limelight by falling for the girl himself. Crippled by rheumatism, he does quite a lot of low and lofty tumbling. The best scene has to do with the family and the widow at dinner. There is enough fun in this one episode for an ordinary comedy. Glenn is well supported by Vivian Oakland, Cissy Fitzgerald, Jack Clifford and Sue O'Neil. Clifford as the father does some great work. Fred L. Guiol directed.—Sumner Smith.

"A June Bride"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

THIS latest Paul Terry-Aesop's Film Fable pictures the matchmaking of two cats and frequent interruptions by the farmer. True love triumphs through the aid of a minister while the farmer breaks down the door, too late.—Sumner Smith.

"The Hero of Piperock"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

NEWEST in the series of Mustang Brand western comedies feature Peewee Holmes and Ben Corbett, this two-reeler deals with a Thanksgivnig celebration in the border town of Piperock. The two boys are commissioned to save the honor of the town by getting away from a rival community the only turkey in that section. Holmes succeeds but Corbett takes the turkey and poses as a hero, saying Holmes had cold feet. Holmes finally turns the tables by swiping the turkey and substituting a skunk in its place. There are amusing burlesques of typical western situations and considerable slapstick together with a travesty on the land,—ing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock.—C. S. Sewell.

"Her Lucky Leap"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

CENTURY'S newest two-reel comedy released through Universal starring Wanda Wiley concerns the efforts of two international smugglers to get back a bag of jewels which they dropped into her coat to escape customs officials. Practically the entire comedy is of the chase type and it introduces a number of familiar gags and situations. The action is fast with the thieves chasing Wanda all over the ship, then across the dock and getting into her cab, her escape to another one and eluding them by swinging across a wire. They show up again and she dives out a window onto a motorcycle which lands in a police station. The thieves follow and are locked in a cell. Should amuse Miss Wiley's admirers and slapstick fans.—C. S. Sewell.

"Film Facts"

(Red Seal—Magazine—One Reel)

THIS reel opens with a view of the monument to a former Hawaiian king and shows a fanatic who stands always in front of the statue waiting for it to come to life. An interesting section shows the salmon industry from the catching of the fish to the labeling of the cans. Then there are scenes on an alligator farm showing "infants of about fifty years and one old fellow said to be at least 500 years old. The reel ends with a cartoon showing how times have changed, as for example, a bold armored knight changes into a sissified chap grabbing the brass rings on a merry-go-round.—C. S. Sewell.

"Brotherly Love"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

CLIFF BOWES, Helen Foster, Zelma O'Neal and Howard Esary are the players in this Cameo Comedy directed by Jess Robbins. They play jealous lovers and mischievous sweethearts in the park, each man unwillingly taking unto himself the other's girl. Then the girls regain their lovers and only the surrounding scenery has suffered as a result of the mix-up. It is routine comedy well done.—Sumner Smith.

"Song Car-Tune"

(Red Seal—Novelty—One Reel)

FOR his subject in this reel, Ko-Ko the little Inkwell clown and his quartette are shown singing the familiar ballad "Sailing, Sailing, Over the Bounding Main." As usual, the words of the verse are thrown on the screen and the music indicated by a moving marker. The chorus is cleverly and amusingly handled and good for a number of smiles. A ship is shown sailing over the words of the song which "bound" up and down, the strong wind blows the ship away and the sailor has a hard time before reaching port again. In every way, this a clever play on words.—C. S. Sewell.

"Badly Broke"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

IN THIS Blue-Bird comedy starring Charles Puffy, he and Billy Engle are cast as two pals who are down to their last cent. After nearly getting hold of a wallet they play in luck and are given a wad of money by mistake. They then start out and flirt with a beauty who has a lunch counter on a construction elevator. In resenting the rough talk of a street cleaner who turns out to be her husband, they are pushed off the elevator when it is up in the air, landing in a vat of whitewash. The situations are largely of a familiar type of slapstick, such as have proved popular with a large class of patrons.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Uprising Generation"

(Pathe—Sportlight—One Reel)

THIS Grantland Rice Sportlight should prove doubly interesting because it not only shows how modern youths have it all over the kids of yesterday in the matter of athletic equipment, but it shows very appealing pictures of children. Notable among these are views of three wee tots, all of them expert swimmers. J. L. Hawkinson has turned out a very fine bit of entertainment.—Sumner Smith.

CLYDE COOK has a new comedy coming for Laugh Month. Hal Roach saw to its merit; Pathe will see to its distribution.

"Felix the Cat Spots the Spook"

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

OUR friend Felix the Cat is awfully sleepy in this reel and after being driven out of a bird's nest tries a pig pen with no better results. Finally he invades a house but the mice decide to drive him out. Mounting on each other's shoulders they disguise as a spook and lead Felix a merry chase but he finally unmasks them and kills the mice, earning a home and the gratiude of the owner of the house. An amusing number of the Felix series.—C. S. Sewell.

"Hot Dog"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

THIS Blue Bird comedy features Arthur Lake. It is fairly entertaining. Arthur and Eddie compete for Betty at a picnic. Both take her home and both strive for the privilege when she announces she has lost the key and someone must enter by opening a window on the second story. Arthur runs foul of a bulldog, falls in the bathtub and, imagining ghosts, runs riot through the house. When at last he finds the front door, he also finds a note saying that Betty has decided to take a spin with Eddie.—Sumner Smith.

"Tight Cargo"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

THIS Universal Blue-Bird Comedy featuring Charles Puffy is a burlesque cannibal story with Puffy in the role of a salesman who tries to sell silk hats to the savages. By the use of magic he makes a hit with the king and marries his beautiful daughter. His rival steals him and is about to cook him when the princess routs them with sticks of dynamite. Puffy and the girl escape on a raft. A fairly amusing slapstick offering.—C. S. Sewell.

"Marvels of Motion"

(Red Seal—Slow Motion—One Reel

DEMONSTRATIONS of the art of jiu jitsu, swimming by experts at Columbia University, and apache dancing make up reel "H" of this series photographed by means of the Fleischer Nowagraph process The use of normal, slow, stop and reverse motion not only brings out the details, but with the addition of a little cartoon work, some amusing effects are produced. An entertaining number well up to the previous standard.—C. S. Sewell.

"Soft Pedal"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

HERE we have Paul Parrott in a funny Hal Roach burlesque. A musical family needs money but receives a collection of bombs instead, and a college chum, while chumming, steals all the furniture. Some of the best scenes have to do with an umbrella salesman who inspires business by means of a little darkey and a watering pot.—Sumner Smith.

"At Last—Here's Something New in Pictures"

HAL ROACH'S recently announced plan of engaging for his two-reel comedies some of the foremost feature players in the cinema world has met with a cordial reception from motion picture reviewers throughout the country.

With the publication of the fact that Roach had always signed such artists as Lionel Barrymore, Theda Bara, Mildred Harris, Elaine Hammerstein, Eileen Percy and Tyler Brooke, to appear in his short features, Florence Lawrence made the following comment in the Los Angeles Examiner:

"At last here's something new in pictures.

"Hal Roach is the man who has discovered and fastered the idea, and it looks at the moment like one of the sensations of the coming year in the cinema. * * *

Will Put Drama Into Two Reel Comedies

"He has observed, just as all filmdom has, the constant effort to inject more and more comedy into feature pictures. But the fact gave him something to think about, and the result is that he is going to reverse the methods of the big feature producers.

"He's going to put drama—and real drama at that—into two-reel comedies, and he's signing the biggest players he can get to help him put over the idea.

"'It wasn't any trouble to sell the exhibitors on the idea,' says Mr. Roach. 'In fact the proposal emanated from my deal with the Keith circuit. Having booked my product in forty-five big-time vaudeville houses, I was urged to supply an attraction which would be equivalent to a $10,000 a week act. That's what I propose to do in these new pictures.'

"The Roach idea is simple enough but of tremendous possibilities.

To Use Free Lance Players With Pulling Power

"He proposes to use free lance stars, both men and women, character actors and others who have a distinct box office lure. He will engage them for pictures in which the roles are exactly suited to their types and characterization, and will pay them the same salary they receive from other producers. * * *

"The new series will not be released until after the first of January and it is already booked into 5,000 theatres, including the Metropolitan where Frank Newman has signed for it enthusiastically.

"The new pictures are to be short, of course, but they need be none the less artistic for that reason.

Palmer Smith, motion picture editor of the New York Evening World, made the following comment on the Roach plan in a recent article:

"The Pathe organization is boasting lustily of the enterprise which is to bring to the comedies a number of established and expensive screen stars who will play in support of the regular comedians in the Hal Roach unit. Such an experiment is well worth a ballyhoo. * * *

Comedy Players Hold Popularity

"A rule that has few, if any, exceptions is that the screen players who hold their popularity are the ones who have schooled themselves in comedy, who have either played in straight comedy parts or else have introduced comedy into their dramatic offerings. * * *

"The Pathe plans for using established players in comedy support is not so different from what universities describe as 'graduate courses'."

Sterns Look Upon Laugh Month As Beginning of Laugh Year

NATIONAL LAUGH MONTH is a happy augury for 1926, say the Stern Brothers, makers of Buster Brown Productions and Century Comedies. The two fun-film producers see in this drive a wonderful momentum for comedies for the entire year, and predict that 1926 will develop into a veritable Laugh Year, because of the increased popularity and prestige of screen comedies, especially short comedies.

"This concentration on Short Comedies during the month of January, is a great thing," they said in a recent statement. "It will prove to be good business, not only for the makers of short comedies, but for the screen industry as a whole. It is bound to bring the public around to a better frame of mind towards the screen.

"You can't be sore at a man and laugh at him at the same time. If he makes you laugh, he wins your good-will. Many a patron will be changed from an occasional screen goer to a warm follower of the screen by the entertainment to be offered during Laugh Month.

"The greatest advantage within the industry will be in the increased prestige for Short Comedies in the minds of exhibitors. It is presumed that the average exhibitor, in exploiting his Laugh Month programs, will give due credit in his advertising and in his publicity to the Short Comedies he features during this month. The results are bound to teach him a lesson—the lesson that the public will respond just as quickly to the advertisement of a good comedy as it does to the ad of a long feature—sometimes quicker.

"If Laugh Month can banish the phrase 'AND A COMEDY' from the moving picture ads, programs and publicity of the industry, and substitute 'AND "BUSTER'S BUST-UP," A ROLLICKING BUSTER BROWN COMEDY' for instance, it will have accomplished wonders.

"If exhibitors would only read the department store ads, and see how other merchants reach every variation in the public taste, they would profit by it. Department stores advertise as many of their articles as they can call attention to in the space they have. They know the great secret of advertising, that different things appeal to different people. The answer in moving picture advertising, is to play up the short comedies and other product in all forms of advertising, thereby catching the eye of the 'short comedy public.' This is a gilt edged public and will mean added profit at the box-office."

Kinograms Boosts "Laugh Month"

A NOVEL idea boosting "Laugh Month" has been introduced into the current issue of Kinograms, the news reel released by Educational. It was first planned to take pictures of well-known screen comedians doing various stunts, but when the time came it was found that some of them were so busy that they could spare only a few moments between scenes.

To overcome this difficulty the editors of Kinograms prepared some lively jokes. During the photographing of the funny man he was told one of the jokes, and as it unfolded itself to him he allowed his expression to change. The result was usually good and brought genuine laughs to the faces of the subjects.

For instance, Lloyd Hamilton was told the story about the little boy who asked the storekeeper for some ice cream.

"Cone?" asked the dealer.

"No, Rosenbaum," said the boy.

Among those appearing in the Kinograms "Laugh Month" special are Walter Hiers, Bobby Vernon, Lloyd Hamilton, Lupino Lane, Al St. John, and Harry Langdon.

"TIGE"

The screen version of "Buster Brown" Comedies, Universal release, is materially enlivened by the intelligent canine. "Tige" always brings out his quota of laughs.

Universal Speeds "Laugh Month" Pictures

WITH Laugh Month but a short distance away, Universal City is marshalling all its forces, and bringing up its heaviest guns, for a general assault on the citadel of the public's risability glands.

All of which means that Universal is preparing a program of one and two-reel comedies for the month of January, all of which are calculated to make audiences roll in the aisles.

Comedy units at the big studio, and at the Century Comedy plant, its brother organization, are working night and day to complete late productions for the big Laugh Month Productiton.

Under the supervision of Scott Darling, supervisor of comedies, two comedy units are working at Universal City. They are the "Sweet Sixteen" troupe of Tarkingtonian fun-makers, under the direction of George (Slim) Summerville, with Arthur Lake as the star, and a unit starring Neely Edwards, directed by Dick Smith.

Samuel Van Ronkel is speeding work in the latest of his famous "Andy Kump" series, which he produces for Universal release. Joe Murphy plays the celebrated Andy, of newspaper comic-strip fame, Fay Tincher is "Min" and Jackie Morgan is "Little Chester."

Charles Puffy, rotund European stage star, who has made such a hit in one-reel comedies with Universal during the past year, has just returned from New York, where he collaborated with the noted humorist, H. C. Witwer, on a series of stories in which Puffy will be starred. Meanwhile, the star has been assigned to play an important role in "The Mystery Club," an all-star feature which Herbert Blache is to direct.

At the Century Comedy Studios, the fun-producing stars, including Wanda Wiley, Edna Marian, Al Alt, Charles King, and the "Buster Brown" company, featuring Arthur Trimble, Doreen Turner and "Tige" are working busily.

"NOW, WATCH THE PRETTY BIRDIE"—Chester, Andy an' Min Gump (that's Jackie Morgan, Joe Murphy and Fay Tincher) in one of those gigglesome Universal-Gump comedies.

New Pathe Managers at Two Important Centers

Pathe announces the appointment of new managers at the company's branches in Memphis, Tennessee, and Butte, Montana.

Charles F. Boyd has succeeded former Branch Manager Cary at Memphis. Mr. Boyd was formerly connected with Associated Exhibitors and recently was employed as a block salesman for Pathe at the Albany Branch.

William M. Hugart has been appointed to succeed former Branch Manager Calkins, who resigned his position at the Butte, Montana, office of Pathe.

Century Making "Laugh Month" Comedies

HAVING taken over the vote, boyish hair-cuts, the gubernatorial chair in at least one state, and various other strongholds of the male, the fair sex is likely to usurp man's position in still another field —that of stardom in screen comedies, is the declaration of Julius Stern, president of the Century Film Corporation, makers of Century Comedies.

Two years ago, with one exception, no feminine player had ever been starred in two-reel comedies since the day of Mabel Normand. Then the Century Comedy company decided to try two-reelers with feminine stars.

Wand Wiley was the first comedienne to be elevated to stardom, and soon after, Edna Marian was made a Century star.

The first series of comedies starring these two capable young performers were so popular that both were given long-term contracts.

In little more than a year, Miss Wiley and Miss Marian have become two of the leading attractions of the short-subject field and threaten to eclipse the many masculine stars.

THIS PICTURE SAYS IT ALL, but you might want to know that it's Director Gus Meins, making those Buster Brown comedies for Universal, who has lined up Buster Brown, Mary Jane and Tige for the Month of Merriment.

New Pathe Short Subjects

Alice Day, star of the popular series of two-reel comedies produced by Mack Sennett for Pathe release, has just completed another comedy vehicle under the direction of Eddie Cline. The supporting cast includes Danny O'Shea, Ruth Taylor, Joe Young, Eddie Quillan and Sunshnie Hart.

Del Lord has started the direction of a new comedy of the Mack Sennett brand with a cast including such favorites as Billy Bevan, Madeline Hurlock, Vernon Dent and Andy Clyde.

Gilt Pratt is directing Raymond McKee and Ruth Hiatt in a new Smith Family comedy. Mary Ann Jackson, Sunshine Hart and the noted canine, "Cap," are in the cast.

Lloyd Bacon is directing a new Ralph Graves two-reeler in which the star is supported by Thelma Parr and Marvin Lobach.

Pathe Cornerblock Ads for Short Comedies Being Used Extensively Throughout Nation

CORNERBLOCK COMEDY ADS, which were brought into use a few months ago by S. Barret McCormick, manager of exploitation for the Pathe Exchange, Inc., are fast becoming popular with exhibitors from one end of the country to the other.

A glance over the theatre advertising sections of newspapers reveals the fact that showmen are beginning to appreciate the value of this copy, furnished free in mat form. There are many calls for this service at the Pathe branch offices and every now and then a wire comes in asking that the comedy mats be rushed—special delivery. Thus it is evident that showmen are hesitant about sending feature copy to press which does not contain illustrated copy on their short comedies.

There are two ideas behind the cornerblock copy. The predominant one is of course the fact that short comedies, which have made rapid progress in story and personnel during the past year and have become well known by trade name, now deserve a place in the showman's advertising scheme. It is held by Pathe that many of these short comedies are the "life-savers" of the program and under no circumstances should be dismissed with the old-time added line, "also a comedy," or words to that effect.

It was believed that this cornerblock copy, which was kept in its proper proportion to the feature advertisement, with its snappy illustration and punch lines would fill a much needed want on the part of exhibitors.

The next question was how to make the advertisements fit in with the showman's advertising campaign. The plan was hit upon to keep these mats in such proportions that they would fit into the regular theatre copy without taking away from the theatre manager any of his space. These cornerblock ads were therefore made in various shapes, so that they could be worked into corners of the layout, or in "holes" in some other part of the advertisement. They were also made in various sizes—and on each comedy the exhibitor was given at least four separate ads to choose from. Thus no matter what the proportions of his layout were, at least one of these comedy mats could be slid in.

To simplify the use of these mats even further, Mr. McCormick had them printed on a small sheet to be inserted in each comedy press book so that it would be certain to be brought to the exhibitor's attention. The back of this insert was gummed and each illustrated comedy ad carried an outline of perforations so that it could readily be torn off and pasted on his layout. If the theatre artist made an original drawing for his general copy, this gummed illustration could be photographed along with the remainder of the layout when the cut was made by the engraver.

In the event that the exhibitor used various cuts from press-books to make up his layout, he could then use an illustration from the gummed sheet to indicate to the compositor where the comedy ad copy was to be inserted.

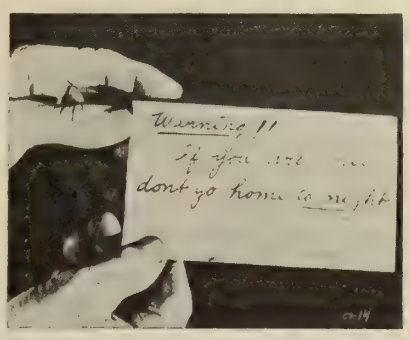
BABY PEGGY

Some of the most charming comedies in the Century-Universal group present the famous tiny star.

A Comedy Carries Own Exploitation

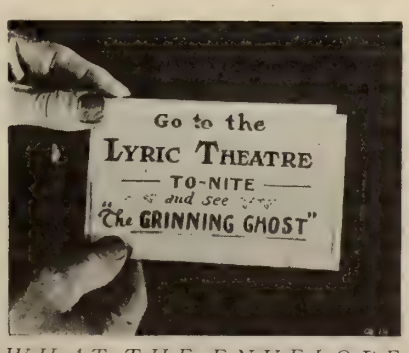
Often something in a picture will suggest an exploitation stunt, but in „Slow Down, an Educational-Cameo comedy featuring Cliff Bowes and Helen Marlowe there is a supposed exploitation which can be transferred to actual practice.

In the comedy Bowes and Miss Marlowe find an envelope reading: "Warning! If you are wise, do not go home tonight." The envelope is illustrated in this clipping from the film:



THE PICTURE ENVELOPE

Alarmed by threat of danger, the pair go through a series of comic terrors and finally reach the happy ending to find that it is merely an exploitation stunt on a picture at a local theatre. The cut shows the enclosure as it is seen in the film.



WHAT THE ENVELOPE CONTAINED

Changing the supposed title, "The Grinning Ghost" to "Slow Down" gives a ready-made exploitation on the comedy itself, and if you can get them in with a short subject you will make just as much money as you can from a five reeler.

If you run this picture and do not use this stunt, you are not going to get full value out of the picture. Try it out.

Talk on Comedy Making Brings Many Replies From Radio Fans

FOLLOWING the broadcasting of the first two Laugh Month talks over WBZ, Westinghouse Radio Station, at Boston, there were received at Educational's Boston branch exchanges and by the radio station, a large number of fan letters from those who were interested listeners. These letters came in from all eastern sections of the country and from as far west as Mason City, Iowa.

Fans expressed pleasure over the admirable and instructive first week's talk given by Kinograms' representative, Al Moffat, on "The Making of a News Reel," and also the address that was broadcast on the following Wednesday, January 13, on "The Making of a Two Reel Comedy."

Based on novel "Moby Dick" by Herman Melville
Adapted by Bess Meredyth
Directed by Millard Webb
Length, 10,250 feet.

STARRING one of the world's greatest actors, John Barrymore, Warner Brothers are offering under the title of "The Sea Beast," a picturization of Herman Melville's epic of the whaling industry "Moby Dick." Exceptionally stirring, virile, vigorous, red-blooded he-man stuff, made even more effective by the beautiful romance woven through it, "The Sea Beast" is a production that should prove a tremendous box-office attraction.

A hardy, fearless lot were the men who dared to pit their puny strength and skill against the powerful leviathans of the deep, and in picturing them upon the screen, Director Millard Webb has heavily stressed this angle, pointing out in the subtitles the fact that the crews consisted of the wildest and roughest of the men who followed the sea, backed this up with their singing of their grim chanteys and by surrounding the star with wonderful types depicting as motley a crew of roughnecks as ever trod the decks or hoisted the sails of a windjammer. This brings out in striking contrast in the earlier reels the straight, classic handsome features of Barrymore as the young sailor who dreamed of the sweetheart he left in New Bedford but who was a regular demon of courage when the magic cry "Thar she blows! She b-l-o-w-s!" told of the sighting of a whale.

While the young hero Ahab was on his first voyage, his sweetheart Esther with her father, a missionary, had gone to Port Louis and with them was Derek, Ahab's young brother who also loved Esther, and great was Ahab's joy when his ship touched at this port for supplies and they plighted their troth anew. The big event for which Ahab had longed, his encounter with the giant white whale Moby Dick which occurred on his next voyage, ended in Ahab's leg being snapped off by the whale, because of the treachery of Derek who pushed him into the water. Returning to Port Louis with a wooden leg, Ahab wondered how Esther would receive him and his great pride made him believe her love was pity. Derek subtly worked on this and convinced Ahab that Esther has transferred her love to him. Embittered toward the world, Ahab who now had his own vessel nursed his hate and became even more rough and hardened than the rest, half-mad over his brooding and obsessed with the one idea of revenge on the whale Moby Dick which he considered the cause of his trouble. A fierce storm frightened the half-witted cabin boy, Pip, to tell Ahab of Derek's treachery and this same storm not only brought Ahab the chance to finally kill Moby Dick but also resulted in Derek, shipwrecked on another steamer, being rescued, giving Ahab a chance to wreak his revenge which he accomplished in a fierce fight ending with Derek being thrown into the sea. His hate satisfied, Ahab returned to New Bedford believing that Esther who was on the ship with her father and Derek has been drowned, but fate was kind and Ahab found her waiting for him.

"The Sea Beast" is a big production and a fitting vehicle to show the talents of John Barrymore. Obviously because of his recognition as being in the front rank of the world's great actors, it is his performance that commands the greatest attention, and Mr. Barrymore's portrayal is fully in keeping with his great reputation. As Ahab the romantic and courageous dreamer and as Captain Ahab the sullen, hate-ridden half-crazed mortal living only for vengeance on the sea beast, he has virtually two widely contrasting roles, both of which he handled superbly. It is his characterization of the hate-crazed Captain Ahab, however, that audiences will probably consider as best demonstrating his genius, not only because of his handling of the role but because of his wonderful make-up. As this prematurely aged man, with drawn features, deep lines in his face, hate and vengeance in his eyes, with long stringy wet hair, stalking about on his wooden leg, reviling his rough crew, he shows the inner character changes that have seared his soul but still remains Ahab, yes, but a terribly changed Ahab, the physical likeness lingers but the man himself has changed. Mr. Barrymore gives a thoroughly engrossing performance and keeps your eyes glued to the screen as you watch his mobile face register the whole gamut of emotions from the light romantic love scenes through those of almost unbelievable physical pain where his severed leg is cauterized with red hot irons to the scenes in which he vents his almost fiendish hate on Derek and Moby Dick, and back to the supreme joy of his reunion with Esther. He makes Captain Ahab a living, breathing being, not a creature of fiction.

Thematic Music Cue Sheet
It's little to ask for, but it's the only reliable aid you can give your musicians to help put the picture over.

Next in importance to Mr. Barrymore comes Dolores Costello as Esther. Here is a young acrtess whose star is just bursting on the screen horizon, who has beauty, personality, charm, together with dramatic and emotional ability of a high order. Her performance of Esther is truly wonderful and she does not suffer by having to play opposite Mr. Barrymore. In the scene where she first sees Barrymore wearing the crude wooden stump, and rushing to him embraces this poor substitute for his severed leg, the love, pity and tremendous emotion that shines in her face will cause a tug at the heart. And she repeats this effect when they are finally reunited.

The entire cast does wonderful work, George O'Hara scores in the thankless role of Derek and Vadin Uranoff is remarkably fine as the half-wit cabin boy. Striking too is the portrayal of Sojin as the Chinese pirate-magician-friend of Captain Ahab which adds a weird and uncanny note to the heavily surcharged dramatic atmosphere of the whaling ship.

Millard Webb's direction of this story is excellent. He has concentrated on the virile, vigorous drama and in making this an epic of the rough, hard seamen who comprised the whaling crews he has heavily stressed these angles, so much so that some of the situations are gruesome. Although the actual application of the hot irons to the hero's severed leg or his obliteration of the tattoo marks on his arm by the same means is not actually shown, the heating of the irons, the clouds of vapor are, and the effect is there for the suffering portrayed in the face of Barrymore leaves nothing to the imagination. Tender-hearted, nervous women and the squeamish males may quail at these scenes and some may call them too gruesome, but they are intensely dramatic, in keeping with the ruggedness and vigor of the story and offer the star some of his best chances to show his wonderful ability as an actor. The entire production is high class. There are thrills in the whaling scenes and the death of Moby Dick especially. The atmosphere of the sea and the whaling vessels is superbly suggested and there is the finest lot of scenes showing a terrific storm at sea with mountainous waves engulfing the boat, that we have ever seen.

Again we say, with John Barrymore in the stellar role "The Sea Beast" should prove a tremendous box-office attraction.

WITH Mary Philbin as the star, portraying both the title role and that of Unity Blake, the poor little orphan girl, Universal is offering as a Universal-Jewel production an adaptation of William J. Locke's celebrated novel "Stella Maris."

Characteristic of this author's stories there is a strong whimsical note in "Stella Maris." This name, signifying star of the sea, is applied to a young girl, the daughter of a wealthy and titled English couple, who lives in a big castle by the sea. She has never walked since birth and has been brought up in a world of fantasy to believe that everything is beautiful and good. Aiding in keeping up this fairyland atmosphere of lordly knights and wicked monsters are John Risca and Walter Herold. Risca is separated from his cruel and unfaithful wife who is finally arrested for torturing her servant Unity, and sentenced to prison for three years. John takes Unity into his home and she worships him with doglike devotion. Herold secures a great physician who cures Stella. John tells her of his love and then is filled with remorse and cannot bring himself to let her know he is married. His wife, Louisa, released from prison, tells Stella the truth and to aid in her revenge makes insinuations regarding Unity. Stella goes to London to seek John and finds her air castles crumbling when she sees John's plain home and meets ugly little Unity. John says Louisa has lived too long when he hears of his wife's visit to Stella. Little Unity overhears him and kills Louisa and herself. During a storm, Stella seeks shelter in Herold's arms and finds out that it is he that she really loves.

The earlier scenes play up Locke's whimsical note and show Stella Maris in striking contrast to Unity. Director Charles Brabin, however, has in the later development stressed the melodramatic possibilities of the theme, the intense cruelty, hate and vindictiveness of John's wife, her trial and vow of vengeance and the sacrificial love of Unity in taking Louisa's and her own life. These scenes are all well handled and develop thrills and provide good box-office situations. In fact, Mr. Brabin's whole handling of the story is with the box-office in view. He has used in this picture the best examples of which is commonly known as double exposure, we have ever seen. Miss Philbin as Stella passes directly in front of herself as Unity, both faces being visible all the time precluding the use of a double and finally you even see Stella kissing Unity upon the cheek. This is a remarkable instance of fine camera work and it will mystify the spectators who will marvel as to how it is done.

The contrast in the roles of Stella and Unity are such as to try the ability of a player, and Miss Philbin comes through with flying colors. She is delightfully girlish, sweet and ethereal as Stella. As Unity she has used extremely effective make-up with false nose, made-up teeth and other devices that render her unrecognizable and positively ugly. Despite this make-up her facial work is remarkable and in fact her entire handling of the role is different from her portrayal of Stella. Her emotional scenes, handicapped by the make-up are wonderfully expressive.

Elliott Dexter gives a good performance as John Risca and Jason Robards is fine as Walter Herold. Gladys Brockwell gives a strikingly effective performance as John's cruel wife. The remainder of the cast is entirely capable.

"Stella Maris" will add to the laurels of Miss Philbin and should prove a good attraction for the average audience.

Entertaining Production Filmed in Alaska Has Pleasing Story and Fine Scenic Shots

Based on novel by Barrett Willoughby
Scenario by Jack Cunningham and Elliott J. Clawson
Directed by George Melford
Length, 6,013 feet.

IN "Rocking Moon," lovers of good things in motion pictures will find a story that is wholly pleasing, nay, even engrossing, for in addition to the invigorating "shots" taken in Southern Alaska, with their great sweep of space, compassing snow-capped mountain tops, Mr. Willoughby's novel has been well told in pictures by a master of this work, George Melford.

Coupled with a story of charm and action, Mr. Melford had a fine roster of players. The photography is excellent, and goes a long way toward approaching some of the best that has come down from the Far North.

Briefly, the story tells of Sasha Larinoff, whose fox ranch on Rocking Moon Island, in the Aleutian group off Alaska, is the scene of the principal action in the picture. Sasha is aided by her brother, Feodor, and Soya, a native girl servant. Col. Jeff holds sway over the ranch, as he is an expert on the fox and its ways, and curing skins for the market and Milady's gorgeous coats.

Nick Nash, a handsome young man, owner of a trading company and a speed motor boat, loves Sasha. His father willed him, among other things, a mortgage on Rocking Moon, and the girl and her father, who is absent from the ranch, seek to pay off this mortgage with the season's sale of foxes. Gary Tynan, an American soldier returning by slow stages from Siberia, misses his boat and is marooned amid these surroundings, and takes a position with the girl.

Sasha discovers traces of marauders, little suspecting that the rough men who are poaching on her fox farm are in reality allies of Nick. Gary discovers the duplicity, but it is not until Nick has lured Sasha to the mainland seeking Soya, whom Nick lures away from Rocking Moon, that developments come rather rapidly.

Nick seeks to have "Side Money" remains on Rocking Moon Island, and he also seeks to get Gary on board a ship bound for the States. But Gary is too fond of Sasha to dart away. While Gary, in Sasha's absence, is at work on the farm, he is attacked, beaten, bound and gagged, but overhears the plans of "Sound Money" to raid Sasha's foxes. Gary gets free while the poachers are at work, and finds his way in a kayak to the mysterious island of Oo-Koon, the headquarters for the thieves as well as the supposed home of the native gods.

Gary discovers the cave where the bandits are at work, and also finds Nick and Soya. In a fight with Nick, Gary overpowers the rich marauder, but Soya, who loves Nick, sets him free from his bonds while Sasha and Gary retrieve their prized foxes and pelts. Nick escapes in his speed boat, bound for Siberia and exile. But Sasha and Gary find a great love, and they remain on Rocking Moon.

Miss Tashman never looked prettier, nor played with greater restraint, than in this picture. Mr. Bowers is always ideal as our hero, achieving a corking "make-up" in his first sequences, and calmly diving into the icy Alaskan waters with the nonchalence of a true Southern California "fan." Mr. Fellowes never fails to command our respect in his charming "villain" roles, and Messrs. Cosgrave and Pallette are excellent in their respective roles.

Concerning Miss Winter—well! Somebody oughta give 'er a medal. We have had the pleasure of studying Miss Winter's work in several pictures. We wish there were more of 'em. Laska (of whom we confess to knowing very little, if, indeed aught of critical importance) has personality, and much that other young players lack. Seems to us that, given a splendid role she would measure up to a truly high standard of acting. The promise is there.

"Rocking Moon" measures up to the requirements of a very fine entertainment, and we believe that exhibitors will discover that this is the fact.

Barthelmess Film is Romance of Foreign Prince and American Girl—Has Clever Surprise Ending

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

IN "JUST SUPPOSE," his newest starring vehicle for First National which is an adaptation of a stage play by A. E. Thomas, Richard Barthelmess appears in the role of a younger prince of a mythical Balkan kingdom who visits America and falls in love with one of our girls. The sudden death of his elder brother makes him the crown prince and duty calls him back, but just as he is about to be married to an ugly-duckling princess fate takes a hand and he is enabled to marry the girl of his choice.

The earlier scenes in the mythical kingdom of Koronia have been developed so as to get some amusing light comedy out of the pomp of royalty and create a sympathetic atmosphere for the young prince who makes light of royal dignity and tradition. Arriving in America, he is bored at the round of interviews, functions, etc., and eagerly embraces an opportunity to play polo. He again sees the American girl who fascinated him in his own country and feigning sickness gets himself invited to stay over night by the girl's mother. Here the tempo changes and the heart interest angle worked up in the flight of this ideal young pair who find themselves torn from each other by his duty to his country.

There is a surprise ending that is not only amusing but decidedly clever. Of course, you feel sure that he will eventually be able to marry the girl, and everything is worked to point to a revolution as the solution. At the crucial moment the prince jumps in his car and hastens to the villa where the girl is visiting and tells her the big news, that he is no longer the crown prince as not one but two sons have been born to his brother's widow.

Barthelmess gives an excellent performance as the prince both in the comedy and the love scene and Lois Moran does fine work as the girl, especially in the emotional scenes where she finds the prince must leave her, acting with much feeling and realism. Geoffrey Kerr shines as the prince's pal and the other players are entirely satisfactory.

"Just Suppose" is light but pleasing entertainment, with a nice mixture of comedy, heart interest and romance and a climax that will satisfy and leave patrons smiling.

Jacqueline Logan and Lou Tellegen in Dramatic Romance of a Gypsy Healer and a Titled Dancer

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

JACQUELINE LOGAN and Lou Tellegen appear in the leading roles of the William Fox picturization of "The Outsider," a stage play by Dorothy Brandon which deals with a romance between a Hungarian gypsy healer and a titled London dancer.

Leontine, the girl, visits Hungary with her dancing partner to get new dances and meets Ragatzy, who has wrought a number of wonderful cures. She is injured so that she cannot walk but refuses the aid of Ragatzy who is in love with her, believing him to be a faker. Later in England, after famous surgeons fail to cure her, she consents to allow Ragatzy to try. In the test he apparently has failed and starts to leave when she realizes she loves him and in seeking to cause him to stay she walks towards him.

The title refers to the antagonism of the girl's father, a doctor, and the London medical profession generally to the claims of Ragatzy whom they scoff at and call an outsider. This supplies dramatic conflict and there is a strange fascination in the character of Ragatzy and his mystic powers of healing. Lou Tellegen is congenially cast as the Gypsy healer and gives an interesting performance. Jacqueline Logan is fine as the girl and the scene where she fails and then walks is well done and provides a real kick. The way the story turn out can be easily surmised but there is an effective surprise angle that provides a good ending when love rather than the powers of the healer cause the girl to walk. The entire cast does good work.

The story holds the interest and Director Rowland V. Lee has handled the theme so that he develops good tension and brings out the dramatic points. "The Outsider" will probably afford pleasing entertainment for the average patron.

Lewis Stone, Co-Featured With Anna Q. Nilsson, Wins Laurels as Comedian in Amusing Feature

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

IMAGINE Lewis Stone as a janitor with dust covered over-size overalls and derby or as a delicatessen clerk stumbling with an armful of packages and dishing out herrings to a mob of customers. Yet, this is actually the way he appears in two of the sequences of the First National production "Too Much Money" in which he is featured with Anna Q. Nilsson adapted from a play by Israel Zangwill.

The idea of the picture is carried in the title. Stone as the millionaire Broadley finds his wife has little time from her social duties to devote to him. His pal Stuart tells him it is a case of too much money killing love and persuades him to make over his wealth to him and feign bankruptcy to test his wife's Annabel's love. She proves a true sport, they take an East Side walk-up apartment and she gets him the before-mentioned jobs. Stuart proves to be a scoundrel and prepares to abscond to Europe with the money, Annabel agrees to go with him but leaves word for Broadley who follows and boarding the ship thrashes Stuart. Annabel who has, of course, learned of the deception, then produces the securities into which Stuart has converted the property and which she has taken from his grip, so all ends well.

The story opens as a straight comedy drama and the ready acceptance by the successful business man of his friend's plan to turn over his wealth hardly seems logical,

SINCE the film success of "Humoresque," Fannie Hurst's name has been to conjure with, but in "Mannequin," the story which won the Liberty Magazine $50,000 prize she owes much to James Cruze and an exceptionally well-chosen cast of players. Working with the screen in mind, Miss Hurst developed a lot of "sure fire" situations, but with less careful development and direction the story might have gone West for all that. As it is "Mannequin" is powerful and even gripping.

The tensity has been carefully sustained to a dramatic close, and rather abrupt cutting eliminates a mass of waste detail following the big scene. But the story is secondary to the players, for the intent of the plot is to develop a situation in which the hero's editorials against a maudlin sentimentality in favor of women murderers is turned against the woman he loves. This is not action material, and the scenarist has wisely dropped this into second place, seeking to develop interest in the story through the characters rather than the situation.

Length, 6981 feet.

Most of this interest goes to the three women chiefly concerned; the half-witted nursegirl who steals the little girl, the girl herself, grown to womanhood, and the mother.

The first part affords a wonderful opportunity to Zasu Pitts to prove that she is an actress as well as a comedienne. Her make-up suggests comedy and that she was able to force the character through this eccentric make-up speaks volumes. Not once did she get a laugh where no laugh was intended. In the later scenes, stronger in their dramatic appeal, she is not so much hampered by her make-up. These she played with restrained force that gave the necessary contrast to the flower-like child. Dolores Costello, as the girl grown to young womanhood, was very effective in what could have been made a simpering flapper. Alice Joyce, as the mother, dominated the early scenes as the auction-hunting young wife and was her better known self in the later period.

Warner Baxter was capital in a negative sort of role, and Walter Pidgeon played the newspaper man with sincerity. Freeman Wood was given a couple of chances in a tough role, and many unprogrammed characters did well enough to deserve mention.

Mr. Cruze has made "Mannequin" into a fine play, carefully building suspense and holding the tension in growing volume to the very end. He even makes a court room sequence interesting.

Hilarious Burlesque of War Films, Starring Raymond Griffith, Bubbles Over With Laughs

A ROLLICKING burlesque on war pictures, filled with snappy new gags and hilarious farce comedy situations that are sure to get the laughs and keep an audience in chuckles is "Hands Up," Raymond Griffith's newest starring picture for Paramount, based on a story written especially for him by Reginald Morris.

Of course, with Griffith in the stellar role, you naturally expect lively comedy, and you get plenty of it as the film progresses, but this picture has been given an unexpected and clever touch by showing the opening scenes as if it were a serious war melodrama. Abraham Lincoln, portrayed by George Billings, is shown with his cabinet discussing the plight of the Union at a crucial point in the Civil War and it is decided that the best available man must go West to secure needed gold from a mine. Then Robert E. Lee is shown conferring over plans to destroy this mine. Griffith appears in a cloud of dust and is picked for the job and there begins a rapid succession of laughable situations showing his schemes to thwart the Union general's plans ending with the declaration of peace which finds him in love with two sisters. The appearance of Brigham Young with a score of wives gives Griffith his cue and he sets out for Salt Lake City with the pair. This makes a peach of an ending that should go over big with any audience.

Griffith is fine all the way through and has been given effective support by Marion Nixon and Virginia Lee Corbin as the girls he loves, Mack Swain as the mine owner, and Montagu Love as the Union general. Clarence Badger has certainly brought out to the utmost the comedy possibilities of the story and nicely handled the war stuff so as to make it all good-natured fun without offending either side. This picture is chock full of excellent and decidedly clever gags too numerous to mention in detail, among which are, the way in which Griffith escapes a firing squad by holding plates in the air for them to shoot at, and the attack by Indians who shoot arrows through the wagon; Griffith pays no attention thinking the girls' father is shooting rabbits the same as he was a few minutes before and believes the whizzing of the arrows is the buzzing of a bee that has gotten into the wagon.

but when the action is later given a comedy twist it is seen that this is in keeping with the farce comedy idea, and this is the angle that Director John Francis Dillon has stressed. Some of the things that Mr. Stone is made to do border on slapstick, they certainly are handled in broad comedy fashion, and the very fact that he has heretofore been identified with dignified high-class roles makes his work in the comedy scenes all the more amusing. The comedy angle is also aided by amusing and sparkling subtitles which give a hint of the comedy that is to follow, and provide many a chuckle. While his fans will be surprised to see him in comedy, Mr. Stone's work certainly registers and should get the laughs.

Anna Q. Nilsson is excellent as Mr. Stone's wife and Robert Cain makes an effective false friend. "Too Much Money" will give your patrons a surprise and will afford amusing entertainment for them.

NAVIGATOR. (5,600 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. This is certainly a real comedy, the best one of this star to date for me. You cannot go wrong on this one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. All classes town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Onida Theatre (225 seats), Onida, South Dakota.

REVELATION. Star, Viola Dana. This is a very fine production. Nine reels. Rather long for program picture, but holds the attention of audience. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30 regular. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

SNOB. (6,913 feet). Star cast. Good picture, no fault to find. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WAY OF A GIRL. (6 reels). Star, Eleanor Boardman. Just an ordinary program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Factory and farm class town of 5,000. Admission 10-20-30. G. J. Kamm, Grand Theatre (800 seats), Ephrata, Pennsylvania.

WINE OF YOUTH. Star, Eleanor Boardman. This is one of the jazziest pictures we have had. Pleased to say we only had a small attendance both nights; but those who saw it did enough knocking. It sure is a business killer in small towns. We tried to get another picture in its stead, but failed. Boys, never buy a block of pictures and let the exchange pick them out. We sure have learned a lesson. This is rotten. Tone, bad. Not suitable for any day. Appeal, five or ten per cent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30, regular. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

Paramount

CODE OF THE WEST. (6,777). Star, Moore-Bennett. This was a dandy good picture, and would say pleased my crowds 95 per cent. A picture that will take most anywhere. Tone good. Yes for Sunday and as special. Fine appeal. Draw all classes, town of 500. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatres (200 seats) Onamia, Minnesota.

GOLDEN PRINCESS. (8,584 ft.). Star, Betty Bronson. Very clever picture well acted and with some beautiful scenery all the way through. Photography good. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Small town class and farmers towns of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

KISS IN THE DARK. (5,767). Star, A. Menjou. Not the kind of a show for us on a Saturday. It might please in the cities but not in a small town. Not up to the Paramount standard. Tone, fair. Special, no. Good appeal. Draw better class, town about 4,500. Admission 20-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

LORD JIM. (6,700 feet).. Star cast. I thought that when I ran "Pace of Thrills," a First National picture, that it was the rottenest show that was ever made, but this one takes the prize, it is absolutely one of the worst that I ever ran, and I have been at it now for fourteen years. Just can't see how they have the nerve to feet us this kind and then send a salesman in to sell us more trademarks, as that is all that you get out of this one, a trademark, Paramount. If you run this one tell them in advance that it is a bum show, and to save their money. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

LORD JIM. (6,702 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. Joseph Conrad's popular story. A good sea picture enacted by a good cast. Beery and Hatton included in cast. Just released, new print. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Fair appeal. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

LOVERS IN QUARANTINE. (6,570 ft.) Star, Bebe Daniels. The best Daniels I ever ran. A riot of real laughs. Ran it one day. Wish I had it bought for two days. Title not much but oh boy, what a picture. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

LUCKY DEVIL. (5,935 feet). Star, Richard Dix. A very good picture. Similar to the Wally Reid race pictures. Good comedy, action and thrills. Should please all classes. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

Between Ourselves

A get together place where we can talk things over

When right—stand up and fight.

But when wrong—apologize.

So here's an abject apology to Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

He writes to call attention to fact that in his report for "Off the Highway" (Pro-Dis-Co), he was quoted as saying, "This is an unusual picture and is going to mean much... unless you go after it," whereas it was originally reported by him, "is NOT going to mean much—UNLESS YOU GET AFTER IT."

Also, through the press mixing up a heading which I didn't catch, Dave's report on "Lorraine of the Lions" was headed "Roaring Adventure"—a picture he had not played.

Sorry. Try to watch closely, but when an error does creep in, am willing to say I'm the goat VAN MADAME SANS GENE. (9,904 ft.). Star, Gloria Swanson. Gloria does some wonderful acting in this production. It's a gorgeous picture, but didn't make good at our box-office and we advertised it heavy, too. Cheaper pictures with more action go over bigger here. Mixed class town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A little different from the rest of her pictures, but pleased the majority of the people. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

MANHANDLED. (6,998). Star, Gloria Swanson. Was too slow to suit the majority although some thought it was good. Good cast and very good acting. Tone, good. Sunday, yes, and special, no. Fair appeal. Draw all classes, town of 500. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre, (200 seats) Onamia, Minnesota.

MANICURE GIRL. (5,989 ft.). Star, Bebe Daniels. Poor, not much appeal. Lacks something and didn't go over. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor appeal. Farmers town of 412. Admission 10-25. J. C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium, Benoit, Mississippi.

MANICURE GIRL. (5,989 ft.). Star, Bebe Daniels. This is a picture where a rich married man takes an innocent girl from her poor, but faithful lover. Has a strong moral in it, and is well acted. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

MANNEQUIN. Star, Dolores Costello. This is a fine offering and brings the readers of the story in to see it. Dolores Costello is a real star and her work is very appealing. This is no Saturday offering for small town. Tone and appeal, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

MEN AND WOMEN. (6,232). Star, Richard Dix. Played on a Saturday and pleased the adults fairly well, but it did not cause any stir with the youngsters. Dix deserves something better. Tone, O. K. Special, no. Fair appeal. Draw better class, town of 4,500. Admission 20-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

MEN AND WOMEN. (6,232). Star, Richard Dix. Not a right story for Dix. Pleased about 50 per cent. A. Cataland, Victory Theatre, Rossiter Pennsylvania.

NIGHT CLUB. (5,721). Star, Raymond Griffith. This boy is fine. The first time I have had a picture of his, and everybody was well pleased with him. Hope the rest of his pictures are as good as this one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Draw all classes, town of 500. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

NIGHT LIFE IN NEW YORK. (6,908 feet). Star cast. Good entertainment. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star cast. An excellent western Texas picture of the cattle country after the Civil War wnen they had to drive cattle hundreds of miles to a shipping; not quite as good as the "Covered Wagon." Tone, very good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

NOT SO LONG AGO. (6,943 ft.). Star cast. Just an ordinary picture. Not good and not bad. Paper hurt it here as it looked like a costume picture. My crowd positively will not stand for a costume or a foreign picture regardless of who makes it or who plays in it. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

OLD HOME WEEK. (6,780 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. I have read some very good reports on this but it certainly was a lemon to my patrons. Had more walkouts on this than any picture in a coon's age. So that is testimony enough as to what kind of picture it is. In two reels less it would have been a good program picture. Made a little money, though, but not the fault of the picture. Tone, good. Special, no. Town and rural class in small town. Admission 10-25. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre (300 seats), Granbury, Texas.

PATHS TO PARADISE. (6,741 ft.). Star, Raymond Griffith. Good feature comedy with touch of slapstick; patron did not like as well as "Lord Chumley" (Forty Winks). Special, no. A. Entwisle, Dreamland Theatre, Edmonton, Altoona.

SAINTED DEVIL. (8,633 ft.). Star, Rudolph Valentino. A very good picture that got by fairly good. However, I do not believe that it is a good picture for the small town. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Appeal, 80 per cent. All classes, town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Onida Theatre, Onida, South Dakota.

SHOCK PUNCH. (6,151 ft.). Star, Richard Dix. Could not locate the "punch," but got the "shock" when we checked up. Two days wasted. No business. No favorable comment. A very ordinary picture. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SHOCK PUNCH. (6,151 ft.). Star, Richard Dix. An action picture. Pleased everyone. Buy the Dix's. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Appeal 100 per cent. Factory class and farmers, town of 5,000. Admission 10-20-30. G. J. Kamm, Grand Theatre (800 seats), Ephrata, Pennsylvania.

SPANIARD. (6,676 ft.). Star, Ricardo Cortez. Played two days in competition with local American Legion show and with snow one night we were sunk at the old box office. Besides that, we were oversold on this as the show is only ordinary. Tone, okay. Special, no. Poor appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SPANISH DANCER. (8,434 ft.). Star, Pola Negri. A dandy good eight-reel picture. Pleased my people. Good comments. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre, La Belle, Missouri.

Pathe

BATTLING ORIOLES. Star cast. Did not take very well with our crowd. Too much fighting and nothing to hold the interest of crowd. Tone fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, 60 per cent. J. M. Blanchard, Lone Rock, Kossuth County, Iowa.

FRESHMAN. Star, Harold Lloyd. This is a wonderful comedy production. No exhibitor should pass it up. Will please any audience. Tone okay. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, 100 per cent. All classes, town of 1,000. Admission 10-30 regular. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

PEROY. (6 reels). Star, Charles Ray. This is about the best Ray I have ever run and they should have given Charlie Murray the lead, as he was the whole thing. Good cast and good action. Tone and appeal good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 ft.). Star, Syd Chaplin. A very good comedy that did a good business; however, not as good as many reports indicated. Too silly and impossible in many places. However, it will get many good laughs as a whole and do business despite a few who may kick. Well worth featuring and advertising big, as it will do business. Special, yes. Appeal, 90 per cent. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 ft.). Star, Syd Chaplin. Old melodrama, but it certainly pleased the patrons. Think it will go anywhere. Something about it that gets home. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, 100 per cent. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placervile, California.

CHORUS LADY. Star cast. This is a very good picture and above the average program picture. I have found these Producers Distributing Corp. pictures to all be good, and in fact as good as the average Paramount and First National program pictures. The pictures are good, but lack the box office appeal as the others. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

HELL'S HIGHROAD. (6,084 ft.). Star, Leatrice Joy. A good story murdered in the direction. The baby must have got hold of the book and tore out one-third of the leaves before the director put it in pictures. If we were to give this an A B C rating we would put it in about the X class, and the worst of it was we selected it for our Sunday show, at which time we always try and give our patrons an extra good program and raise our admission prices. This picture is advertised as being directed under the supervision of Cecil B. DeMille. We are surprised that such a director would stand for anything like this. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, South Dakota.

United Artists

DON Q. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Best he was ever in. Pleased them 90 per cent. Douglas goes over big here. G. A. Peterson, Cozy Theatre, Hollis, Oklahoma.

DON Q. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Blessed be a picture show man, for his days are few and of much trouble. That is what we said when we played Fairbanks in "Don Q." Raised the price. Got balled up and balled out, cussed and discussed. Just appears to me that it could have been done in six reels instead of eleven. It just took me that much longer to lose the money is all we can say. Fine picture though; all three of them said it was. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

SALLY OF THE SAWDUST. Star cast. I've played lots of pictures since I've been in the business, but this darned thing kind of gives me a dizziness. Unknown stars and no name to attract the kind folks. I am not a real grouch, but I don't like such jokes. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Universal

FAST EXPRESS. Star, William Duncan. Fair picture and story, but it seems that the fan does not keep up with it. A. Catalano, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

LITTLE GIANT. Star, Glen Hunter. While this is not as strong as the rest of Universal Jewels it is a pretty good one just the same, and you can still look them in the eye as they pass out of the old joint. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special. No. Appeal, 60 per cent. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

MEDDLER. Star, William Desmond. Just an ordinary program western. Suitable for small towns and neighborhood houses where this type is no doubt popular. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 ft.). Star Reginald Denny. Few more like it and I can sell his picture to the customer like hot cakes. He is good; I enjoyed it like my patrons did. A. Catalano, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

ROSE OF PARIS. Star, Mary Philbin. A fair picture; not anything extra. The only thing I saw good was the acting of Robert Cain. Tone and appeal good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

TAMING OF THE WEST. Star, Hoot Gibson. Received favorable comments from my patrons on this one. Did not see it myself. Business satisfactory. Tone and appeal good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington.

WHITE OUTLAW. Star, Jack Hoxie. Satisfactory western with Scout, the white horse, carrying off the banner leading role. Some horse, some dog. Hoxie was much in the background with such a banner attraction. Opera House, Shepherdstown, West Virginia.

WINE. (6,220 ft.). A very fine picture, full of exploitation possibilities and extremely pleasing. Some rich and racy scenes with a good moral pointed. Step on it. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Fine appeal. Better class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Vitagraph

BAREE, SON OF KAZAN. (6,803 ft.). Star, Anita Stewart. One of Curwood's best. Very pleasing picture. Small town class and farmers, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. C. C. Golden, Missuri Theatre (250 seats), La Belle, Missouri.

STAMPEDE THUNDER. Star cast. Another good Pete Morrison. All of his have been good and have had very few bad ones among them all. Plenty of action. Tone and appeal good. Sunday and special, no. Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

Biggest Family in Motion Picture Field

"Dear Van, certainly appreciate your thoughtfulness in mailing holiday card to Johnson and myself. Makes us feel good to know that we are in such close contact with the greatest and best of trade publications, THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, and gives us the feeling that WE ARE ALL PART OF ONE GREAT FAMILY.

"Your interest in the welfare of the exhibitor, big and little, has certainly been appreciated by this outfit and by all the others, we know, and thanks are due you for keeping 'Our Gang's' department standing on its hind legs.

"Both join in wishing you and Mrs. Powell and Our Straight from the Shoulder Gang the happiest and most prosperous New Year of your lives."

JOHNSON & HEDBURG,
Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

STEELE OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED. Star Cast. James Oliver Curwood novel. A very fine Northern picture. Northern pictures liked here and picture went over good. An A1 Northern. Small town class and farmers, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre (250 seats), La Belle, Missouri.

WILDFIRE. (6,550 ft.). Star, Aileen Pringle. Fine picture. Good story, good action; all in all a very fine picture. Small town class and farmers, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre (250 seats), La Belle, Missouri.

Warner Bros.

BOBBED HAIR. Star cast. As I said before, boys, Warners are getting better all the time. Someone better watch out, as I hate to have my competitor playing them at me. They more than satisfy. G. A. Peterson, Cozy Theatre (502 seats), Hollis, Oklahoma.

BROADWAY BUTTERFLY. (7,705 ft.) Star cast. Had lots of favorable comments, but also had lots of knocks. People thought it contained too many legs and spicy situations. Paper is good and it is easy to advertise and exploit. Tone, questionable. Sunday and special, no. Fair appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

CLASH OF THE WOLVES. Star, Rin-Tin-Tin (dog). I played all of Rin-Tin-Tin's ever made, and my people eat them up, but, boys, don't fail to get Rin-Tin in "Clash of the Wolves." Best ever. I broke all house records for Saturday night and they went wild. Warner Brothers is a dark horse and some exhibitors are just begging to find out. I ran "Clash of Wolves" first in state and will say buy it, and step on it. You can't go wrong. G. A. Peterson, Cozy Theatre, Hollis, Oklahoma.

PRINTER'S DEVIL. (7 reels. Star, Wesley Barry. Wesley is getting older but that doesn't detract much from his perforamnce. In this picture he and Harry Myers are admirable cast in a small town printer's office and are accused of bank burglary. Ought to go anywhere. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

RED HOT TIRES. Star, Monte Blue. I thought Monte Blue was real in "Limited Mail," but "Red Hot Tires" is real. He pleased them 100 per cent. Monte has won a home here in 90 per cent. of our show goers. Warner Bros. new pictures are great. G. A. Peterson, Cozy Theatre (502 seats), Hollis, Oklahoma.

TRACKED IN THE SNOW COUNTRY. Star, Rin-Tin-Tin (dog). Rin-Tin-Tin is Warner's best bet here. We have to run them to make up for our losses on other Warner pictures for this town. This one sure is great. Get all Rin-Tin's pictures if you can. No disappointment. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, 100 per cent. Factory class. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

If you haven't been sending tips for a while because you've been busy—don't forget "Our Gang"—the boys come to know you, to depend on your faithfulness and sincerity.

Don't disappoint them. Maybe the tip you send will put some dough into a brother exhibitor's pocket. He'd be glad to do the same by you.

This dependable tip department can't reach its fullest usefulness WITHOUT YOUR HELP.

Independents

BOOMERANG. (B. P. Schulberg). Star, Anita Stewart. Played two days to poor business. This proved to be a very poor drawing card. Our crowds like more action than this one had. Print was in good shape. Tone, good. Special, no. Fair appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

FIGHTING COURAGE. (5,000 ft.). Star, Ken Maynard. Ken Maynard seems to be a likable chap, but he is going mighty slow; in fact, if he ever gets anywhere he will have to have better stories and directing. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Not much appeal. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

LAWLESS TRAILS. (State Right). Star, Bruce Gordon. This will do for any house that likes good western with plenty of action. Tone and appeal good. Sunday and special, no. Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. B. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats) Piqua, Ohio.

OVERLAND LIMITED. (Independent Pictures). Star cast. This is supposed to be a big special. Up to the last reel it is the bunk. The last reel pleases them with lots of hokum and sends them away satisfied. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

RATTLER. (State Right). Star, Jack Meehan. A western of the common garden variety sort. Nothing to rave about but to run and pass on to the next one. About the same old stuff. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, 50 per cent. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

RECREATION OF BRIAN KENT. (Principal). Star, aymond Hatton. Not the picture for business or satisfaction that Harold Bell Wright's book was "When a Man's a Man." Pleased those who saw it. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, 70 per cent. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25; specials, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats) Emporium, Pennsylvania.

SPEED. (Banner). Star Betty Blythe. (6 reels). A study program picture that pleased most all my patrons. Prints in first class shape. Don't be afraid to buy this one, as you can buy it right from Enterprise Distributing Corporation. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, 95 per cent. General class, town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

Joy, Pennsylvania.

TEARIN' LOOSE. (State Right). Star, Wally Wales. Wales' first picture, and he doesn't fall off his horse once. He'll fall right in with the regular average western crowd. No better and no worse. A Dollar for Your Time

In an effort to make this Quick Reference Picture Chart just as accurate as human carefulness can make it, we offer to the reader who finds MAJOR ERRORS, such as a wide discrepancy between printed footage on a feature or features and that which is a fact, One Dollar for your trouble in writing us a letter stating the correct facts.

Please do not consider errors that do not actually work a hardship on the user of this Chart—such as a misplaced parenthesis, or a minor typographical error.

What we want you to point out is the often unavoidable discrepancy between the footage that comes to us at time of reviewing a picture and the time you play it, caused by cutting down of a picture and failure of producer to give us correct facts regarding the changed footage.

We cannot secure exact footage on all Short Subjects and so the general term "1,000" or "2,000" feet is applied, broadly, one or two-reel subjects. We've tried to get exact Short Subject footage, and as soon as we can get it will print it exactly. Till then, consider the broader designation as the best we can do.

When you write us about a major error, realize, please, that it will take a little time to check up, and be patient—we will not delay sending you the dollar for your trouble any longer than is absolutely compulsory.

The Theatre of To-Day

Presentations ~ Prologues ~ Music

Edited by Colby Harriman

The Note Book

MUCH can be said both for and against screen announcements for the various units of a program. Printed programs are really a necessity as we find that a number of patrons desire to preserve a program either for record or to send to friends. To depend upon a printed program to efficiently inform the patrons of the various units, especially in a house that maintains a continuous policy, is not really advisable. To render the service which we are always taking about, it is a good thing to follow the plan generally used by the Publix Theatres in using screen announcements of the various acts which precede the introduction of the unit. The patrons are educated to reading what is on the screen. If the screen announcement is not laden with a huge cast, the titles serve to better advantage. But, if you note how people will juggle, squirm and squint at programs, often missing the introduction of an act and trying to find out what is offered, it can be readily ascertained why the 'largest' circuit has adopted this plan of screen announcements, and a limited amount of programs for those who request them.

I WAS talking with a producer who is going to Europe for a few weeks to contribute his part "in the Americanization of European motion picture theatres." There seems to be quite a bit of elation on the part of certain individuals relative to this socalled American invasion. It is suggested that the attitude of the American producer, who is fortunate enough to be invited as a guest of any of the new temples of the motion picture art which are springing up in the various capitals and leading centers of the Old World, be marked with a sincerity and a super-concentration on what he is assigned to do. Europe's development of the new art which is bound to find a reflection in this field may act as a boomerang. It is suggested that we work with the Europeans rather than to attempt to show them.

QUITE an interesting analysis could be written on the subject of "Adventures in the Land of Jazz-Rhapsody Compositions." At the Mark Strand Theatre, the orchestra played a new composition by Emil Gerstenberger entitled "Jazz Rhapsody No. 1" which was composed for a symphony orchestra and rendered without employing any of the regular jazz instruments. At the Rivoli Theatre the Elkins orchestra rendered George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." Both compositions have meritorious moments; the Gerstenberger composition is not so well balanced as the Gershwin score. The Elkins orchestra is decidedly a jazz playing outfit and while they lack the musical fineness apparent in the larger symphony orchestra, yet the composition in its symphonic form expresses more truly the jaz symphony note which both composers have attempted to introduce.

The News Galley

KEITH ARMISTICE OR TRUCE?

THE question arising in various theatre circles is—Will the recent partnership or co-operative arrangement entered into with Publix Theatres and Keith Vaudeville Organization be the first step towards a recinding of the recent Keith order that Standard Acts desiring Keith time were not to play leading motion picture theatres considered as opposition by the vaudeville interests? Keith is interested with Publix in the new Metropolitan, Boston, and now in a measure in Shea's new theatre in Buffalo. It is a recognized fact that the artists comprising, the presentations offered in the Publix policy houses are recruited from vaudeville, and with the demand for "name" acts, the best ones being under the Keith banner, it looks like a compromise or get-to-gether for better business.

WENGER NOT FOR LONDON

A report submitted last week which stated that John Wenger, well known scenic artist, had sailed on the Leviathan for London has proved erroneous. Plans are off, at least temporarily, for Wenger to be identified with the opening of the Plaza Theatre, London.

OUMANSKY MARRIES DANCER

Alexander Oumansky, ballet master at the new UFA theatre in Berlin was married recently to Peggy White, niece of Sam Rachmann, German Representative of Paramount. Mrs. Oumansky is a member of the ballet, the dancing partner of her husband, who will be remembered as a former ballet master at the Capitol Theatre, New York.

EDWARDS THREE PUBLIX PRODUCTIONS

Gut Edwards, according to report, has been engaged by Publix Theatres to produce three presentation productions to be routed over the circuit after teh opening at the Rivoli, New York. His first production will be titled "The Garden of Girls."

RIESENFELD OPENS OFFICES

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, formerly managing director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion Theatres, New York City, has opened offices in the new Steinway Hall Building, this city. PRESENTATION NEWS REQUESTED

With motion picture theatres throughout the country starting to add presentations to their regular programs we are particularly desirous of securing direct information, news items and other data relative to the openings, policies, and house personnel.

KURT SCHINDLER, prominent choral conductor, who has been recently engaged by S. L. Rothafel to direct the permanent chorus of one hundred voices to be a feature in the new Roxy Theatre has communicated to the effect that "Season after season I have given a few performances of my Schola Cantorum in Carnegie Hall, New York, always thinking how I might bring this music before wider audiences. I feel that I have something genuine to offer the public.

"The chorus of the Roxy Theatre will function sometimes alone, sometimes with the orchestra, so that many works both of oratorio and opera will be available. One of the unusual features and a wish I have always hoped to see realized will be the performance of choral music with dancing, thus opening an entirely new reportoire of music. In this way we shall be able to present, for example, the folk dances and songs of Spain, Russia and the Balkans in their original form, and no end of choral and dancing novelties."

WE are taking the liberty of publishing in part, (withholding the name of the author as he is the head of an influential chain of theatres,) a communication received by us. ". . . . and as you know, I make the rounds of the houses in New York, Chicago and other cities to which my business takes me. I have been trying to do a little bit of detective work on my own hook to discover what is wrong with the presentation business, if any. I use presentations in my houses and have had very good luck with them. I find that the main trouble is that producers or whoever stages the numbers think of everything but the climax. It is my idea that no matter how much money is spent in staging a number whether in scenery or people, or costumes, unless a 'punch' is added the whole thing falls flat. I also go to see most of the musical comedy shows and revues whenever I am in the vicinity of the new ones, and when you come to dissect the various parts of a musical comedy show, they are nothing but a series of individual scenes well staged with lots of pep, color and action each having a good climax. It seems to me that presentation business could take a good lesson from musical comedy producers. The end of a number must have something in it that sells it, and is strong enough to make its mark, and for the life of me I can't understand why producers allow these conditions to exist week in and week out and haven't enough common sense to realize what is wrong with them and their productions. We have a wonderful opportunity in this game but we are going to lose it unless some of these producers wake up and get busy."

It is suggested that copy be mailed directly to Mr. Harriman, care of the Moving Picture World as early as possible.

A Prologue to "Braveheart"

Cecil B. De Mille's Picturization of the Play "Strongheart"

Specially Devised for Producers Distributing Corporation by Colby Harriman

(A Prologue or Presentation for a Specific Picture Published Each Week)

"BRAVEHEART" is a veritable treasurehouse of ideas for the producer of prologues and presentations. There is a define love theme in the picture which can be emphasized in the stage creation. There are tribal motifs, some of which hark back to the early days of the American Indian. There is that plaintive and ultimate futile note of a combination of the White and Red emotions. The picture teems with suggestions which may be treated realistically or in an impressionistic manner. We have chosen one of the themes which is purely atmospheric, and will dovetail with the first scene of the picture.

THE SETTING

The accompanying sketches furnish a general outline of the stage and scenic makeup. The prologue is divided into two scenes, the first being semi-impressionistic, and the second emphasizes the realistic note lending itself to a proper blending with the picture. The principal units of the set consist of three hanging pieces and four set pieces. The sketch and ground plot identifies the position of all units. The units may be itemized as follows:

(a) A Painted Scrim,
(b) Fabric Returns with characteristic matifs,
(c) Sky Drop,
(d) Rock Piece,
(e) Ground Row,
(f) Tree Pieces,

1. Painted Scrim

A scrim hung in one should be painted with a design of an Indian blanket, colors dominating the design should be red, blue and greens. The scrim should be drawn taut. If it is impossible to have the scrim painted a desirable effect may be secured by having a slide made bearing the Indian blanket design, and having it projected upon the white scrim using either a special lens so that the projected design covers the entire opening alloted to the scrim, or a proper masking with the returns and border to eliminate a defined frameline. In some theatres it will be necessary to use a black backing to the scrim, and it is suggested that the backing be placed on travellers as the action of drawn curtains is more harmonious than a drop that is taken up.

2. Fabric Returns

The returns which are used to mask and carry off from the opening of both scenes should be of a mettaline material such as silver cloth. Upon each return an Indian motif should be attached. The "teepee" on the right and the "peace pipe" on the left may be cut out of cloth, paper or may be a painted design on canvass, and attached either by sewing or pinning. These returns constantly suggest the theme which is that of the American Indian.

3. Sky Drop

This is hung upstage as far back as possible. A blue painted or fabric drop not hung in folds back of which a large moon box is operated.

4. Rock Piece

This may be a single unit scenically constructed or consisting of painted beaver board cut out and nailed to the platform. At the center of the rock piece there should be a definition of a ledge back of which a platform is placed, a runway may lead to the platform, up, and off to left. Rock piece should be painted to represent a section of a mountainous incline or it may be a solid color achieved with a dark green or blue fabric thrown over the cutout suggesting the rocks rather than depicting them.

5. Ground Row

A low ground or rock row is set extending across the opening directly back of the painted scrim. This is placed to mask and give the foreground necessary room to achieve proper distance.

6. Tree Pieces

The tree pieces consist of three units, the trunk of a large tree is downstage at right; two smaller trunks are visible up left, the bases of the trees meeting the top of the rock piece; a foliage border hung in heavy folds straight may be used to suggest tree-tops, a painted tree constructed or done on a profile may be used, although a satisfactory effect may be achieved with dark brown or gray fabrics hung on a batten in heavy, uneven folds and streaked with a light colored paint to highlight. If the fabric is used it is suggested that the trees and rock piece be in strict silhouette effect.

General Data

Platform up center back of the rock piece should be eight or ten feet high. A moon box should have a diameter of at least eight feet. This may be easily constructed or a spot placed on a high standard focused at center to give the effect.

Lighting Treatment

In the first scene orange amber should predominate. Red and amber foots and first border in a warm blend. The returns should be toned a dark amber and green from the side olivettes, and an orange amber and magenta spot used on the dancers in the first movement of the routine. As Scene 2 is introduced the foreground should change from an orange amber to a deep purple tone which will necessitate eliminating the ambers from the foots and first border, and bring up the blues. As a light back of the scrim comes up the Indian blanket design disappears. The sky drop should be toned a deep blue at the top with a purple intermediate and a deep rose base. The rock piece should be toned a purple and green from the sides. An orange amber spot should be masked down to tone the onstage side of the tree down right. The spot may be set to highlight the lower tips of the foliage border. The same treatment may be used from the opposite side of the onstage edges of the trees situated on the upper part of the rock piece. The characters standing on the platform should be highlighted with a spot from overhead carrying an orange amber medium. The moon box should carry a double medium ranging in the first from a canary to a dark amber in the second. The dark amber tone is brought on when the background changes from the rose base and purple intermediate to a dark green blue.

The Routine

It is suggested that the prologue be introduced with an orchestral interlude using an appropriate theme from Victor Herbert's "Natoma." The interlude should run for about two minutes. The curtains slowly open revealing the first scene. Off stage may be heard the rumbling beatings of the war drums. Presently Indian dancers enter and engage in a typical war dance. The music for this also being found in the Victor Herbert compositions. At the climax of the dance a voice is heard, off stage, in a chant. The characters suddenly stop in their dance, face the large blanket and bow in characteristic fashion as the lights back of the scrim are brought up revealing the figure of an Indian Brave standing on the ledge. As he commences to sing his song the character of the White Girl comes down the runway and meets him. She joins with him in the Indian love song and towards the finale rumblings of the Indian drums off stage are heard again. The characters in the foreground in semi-silhouette pick up the slow movement of an Indian dance and as the girl starts to leave the Brave the beatings of the drums become louder. At the climax the dancers in the foreground pick up the action in a frenzied movement as the character of the Brave poses at center, his hands upraised in an attitude of despair as he watches the departing figure of the girl. At the height of the action the first titles of the picture are brought upon the scrim, the lights in the background are dimmed, the characters in the foreground exit to the tempo of the dance, the beating of the drums gradually diminishes. As the first scene of the picture is projected the scrim is taken away revealing the screen.

"MARK STRAND FROLICS"
Produced by Joseph Plunkett
Mark Strand Theatre
New York City.

JOSEPH PLUNKETT is introducing another version of his popular "Mark Strand Frolics," and in the matter of quality this production exceeds his previous efforts. The production is marked for its variety and novelty.

The opening scene displays seven large "cigarettes" each bearing the name of a popular brand. The constructed set pieces (cigarettes) are backed with a black plush. Each "cigarette" revolves revealing inside the cylinder a dancer garbed in a costume suitable to the name of the brand; for instance, Fatima introdutes a Moorish type, Piedmont, a Southern girl; Pall Mall, an English chap, etc. After the six cigarettes have revolved and revealed various girls who have done a dance, Rita Owen, in a Sis Hopkins makeup, appears from behind the cigarette at center which is labelled "Lucky Strike." Miss Owen does a very clever song and eccentric dance.

This number is followed by a Duo Piano number introducing Dimitri Tiomkin and Michel Khariton who play "Valse in C Sharp Minor" and "Polonaise" in A Flat Major (Chopin). Two grand pianos are placed center, the pianists facing each other against a silver drop toned rose and blue with black patent leather drapes at the extreme sides caught up with a red cord. An exquisite number follows, entitled "Pompadour Days." Pauline Miller appears at right center in front of the closeins and sings, "L'Amour Toujour L'Amour" by Friml. Then the curtains are drawn revealing a simple but artistic scene which consists of a long oval cutout drop hung in one. A green gauze is hung over a light backing about in three. The gauze is draped in small folds. At right is a constructed balustrade leading to a post at right center surmounted by a large vase.

This unit is painted to give the effect of old marble. At left a few strands of vines with long leaves are hung visible at the upper part of the oval opening. Mme. Klemova and M. George dressed in the costumes of the Pompadour period render the "Pompadour Valse" (Fall) assisted by the Mark Strand Ballet Corps. The colorful costumes against the artistic background which was given the impetus of a rapid rythm won plaudits of the audience.

This number was followed by De Pace, mandolin virtuoso, who works in front of the silver closeins. The last number is entitled, "The Night Club," and consists of two scenes. It has been devised with the idea of giving the "Frolics" a flash finale. Edward Albano, dressed in evening clothes enters from left, sings, "I Want What I Want" (Herbert). The scene consists of a drop with a huge padlock painted in black at the center; two windows and a door on the padlock give it the appearance of a building.

Over the top of the design are painted the words, "Club Padlock." Silhouettes of housetops are painted on the drop right and left of the center motif. Stars are painted in the blue sky. Toward the conclusion of the song the lights back of the doorway of the padlock are brought up revealing several male singers dressed in carnival costumes. The drop is taken away and a dazzling interior is revealed. A long banquet table about twelve feet in length is placed up center. A white cloth covers the entire table from the top to the floor. Silver ribbons are draped over the face of it in festoon formation. Two lighted candelabras with various vases of flowers are placed on top. The background consists of mirrored panels.

As the action progresses the table is pulled upward revealing the ballet ensemble, who come from the steps which have been masked by the table. Table is pulled up until it forms the top of a regal or throne-like canopy with a rich, red background. This mechanical effect proved popular with the audience. The featured members of the "Frolics" are introduced for the finale including Krevoff, a very clever juvenile who does some excellent Russian dancing, and Rita Owen in two specialty numbers.

Herbert Arrives on Coast

F. Hugh Herbert, the well known novelist, has arrived at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios in Culver City where he joins the scenario staff under a contract recently signed in New York.

Herbert is the author of "The Oh Boy Girl," "Miss Peter Pan," the stage play "Within the Family," and other noted books and magazine stories.

Award Letters Quit Comin' and Honor Roll Gets Going

SATURDAY, January the sixteenth of the month, drifted along as expected at the end of the week, and I—bein' the once Poor, belitted, and now still Hard-workin' Print—tooken a long breath of glad joy at seein' how big was the bunch of mail which wasn't love letters but was letters I love to have gotten so many of.

Of course you're wise that this bunch of mail come from them who have sent lists of the THINGS which was helpin' protect the print, and which was exhibited and showed on the big Christmas Tree that I was gave, and also namein' what these which wrote was doin' to protect the print on their own behalf and for the good of the industry.

Pulmotors Handy For Judges

When all the letters was piled up in front of Van who is with F. W. Richardson of "Better Projection" and H. H. Buxbaum, Fox Exchange Manager and other big and important position going to render decisions and find out which is the letters to get the Awards of the Twenty-five dollars first award from Chalmers Publishin' Company, Duplex Patching Block, second award from Duplex Film Industries, Rewinder Set, third award from Independent Movie Supply Company, all tendered and donated in the the interest of this Protect-the-Print campaign—(lemme get my breath!)—when, as I started to say, the mail was saw on the desk, I quick sent out for pulmotors, because it is goin' to knock the ozone out of these folkses' lungs. to see what they has got to pick and choose the best from out of, there bein' such a whale of a bunch and all I have saw bein' so excellent.

Projectors and Equipment Gave Attention

It is a surprise and a delightful pleasure to read what good care the letters show. Projectors is claimed to be treated as good, and handled with kid gloves as much, as is done with the writers' best pet sweetie-doll. Patchin' apparatus, rewinders, and so forth, gets handled so they can give a hunderd per centage of their full protection.

The namein' of parts in the accurately correct list shows how well knowed and perfect is the projector and the parts of the projector which entered into the picture—also the bigger machines which was disposed around and ajacent to the smaller things. Even the photographed picture on the wall was recognized and its contents identified.

Be Patient and Wait To Hear Your Fate

Now it is goin' to take the judges a little while to find out what is what. So keep your projector in good shape, put oil where it helps and don't let it get where it hurts, watch your step so that your equipment does as good work as you do—and just as quick as a decision is decided finally and with liberty and justice for all and malice towards none, I will project onto the screen of your attention the answer to your question—"How'd I come out?"

Honor Handed to Them Where It Is Due

Now, you have heard of Musterole, Parker House Rolls and so on, but what I want to mention and speak of now is the Honor Roll.

Remember, Dave Strayer said to hand out credit instead of slingin' bricks. That is also the idea of Mr. P. A. McGuire, who is with the International Projector Corporation and who is always workin' in the behalf of general betterment of projection matters.

Well, the blank which Van published as been used by some, and the names which has been gave are showed below herewith.

It is a surprise to me when I see that it is all exhibitors who has sent in the returned blanks.

Is it possible that EXHIBITORS is so generous and EXCHANGES is not?

Loosen up, exchange managers—you know there is exhibitors and projectionists which send your prints back in good shape. If the exhibitors is good enough to give you credit—YOU DO THE SAME BY THEM!

Exchanges, spill the names of them exhibitors who send your prints back in best shape—and exhibitors, keep on tellin' about the exchanges which does the same for you in their service.

Here is some names of folks who can be proud of their work in helpin' to protect the print:

Honor Roll

"The Exchange Managers in the Crescent City are all fine fellows and they realize that good treatment of the small town exhibitors will work a very direct benefit to themselves. First National, Film Booking Offices, William Fox, Warner Brothers, Liberty Film Distributing Corporation invariably send us good prints out of New Orleans, hence we can only give them praise." H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

"Exchange which returns prints to me in best condition in my territory is First National (Winnipeg-Calgary)." G. T. Baldy, Rosetown, Sask., Canada.

"Exchange in my territory which returns prints to me in best condition is Paramount (Boston) Exchange." H. M. Horton, Continental Theatre, Providence, Rhode Island.

"In my territory, put on your honor roll, Famous Players (Peoria, Illinois) Exchange." Walter Johnson, Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

Bruen Shows Seattle What Can Be Done With a Community Pull

Makes Location Count, Gives Distinction by Style of Architecture and Decoration So They Draw Patrons Equipment Can Hold

WHEN a man will spend between $75,000 and $90,000 for a Community Theatre, he must have a large faith in the future of that district. Some there are who have accused H. W. Bruen, who recently opened his new Arabian Theatre at 77th and Woodland Park Avenue, Seattle, of being entirely too optimistic in this venture.

In the light of past developments, however, we will unhesitatingly back Mr. Bruen's judgment. Five years ago he was laughed at for building his Ridgemont Theatre at 7720 Greenwood Avenue. Today it is one of the outstanding suburban theatres of the city, having become a densely settled residential district. So it will be with the new theatre, according to Mr. Bruen's judgment.

The new theatre is so situated as to draw from Greenwood, Phinney, part of Ballard, Green Lake, and the scattered communities just north of the city limits.

The Arabian is as distinctly a type theatre as its name would indicate. The exterior is of white concrete, extremely simple as to its lines. A magnificent stained glass window in a huge wheel effect, set in an elaborately ornamented panel across the front of the building atop the marquee, relieves the building front. A large ornamental electric sign, with star and crescent in the center, and spelling "Bruen's Arabian" in frosted glass globes can be seen for blocks.

The lobby entrance is a severely plain square opening, but within one is at once in the atmosphere of the ancient temple. A travertine finish is used, the lower walls being marked off in walled effect, the dome very roughly finished. It is indirectly lighted by floodlights concealed by the ornamental moulding which projects at the top of the box office which stands in the center.

The foyer is entered from one end and describes a slight curve. It has been given the effect of an entrance foyer and a main foyer. The lobby floor finish in handsome tile mosaic is carried into the entrance foyer for a distance of about fifteen feet. The owner's office under the ladies' stairway projects sufficiently to form a niche, in which has been placed a stone fountain banked in with ferns and growing plants. Foyer, aisles and stairways are carpeted with a thickly padded theatre carpet of gray figured in blue. An ornamental glass and wrought iron foyer lantern hangs in the entrance. The balance of the foyer lights owe the beauty of their richly draped silken shades to Mrs. Bruen's needlework. They harmonize beautifully.

The auditorium is entered by two broad carpeted aisles. At the rear are the loges, luxuriously comfortable with handsomely upholstered double chairs.

All chairs are Heywood-Wakefields, designed to specifications through B. F. Shearer of Seattle.

Concealed floodlights from upturned urns on the squared pilasters throw a clear colored light over the illumined walls.

The stage itself is attractive both with the plush curtain and without. For a handsome stage setting bordered black velvet, finished with two Arabian arched doorways and framing the screen, all hung with a dazzling, scintilating drape, makes a complete setting in itself. When house lights are dimmed and a Brenckert effect machine plays its myriad lighting effects from the booth on this curtain, it never fails to bring forth a round of applause. Mr. Bruen always opens his program with this lighting number combined with his organ solo. A large Kimball organ, installed by H. M. Balcom, Kimball technical engineer provides splendid music.

An unusually large concrete projection booth is centered on the balcony. It is completely equipped with two of the latest type Simplex projectors with Peerless arc lamps. To the front of the booth, centered between the projectors is the switchboard giving complete booth control of all lighting in the house. Above he board is a nine plate dimmer system. The room is metal enclosed. Other booth equipment consists of a Brenckert spotlight and Hertner transverter. M. F. Lorenz is operator at the Arabian. A Raven screen is used, completing the perfect projection.

H. W. Bruen

Heating and ventilating problems have been carefully worked out. An automatic electric oil burner provides the heat. A fan and radiation system that completely changes the air from eight to nine times every hour, properly heating or cooling it to sustain an even temperature.

Credit must be given to the local supply house and equipment dealers, B. F. Shearer, Inc., who maintain a staff of experts.

This firm completely decorated, draped, seated, furnished booth equipment, screen, stage settings, lighting and wonderful colored glass windows.

$200,000 Theatre for Union

JOSEPH STERN and Louis Golding have procured land for a theatre in Union, N. J., at corner Morris and Stuyvesant Aves. The theatre will seat 1,250 and will cost approximately $200,000. Plans are now being drawn by William E. Lehman, Newark, and construction will start on February 1.

H. W. BRUEN'S ARABIAN is a theatre that has had to prove to a watchful city that a man could give a community the real goods and profit thereby — which he is proving. You can see quality in each of these shots.

Cataclysmic, Cluttered Chaos! But Out of Chaos Came a World

Three Guesses on This Picture and You'd Say Cyclone, Earthquake or Bomb Outrage, But You'd Be Wrong—'Twas Improvement!

FIRST, if you remember Creation, there wasn't anything—there was a world! Ninety Gold Street was a world already, and Nicholas Power Company made it a busy, thriving world. So when International Projector Corporation decided to make this building its headquarters, chaos had to be brought about again in order that a new, bigger projector world could be brought about.

This is not a news reel of a recent cyclone or an earthquake, nor is it a portion of devastated France. It is simply a photograph of the Advertising Department, Power's Division International Projector Corporation when P. A. McGuire, Advertising Manager, walked into it on the morning of Monday, January 18.

This is the open season for the ball, entertainment and dinner of exhibitors and projectionists and "Mac" attends quite a few of these at this season of the year. He left a little early Saturday morning and got down a little late Monday morning and in the meantime the full force of the wrecking crew which has been located at 90 Gold Street since December struck his particular part of that locality.

The scene was a distinct shock to him for a few minutes until it was explained that an office would be arranged for him later in the day and his material moved into it This view represents the extreme effect of the alterations and remodeling which are going on the offices of the International Projector Corporation and the final results will show very great changes and a marked improvement in the entire plant of the company.

If there has been any slowing up of service or failure to give distributors, dealers and exhibitors the attention they are in the habit of getting, this photograph will clearly explain the difficulties under which the Simplex Division has been working for many weeks as well as the Power's.

Schwartz to Add to Chain

THE A. H. Schwartz office today announced that Dr. Schwartz purchased a large theatre site at 212th Street and Jamaica Avenue, Queens, where he will immediately erect a large modern theatre with a seating capacity of 2,500, together with stores.

This theatre will form another link in the chain recently announced by the Schwartz Circuit of which a half dozen are now under actual construction.

From all indications, it seems that Mr. Schwartz is sucessfully carrying out his plan of establishing a circuit of theatres throughout Long Island, which he announced last summer as his building program for the coming year.

Roxy Has New Address

FOR THE BENEFIT of those who have not been able to trace S. L. Rothafel, the genial Roxy of radio and motion picture fame, to his lair, he has taken permanent quarters at Steinway Hall, 113 West 57th Street, room 605, where he not only holds his rehearsals for the concerts at WEAF, but presides over the destinies of the new Roxy Theatre for which ground has already been broken at 50th Street and Seventh Avenue.

New Device Used

IN order to cut the film and to cut in the titles on the late screen sensation, the "Gold Rush," a new and novel machine called the Moviola-Midget Film Reviewing Machine was used. It was extremely successful in its application and is now being used by a number of other screen stars for reviewing pictures. It was invented by Mr. I. Serrurier of Altadena, California.

This machine, electrically operated is driven by a Westinghouse 1.40 h.p. series wound universal motor, round frame, operating at approximately 4000 r.p.m. It is quickly and easily operated and is becoming increasingly popular.

Harvard Keeps Doubtful Eye On Cameraman

Students' Council Chaperones Him About Campus

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Boston, January 27.

Students and alumni of Harvard University at Cambridge, Mass., are aroused over the proposed filming by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer of that old stage play, "Brown of Harvard," and word has gone forth from the university that the film producers must beware that they faithfully depict life at Harvard or else see their effort a failure, such as the stage play.

A cameraman from the film company now is "shooting" scenes of students passing about the campus and going from one building to another. The cameraman is being "chaperoned" by members of the Student Council.

The Harvard Crimson, in an editorial, said:

"As 'Brown of Harvard' was hissed off the legitimate stage a score of years ago by Harvard students, and as a good part of the film is to be taken in California, there will undoubtedly be a chorus from dissenting conservatives. In fact, many Harvard men will react instantly in opposition to the innovation—particularly if they do not get into the picture themselves.

"The only criterion of 'Brown of Harvard' that can be rightly applied is whether or not the play is a true interpretation of Harvard. By that it stands or falls."

Consolidated Applies For $35,000 Refund

Chicago, January 26.

Investors in the defunct Consolidated Theatres Corporation will be interested to know that the receivers have applied for a refund of the income tax alleged to have been paid by the promotors to the government, amounting to $35,000, to bolster up the claim that the company was making plenty of money from its theatre operations.

It is expected with the return of the tax and whatever else the receivers may be able to save for the investors, that a dividend of 6 per cent. can be declared. The latest report is that more than $750,000 in bonds is held by Chicago investors.

Popularity Contest Winner in Poverty

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Milwaukee, January 26.

Mary Lula Lee, 69 years old, is in the Rock County, Wis., poor house wondering why she has been left friendless and penniless.

"It's mighty funny," she tells the other old women. "It don't seem likely folks would forget you so soon. Guess they haven't heard I'm here. Yes, that must be it."

The other old people don't disillusion her.

A few months ago a Janesville, Wis., picture theatre held a "most popular girl contest." Railroad friends of Mrs. Lee, whose husband was a flagman, entered her name as a compliment. The fun-loving youth of Janesville thought it a great joke to back her. They laughed for days when Mrs. Lee was chosen, but she didn't hear them. She beamed.

With the $100 prize money Mrs. Lee and her husband, Austin Lee, took their first vacation in years. They went about twenty miles away from Janesville and visited friends. When they returned, with most of the money gone, Austin fell and broke his leg. Soon the Lees were penniless. Nobody offered to help them and they became county charges.

Now Mary Hula Lee sits in the county poor house and wonders why she was given 1,900,000 votes, 99,500 more than her nearest young competitor.

"It's mighty funny," she says. "Guess they haven't heard I'm here."

But as the days go by she offers her explanation with less and less assurance.

Radical Changes by Loew In His Theatre Programs

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Cleveland, January 27.

Radical changes are being made thick and fast at the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, one of the larger houses in the Loew chain in that city. M. H. Newman, who was general manager of the four Grauman theatres in Los Angeles and later general manager of the Universal theatres, western division, has been appointed manager of Loew's Allen in Cleveland, to succeed E. M. Downs, whose future plans have not been announced. A large stage and a complete lighting equipment are being installed.

This, according to Fred Desberg, general manager of all the Loew theatres in Cleveland, is being done to accommodate big specialty acts which the house will hereafter feature strongly, in addition to the regular policy of pictures. The plan was tried out previously with the limited stage facilities and proven a success.

Last but by no means least, the Allen has lost its famous orchestra conductor, Philip Spitalny, whose work has been largely responsible for building the enviable clientele which the house enjoys. Spitalny, however, still remains under the Loew jurisdiction, having been given the title of "orchestra builder." He has gone to Boston, taking with him several members of his orchestra. In the Hub City he will have a forty-five piece musical organization for the Loew house there, and after putting this house on the may he will serve in a similar capacity at the Loew theatres in Pittsburgh, St Louis and other places

M. P. T. O. A. Establishes Legislative Department

The first function of the Legislative Department, formed this week by Business Manager Joseph M. Seider of the M. P. T. O. A., was to take up in Washington, D. C., a plea from the Wisconsin unit that the railway companies again place film on the perishable list.

For a long time Seider has been contemplating the establishing of this Legislative Department. After considerable effort, Mr. Seider has been able to assemble for this work a competent personnel which he will announce later.

Seider has communicated with the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington, D. C., requesting immediate relief.

Colonel Fred Levy of Louisville, Ky., First National franchise holder and one of the most prominent exhibitors in the South, has paid $1,500,000 for the Speed Building at Fourth and Guthrie streets, owned by the Speed heirs and Sen. Fred M. Sackett.

N. Y. Censorship Far From Dead, Say Republicans

Charge Need for It Upon "Fearful" Exhibitors

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Albany, January 26.

After all that has been said about the possibility of motion picture censorship becoming a thing of the past in New York State, the attitude on the part of the Republican leaders in the Legislature, as well as their outspoken statements of the past few days, would indicate that a strong sentiment still prevails for censorship.

Senators are frank in saying they believe that a curb should still be kept on producers; and that in their opinion many exhibitors who have tens of thousands of dollars invested in theatres are anxious that their investments should be protected to the extent that they will not be given pictures that may offend.

In other words, the exhibitors can now tell complaining patrons that a picture has been passed by the censors.

It now looks as though the report of the reorganization committee would not be made until March 1, and that until such report is made public there will be no definite knowledge of the berth that will be provided the censorship commission. While there was a report current at one time that it would be housed with the Secretary of State, Republican senators and assemblymen stated this week that in their opinion the commission should be placed in the State Education Department as a bureau but with a New York branch, where the examination of all films might be conducted much as at the present time.

If this sentiment continues to prevail in the New York State Legislature, any bill introduced to abolish the commission will have tough sledding, despite the fact that Governor Smith stands ready at any time to sign such a measure if it could be passed in both houses.

If the commission becomes a bureau in the Education department, it will be reorganized and instead of having three commissioners, each of whom draws down a salary of $7,500 a year, there would be one commissioner, for no bureau would stand the expense of three commissioners at such a salary.

Opportunity Looms Large In Jugoslavia

Only 20 Theatres, Though Large as Belgium

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Paris, January 15.

A growing country from a film man's point of view is the Kingdom of Jugoslavia which, with a population as great as that of Belgium, has only twenty picture theatres. Lately a native producing company has been formed in Belgrade. For the present practically all the films shown are either French or American. Is it a land of opportunity for progressive Americans?

One of the oldest film concerns in the Scandinavian countries and in the North of Europe, the Nordisk Film Company, after passing through some trying experiences has regained its old prestige. Its latest production, based on the novel of a Danish author, has scored a great success at the leading theatre in Copenhagen. According to reliable reports the man who regenerated the company, A. W. Sandberg, is said to have received a call from a prominent American company to join its directorial staff.

Holland has lately enacted some rather drastic legislation against the motion pictures and a popular civic movement has taken hold of the best classes of the population. An association has been formed consisting of enthusiastic patrons who call themselves the "Friends of the Film," and through lectures, tours through celebrated studios and special evenings at popular prices are doing much good in creating new and desirable patronage for the screen.

Switzerland is experiencing another great boom in theatre building. In the city of Zurich a picture house with a large seating capacity to be modeled on American plans is nearing completion. This makes fourteen houses for Zurich. Reports from Geneva show a decided increase of picture houses in French speaking Switzerland.

Belgium is today considered one of the most active picture markets. The Agora Palace in Brussels has just closed contracts with Paramount and First National for the entire output of these companies. More than 90 per cent of the films shown in Brussels are of American origin.

N. J. Anti-Blue Law

Two bills drastically modifying "blue-laws" are now in the hands of the Jersey Legislature. One of these, known as the "Local Option Sunday Motion Picture Bill," is sponsored by the New Jersey M. P. T. O. This would license the voters to go to the polls during 1926 and cast their ballots for or against Sunday pictures. The other bill calls for the creation of a commission to be known as "The Blue-Law Revision Commission" and to be effective in 1927.

"Vino: Veritas"

Expert advice on married life by one who knew was offered vocally and with gusto in the American Theatre, Chicago, one day last week. A domestic film showed a wedded couple, no longer in the sweetheart stage, discussing personalities with shrewish abandon. This touching little scene so enthused a gentleman in the audience that he leaped to his feet and began to urge the husband on.

"Don't let her talk you out of it," he shouted. "Go right back at her."

Manager George Burdick tried to pacify the defender of masculinity but the orator wouldn't be silenced. Six policemen, hastily summoned, then took a hand in the peace conference, also without success. So manager and policemen combined forces in getting the enthusiastic gentleman out of the theatre, while married men attending the show with their stenographers cheered and married men with their wives uneasily hunched down in their seats. It was a most unpleasant situation.

Chicago Wins Postponement

Chicago, January 25.

Thirty-five owners of picture theatres in Chicago won a postponement of Fire Commissioner Connery's order that they would lose their licenses to operate unless they complied with the strict letter of the fire ordinances enacted twenty years ago, after the Iroquois Theatre fire.

In the hearing at City Hall the theatre owners and managers were led by Jack Miller, business manager of the Chicago Exhibitors Association, and Michael Igoe, attorney. They contended vigorously that the drapes and other decorations the city fire marshal had called inflammable were really non-inflammable and had been made so by a chemical process at a heavy expense.

Fire Commissioner Connery granted leave to the theatre men to keep the draperies until a legal opinion on the word "combustible" in the fire ordinance had been obtained from the proper authorities.

On all other points in dispute the theatre owners agreed to meet the letter of the fire commissioner's orders.

On Honor Roll

The M. P. P. D. A. placed S. H. Abrams, manager of the F. B. O. exchange at Milwaukee, on the Honor Roll for December for having met with all the regulations governing fire prevention. An article on fire prevention, written by Mr. Abrams, will be published in an early issue of "Fire Alarm," one of the magazines issued by the M. P. P. D.

Seider Charges Will Hays with Breaking Faith

Arbitration Isn't Satisfactory Yet, He Says

Business Manager Joseph M. Seider of the M. P. T. O. A., charges Will H. Hays with breach of faith.

The national exhibitor organization's stand for a system of "voluntary" arbitration, whereby dictators would be eliminated, was gaining such headway in the publicity channels of the industry that it was Mr. Hays, claims Mr. Seider, who several months ago broached to the M. P. T. O. A., the subject that both organizations clamp down the lid and desist from a public airing of arbitration affairs until negotiations in this respect had been consummated under cover.

Mr. Seider says that is why the national headquarters shut down on news.

"For Mr. Hayes at this time to issue a statement giving the impression that arbitration in the motion picture industry has reached its millennium and is satisfactory to all factors, naming specifically the distributors who sell the pictures and the exhibitors who purchase them, is decidedly contrary to fact," declared Mr. Seider. He added:

"Much progress has been made in our negotiations for a better contract, but no agreement on its entirety has been reached. The public and theatre owners should not be led into a false sense of security.

"The statement of Mr. Hays that the Arbitration Board consists of an equal number of exhibitors and distributors is not based upon true facts. The distributors actually appoint their arbitrators because of the fact that their organization — the Film Boards of Trade—is a closely knit, small unit.

"It is stretching the imagination to assume that the exhibitor or theatre owner has a voice in the selection of his arbitra-

Rhode Island Considers Overcrowding Measure

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Providence, January 26.

A bill to prevent overcrowding of theatres has been introduced in the Rhode Island Legislature by Representative James H. Kiernan, Democrat.

The act prohibits persons standing in excess of one person to every square foot in buildings where there are 400 or more seats and where the main entrance of the building is more than five steps above the sidewalk and where the level of the stage is more than five feet above the level of the sidewalk. In buildings where there are more than 150 seats and not more than 400, no standing is permitted. The act does not interfere with buildings having less than 150 seats. A fine of $100 is provided.

Once Again

While newspapers all over the country were carrying pictures of Martin Durkin, notorious gunman, the Chicago Police Department, which acts in a censorial capacity over motion pictures, barred news reel pictures of Durkin from Chicago screens.

Mayor Rosenfeld of Rock Island, Ill., also refused to allow them to be shown in his city.

Kansas City Prospering

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Kansas City, January 25.

Kansas City and St. Louis today offer an interesting study in contrast. In St. Louis a seating average of one seat for every 7.05 persons is causing a slump, exhibitors there assert. At the other end of the State in Kansas City a vastly different situation exists.

A check-up of about a year ago in Kansas City revealed that there was a seat for every 4.05 persons. Since that time approximately 8,000 seats have been added to the total, with more than 6,000 more—not plans, but actual construction—to come by the middle of next summer. And business is good, not theoretically but in physical fact, as the lobby of any down town first-run house will prove almost any night. Kansas City draws from a field of 600,000.

Important announcements were made this week concerning the new 4,000-seat Midland Theatre, construction on which starts in a few weeks. Herbert M. Woolf, president of the Midland Theatre & Realty Company, which is constructing the house at Thirteenth and Main streets, announced that M. B. Shanberg, president of the Shanberg Poster Advertising Company, will manage the new theatre. Mr. Shanberg manages twelve other theatres of the Midland chain.

There no longer exists any doubt concerning the fact that the new theatre's booking will be controlled by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, although the actual financial interest which M.-G.-M. has in the house has not been disclosed.

King Seeks Stories

Henry King, director of "Stella Dallas," is in New York on a still hunt for stories. He received trade paper men this week at the Ambassador and discussed the box office features of productions. Mr. King believes that certain incidents or spectacular scenes considered sure-fire from past experience, should not be crammed into pictures, but that the director should at all times consider the theme and atmosphere of the story and not depart from it. In this connection, Mr. King talked directing methods. Some pictures, he said, show plainly that the director had told his players, "Now you walk across the stage and wave your hands."

New Censor Bill

Another bill has been introduced before the Kentucky Legislature for the creation of a state board of moving picture censors. The bill is the identical bill that has come up every two years for ten years or more.

Senator Brock of Harlan, Ky., has been trying to pass such a bill ever since he has been a state senator. Apparently it is not a question of whether the state needs such a law or not, but Brock has started to put over such a law and won't quit, or else he feels that he must place a certain number of bills in the hopper every session, so the folks back home will think he is attending to business.

St. Louis Exhibitor Seizes Armed Robber

St. Louis, January 26.

The St. Louis, Mo., police are holding six men, including a former policeman, and others are being sought following an alleged attempt to rob the Grand Central Theatre, Grand boulevard at Lucas avenue.

Manager Spyros Cardas discarded James Walsh, 18 years old, one of the men, after he had been handed a note in the theatre lobby which read: "Get into your office and don't make any noise. If you do, I'll blow your head off." This was at 5:15 p. m., Sunday, January 24, while the theatre lobby was filled with people.

Instead, Cardas seized the young man's left wrist and snatched a loaded revolver from his belt. Walsh had rope in his pocket with which to tie up Cardas.

In a subsequent confession to the police he is alleged to have implicated the former policeman and several other men in the plot to rob the theatre or in other robberies recently committed.

Albert J. Marks, manager of Kingsland Theatre, Alma and Gravois avenues, St. Louis, Mo., operated by William Goldman, reported to the police that he was kidnapped by two masked men in the garage in back of his home, 5828 South Kingshighway boulevard, and forced to return to the theatre, open the safe and surrender $680 in cash. The kidnapping took place at 11:20 p. m. Sunday, January 24, Marks told the police. He furnished the police a description of the two men.

War in Missouri

Governor Sam Baker can expect a battle if he intends to go through with his announced plan to saddle a 10 per cent. amusement admission tax on the people of Missouri. He plans to use the money for public schools. He plans to assess a similar charge on cigars, cigarettes and other tobacco sold in the state.

Exhibitors of St. Louis and Kansas City and elsewhere in the state will cooperate with their national organizations in combatting this vicious class measure. The proposition will come before the people at the general state elections in November, 1926.

Baker hopes to raise $4,000,000 through the tax.

Riesenfeld to Lead Carnival Orchestra

Hugo Riesenfeld will make a brief return to his old stamping ground to direct the premiere performance of "Three Faces East." The picture is to be presented as part of the entertainment at the Motion Picture Carnival which is being staged at the Hotel Plaza on February 3 by the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau. Riesenfeld will take complete charge of the showing. He will write the score and direct the orchestra.

Two thousand members of the motion picture industry and society world are expected to attend the Carnival, the proceeds of which are to be turned over to charity. In addition to the preview, the entertainment will include a midnight ball and carnival features in which debutantes will impersonate film stars. For this purpose the producers are loaning the original costumes used in recent well known pictures. About a hundred film stars are also to take part in Carnival features, the nature of which will be announced later.

All-Northwest Combine Of Exhibitors Planned

Seattle, January 27.

After sounding out the sentiment of theatre owners in other Northwest states, the Washington unit has invited showmen of Oregon, Montana and Idaho to join them in the forming of one giant body for the entire Pacific-Northwest.

The first meeting to consider this question is scheduled for Portland, February 2, when it is expected by those interested in the movement that fully 200 theatre owners will attend a meeting at which many prominent Washingtonians will be present.

Bob White of the Bob White Theatre has been acting as temporary chairman of the movement in Portland, and will preside until a permanent official is selected. James M. Hone, executive secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Washington, will assist the Portland showmen in planning for the state-wide meeting.

It is planned to have many prominent speakers at the February conference, among whom will be L. A. Drinkwine of Tacoma, Wash., president of the Washington showmen's organization.

Those who favor the all-Northwest body say that with such a large membership as such an organization will have, they can accomplish more for their members and theatre patrons than could be hoped for, working as individuals or as state units.

It is said that many prominent Oregon showmen have voiced their approval of the scheme and predict that the vote will be practically unanimous for joining with the Washington showmen.

Slogans Now Popular In New York State

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Albany, January 27.

Slogans have been adopted by many picture theatres in New York State. Take, for instance, the Keeney of Kingston, the newspaper advertisements of which say: "Where you see more stars than there are in Heaven."

The Rialto in Little Falls is not a bit backward, for a newspaper advertisement last week carried the fact that it was "The Duck's Quack."

The Kingston Opera House calls attention to the fact that the show "is always good and most times great." Up in Northern New York there are at least half a dozen picture theatres which declare that they are "the greatest institutions" of their kind in that part of the state, but in view of the fact that each of the theatres is located in a different village or city, no signs of jealousy have cropped up.

Balaban & Katz Get Quincy, Ill., Home

Chicago, January 25.

The Washington Square Theatre, Quincy, Ill., has been added to the Balaban & Katz chain. Confirmation of the close of the deal has been received in St. Louis. The price paid or other details have not been revealed.

The Washington Square, completed a few years ago at a cost of approximately $200,000, seats 2,000 and is among the finest theatres in the Middle West. It has been showing pictures and vaudeville in recent months.

Joe Desberger is manager of the house. It is said he will continue in that capacity.

Fire Destroys Grand

Fire destroyed the Grand Theatre, Duquoin, Ill., on January 16. The house seated 1,200 and was operated by the Reed-Yemm-Hayes chain. The house cost about $150,000 when built a few years ago.

"Jaydee" Signs Dorothy Gish

J. D. Williams, managing director of British National Pictures, Ltd., London, announced immediately after the "Nell Gwyn" preview at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York, that he and his English associates were so strongly impressed as to the future of Dorothy Gish, following her brilliant triumph in the name part of Herbert Wilcox's production, "Nell Gwyn," that his company had made a deal with Inspiration Pictures, Inc., who has the star under contract for five years, under which she is to return to England immediately to be starred in three productions.

"Jaydee," when manager of First National Pictures, saw the possibilities and promoted to front rank stardom several of the present day reigning screen favorites. He sees in Dorothy Gish a player capable of creating for herself an unique position on the screen. "She'll be the feminine Harold Lloyd," he declared.

Cleveland Raps Zoning System

Cleveland, January 26.

That the zoning system in Cleveland, Ohio, operated by the Film Board of Trade, is a distinct handicap rather than an advantage is the belief of exhibitors, who have let it be positively known that they consider the existing arrangement inequitable and discriminatory.

Thirty-nine zones exist, whereas the exhibitors contend that there should be not more than twenty, as the greater number results in compulsion to play day and date, when otherwise the theatres would be playing opposition. They also advance the argument that the first-run release dates are unreliable and uncertain, and any change therein must of necessity cause all subsequent runs to be shoved forward or pushed back. Where an exhibitor has a picture booked for the date, he must either play day and date or let the picture go to an opposition house.

Naked Truth Tickets In Demand Nationally

Demands for tickets to the A. M. P. A. Naked Truth Dinner to be given at the Hotel Astor Saturday evening, February 6, are coming into the offices of the ticket committee of the A. M. P. A. from all parts of the country. It's a far cry from Broadway to the small town, but right now it's a far cry from the small town to Broadway for tickets. Residents of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, California and Canada have already placed orders.

Among these are Boyd D. Chamberlain of the Chamberlain Amusement Enterprises of Shamokin, Pa.; the management of the Rex Theatre, Ottawa, Ont.; the Schine Enterprises, Gloversville, N. Y.; Irving Zeltner, Washington exploiteer, and the owners of the Salem Theatre, Springfield, Mass.

N. Y. to Study Juvenile Bill

Albany, January 27.

Assemblyman Charles A. Freiberg of Buffalo, member of the New York State Legislature, will introduce a bill identical with one of a year ago, which was buried in committee and which seeks to amend the general municipal law relative to the care of unaccompanied children admitted to picture theatres under an ordinance which may be adopted by cities, towns and villages.

The bill provides that a board of aldermen, or other legislative body of any city, town or village, may adopt an ordinance permitting a child over the age of 12 and under 16 years to be admitted to a picture theatre where films are shown as having been designated by the New York State Motion Picture Commission as especially suitable for children under 16 years, and which film shall bear and display upon the screen the words "for family use." Admittance of the children, however, is limited to Saturdays and legal holidays, Sundays excepted.

The bill further provides that children shall not be admitted before 2 p. m., and not allowed to remain after 6 p. m. All such unaccompanied children shall be segregated in the theatre and in charge of a matron to be supplied by the exhibitor. If the segregated portion seats more than 200 children, there shall be an additional attendant. The segregated portion as well as the matron shall be subject to the approval of the licensing authorities of cities, towns and villages. A license fee of $10 will be required of the exhibitor and may be revoked for any violation.

INCORPORATIONS

Without a single one of the eight motion picture companies showing a capitalization over $10,000, the past week in the secretary of state's office at Albany was one characterized by uniformly low capitalization in practically all companies that incorporated. The following shows the incorporators of each company, the capitalization and the name chosen under which the company filed its papers of incorporation: Fitzer-Syracuse, Inc. $10,000, Ben Fitzer, Syracuse; Charles D. Blessing, Joseph N. Schwartzwalder, Auburn; Woodrock Amusement Corporation, capitalization not specified, Edward Speigel, Charles Fisher, I. M. Racer, Brooklyn; Kingdun Productions, Inc., $10,000, H. A. Bloomberg, Richard Amado, Israel Finkel, New York City; A. and L. Film Advertising Co., Inc., $1,000, L. B. Appleton, F. H. Lincoln, Samuel Kramer, New York City; Lloyd Hamilton Corporation, capitalization not stated, I. M. Michelman, R. Liebhoff, A. J. Johnston, New York City; Bellaire Amusement Corporation, $2,000, R. L. Schiff, Joseph Sussman, Isador Finkelstein, New York City; William K. Hedwig Picture Enterprises, Inc., $10,000, with Elsie Hedwig, William K. Hedwig, Forest Hills; Edward E. Makholm, Jersey City; Boheme Film Producing Company, $10,000, Anthony Fiorino, Brooklyn; Joseph O. Laine, Domenico Cassio, New York City.

Seeks Old Film

Where is the print of "Les Miserables," copyrighted by K. W. Linn either late in 1912 or early in 1913?

Mr. Linn, now living at 63 West 94th street, New York City, is very anxious to locate it. He is interested in the preparation of Universal's "Les Miserables," also made by Pathe of Paris and soon to be shown and wants to locate the old picture for reasons of comparison.

OBITUARY

Frank Shallebarger, publicity writer for Warner Brothers, died on January 25 at the Plainfield Hospital, Plainfield, N. J., from heart disease and asthma. About ten days before his brother, Joseph Shallebarger, an attorney, took him there. A private funeral was held on January 28. Shallebarger was about 47 years old. He had been associated with Selznick, Associated Exhibitors and Vitagraph. Previous to his entry into the picture business he had served on London and Parisian newspapers.

Rudolph Pelisek, one of the most noted theatre orchestra directors in Canada and for years the conductor of the Regent Theatre, Orchestra, Ottawa, died January 21st in his 37th year after a lingering illness. He was born of Bohemian parents in Schumia, Bulgaria, and before going to Canada had played as a violinist before the Czar of Russia, the King of Serbia, the King of Bulgaria and other representatives of Royalty in Europe.

The oldest exhibitor in the Dominion of Canada passed out in the death a few days ago of Capt. John Powell, owner and proprietor of the Grand Theatre, Barrie, Ontario. Capt. Powell was in his 83d year, and while he had left the direct management of the theatre to his son, John Powell, during recent months, he was keenly interested in the moving picture trade activities to the end.

Stewart Maxwell Walkinshaw, president and general manager of the Lyman H. Howe Films Company, Inc., Wilkes-Barre, Penna., died at noon on January 25 at his late residence, 395 South River street, Wilkes-Barre. He was a real pioneer in the motion picture business, having joined Lyman H. Howe in his film activities in the year 1898. He was born on April 27, 1873, at Buffalo, N. Y., but removed with his parents at an early age to St. Catharines, Ontario, where his family continued to reside.

Mansur Blanchard Niven, part owner and manager of the U. S. A. and Cover Theatres of Fort Morgan, Col., was found dead on a lounge chair at his home, 517 East Platte avenue, at 4:10 p. m., January 16. His death was caused by a heart attack. He was 46 years old. For fifteen years he had been an active exhibitor in Fort Morgan. The funeral was held in Fort Morgan. He is survived only by his wife.

Liberal Sunday Gets a Setback In Canastota

Special Election Not Allowed in N. Y. Village

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Buffalo, January 26.

Justice Abraham L. Kellogg of Binghamton, N. Y., has issued a temporary injunction restraining the president and the board of trustees of the village of Canastota, N. Y., from permitting Sunday motion pictures in the local theatre and also restraining the board from calling a special election in the town to take action on Sunday picture presentations. The president and trustees also are ordered to show cause before the court in Oneonta why the injunction should not be made permanent.

These court proceedings are the result of an action brought by a quartet of Canastota pastors which came to a climax in a taxpayers action brought by George B. Russell, a lawyer and citizen of the town, against the village. Russell charges the board acted illegally in passing a resolution upon the request of William McNeily to allow a special election for the purpose of voting on the proposition of Sunday pictures.

It is alleged that McNeily presented a petition to the board, containing the names of some thirty-seven persons, which asked that the question be put up to the voters, and agreed to put up a certified check for $100 to pay expenses of same. It is charged that the board voted on the proposition and set a date for the election. Russell charges the board acted illegally because the petition did not have the required number of qualified voters and that the board is also guilty of bribery in accepting the check to defray the election expenses. Russell in addition asks that the court review the acts of McNeily and of the board to decide whether they shall be punished for accepting the offer of McNeily.

Trade Commission Data Shows Firms' Earnings

Figures offered by Famous Players to the Federal Trade Commission to prevent a possible reopening of the case show the rate of earnings of some companies. Warner Bros., with tangible assets of over $5,000,000, had its profits for 1924 increased almost $900,000 over 1923. Paramount profits increased about $1,200,000, Loew-Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer about $2,400,000, First National about $900,000, and Fox about $200,000.

The rate of earnings in percentages follows: Warner Bros., 21.5 per cent.; First National, 16.1; Loew-M.-G.-M., 13.4; Famous Players, 13.5 per cent.; Universal, 12.8 per cent.; Fox, 12.2 per cent.

State Closing?

The M. P. T. O. of Maryland has practically completed plans to close all theatres, including first-runs, throughout the state the first two weeks in July, according to "Tommy" Goldberg, who was in New York this week from Baltimore

The exhibitors believe that it will stimulate business. These two particular weeks are always poor in Maryland. Non-theatrical showings, he said, are a source of continual annoyance.

tors when an organization in which he is not a member is designated to appoint the arbitrators for him.

"In addition to the fact that the arbitrators are appointed for the exhibitor and not selected by him, the exhibitor has not even the right to challenge any of the exhibitors appointed to arbitrate his case.

"The recent move of the Chamber of Commerce of New York City in resolving to withdraw their arbitrators from the Joint Arbitration Board unless an equitable contract is forthcoming, is commendable. We are particularly gratified that they have approved the form of contract we had submitted to the industry as a solution of this vexatious problem."

Mr. Seider refers to President Charles L. O'Reilly's suggested changes in the contract. The T. O. C. C. proposes a provision for protection against specifically named theatres, and to follow those also to be named, after a period to be definitely prescribed in the contract.

Other changes suggested include the right to challenge members of the arbitration board being limited to two instead of three; that the chairman of the board of arbitration shall be elected alternately between distributor and theatre owner representatives; that provision be made for liquidated damages for breach of any contract which provides that no photoplays specified in the contract shall be re-issues from old negatives unless so expressly stated. Also, that the assignment of contracts be permitted without consent, in which event, without release to the assignor as the case may be; and the elimination of the National Arbitration Commission consisting of three exhibitors and three distributor members to be appointed by the Independent Motion Picture Association and the M. P. T. O. A.

GIVES HOUSEWARMING

A real old fashioned housewarming was tendered the press by F. B. O. on Friday afternoon, January 22, in the projection room of the new quarters at 1,560 Broadway, New York. The party started at 4 P. M., with a screening of "Flaming Waters," an Associated Arts Corporation production. Light refreshments were served. Major H. C. S. Thomson, president, Colvin W. Brown, vice-president in charge of distribution, and Nat G. Rothstein, publicity and advertising director, were official hosts.

THE COSTERMONGERS' CHARIOT RACE ON 'AMSTEAD 'EATH—He wins the race and the girl's hand. The beginning of the steadfast romance in "My Old Dutch." Universal has taken the subject matter in this famous old song and woven it into an epic of devotion, with May MacAvoy and Pat O'Malley. Albert Chevalier's great song, which made a great play should make a great, touching picture.

Exploitation—THE way to buy DOLLARS

SCRATCH a Turk and find a Tartar. Scratch a WORD and find a STORY. Scratch army terms such as LIEUTENANT, BATTALION, GENERAL, COLONEL, REGIMENT; and you will find the genius of French military organization at the ROOT of almost all of our ARMY terminology.

Look into such automobile terms as TONNEAU, CHASSIS, GARAGE, CHAUFFEUR, and you will find that the MOTOR CAR, too, was BAPTIZED in French.

AMERICA is writing the sports dictionary of the WORLD.

The word, EXPLOITATION, did not originate in America, but it is this country which lifted the word from linguistic LIMBO and put it into CIRCULATION. And, narrowing the circle, it is the moving picture industry which made the word what it is today.

The picture business has rewritten the definition of the word, merchandising.

And narrowing the circle still farther, it is Epes Winthrop Sargent who has done more to circulate exploitation among the PICTURE THEATRES than any other man in the industry. For over fifteen years Sargent has been teaching, helping, advising the exhibitor that the CHEAPEST way to buy dollars is EXPLOITATION. Helping, teaching, advising by object LESSONS.

The value of this one man's contribution to the SUCCESSFUL operation of picture houses cannot be over-estimated. His department in Moving Picture World has been a HUB with a thousand SPOKES, radiating in ALL directions.

Sargent's "Selling the Picture to the Public" has been moved this week to the FRONT of Moving Picture World. We are rotating our SERVICE departments in this manner to show a heavily trade-papered field that food presented in capsule form can never SATISFY the active man on the firing line; that Moving Picture World serves the only FULL-COURSE meal which lines the showman's stomach and POCKET-BOOK.

Sargent's department has always been a HEFTY course of that meal.

You will find it on Page 525 of our MENU this week. Don't Fletcherize your exploitation food. Sargentize it.

Distinguished Picture People

By COVARRUBIAS

SAMUEL GOLDWYN

President, Samuel Goldwyn Productions, Inc.

Samuel Goldwyn was not elected one of the twelve immortals in the list compiled by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers. He should have been. We hereby elect him as one of the immortals done by Covarrubias. Mr. Goldwyn is the leader of a group constantly in action, in an era when the pioneers must keep up their pioneering. We give unstinted praise to "the discoverer" of Vilma Banky, Lois Moran, Belle Bennett, Ronald Colman—to the man who gave George Fitzmaurice and Henry King their greatest opportunities. We nominate the producer of "Stella Dallas" to a Select Little Cabinet of Six Immortals (we may name our remaining five later). The last year in business has made Mr. Goldwyn the greatest independent producer of motion pictures.

Something Revolutionary—By Bill Reilly

GEORGE K. SPOOR'S Third Dimension films which have successfully put a picture on the screen exactly as you see it in life, are going to SCRAP a lot of existing METHODS and MACHINERY in the film business. We have neither the flowing ROBES nor the flowing BEARD of the prophet. But we can see changes of significant dimensions on the horizon.

Chicago, Building Kiddy Koops, Couldn't See Skyscraper

We went to Chicago last week for the express purpose of seeing Mr. Spoor's invention. Chicago's official film circles were too busy building Kiddy Koops to know that a gigantic SKYSCRAPER was going up in their midst. So we went to Chicago to get the NEWS, published EXCLUSIVELY in last week's issue of Moving Picture World.

Mr. Spoor's invention, now perfected, and ready in April, gives EVERYONE in the industry something to think about.

The devices invented and patented by George K. Spoor and his associate, John Berggren, the Swedish engineer, UPSET the existing mechanism in photographing, developing, projecting, and exhibiting pictures. Not to mention PRODUCTION as a whole.

Producers Face Change First of All

In the first place, after the Spoor-Berggren pictures have been introduced to the public this spring by road shows, companies will be LICENSED to carry on with production. Which means that every producer, now lord of all within his own domain, will have an over lord, whose plans he is BOUND to carry out, under pain of LOSING his license.

Camera Field in for Radical Change

Secondly, the Spoor-Berggren pictures throw the present mechanism of cinematography out of focus. Because these two men have patented the Camera which has captured the Third Dimension Picture and put it upon negative. THEIR picture will have to be seen through the eyes of THEIR cameras.

Developing and Printing Methods Effected

Next, the present machinery for DEVELOPING and PRINTING film is thrown out of gear. It was necessary, in putting the Third Dimension Picture on positive, to invent a NEW printing machine. Existing methods of printing lose the Two Ray picture. The Spoor-Berggren printing machine is under heavy lock and key and under heavy patents. THEIR pictures will have to be printed by THEIR machinery.

Projection Equipment Entirely New

Next, the new PROJECTOR. The standard make Projector, in turn, lost the Two Ray picture once it was put upon positive. It was necessary for Spoor and Berggren to make a new projector. They DID. Eight more of these new projectors were made by them at the Essanay Studio. They stand in a row there, WAITING to go out with the road shows and take up their new duties on the new picture.

Small Theatre Cannot Use New Film

Next, comes the effect of these inventions on the picture THEATRE itself. The Third Dimension Pictures are shown in their birthplace, the Essanay Studio, on a screen 23 feet high and 42 feet wide. Only theatres that can accommodate a screen 38 feet wide at the MINIMUM, will be permitted to show the Spoor-Berggren pictures. This size can be enlarged but under NO circumstance reduced.

The more you examine into the effects of this MANY-SIDED invention, the more you see that an hour of REVOLUTION is upon the picture industry.

Vaudeville "War" a Bloodless One

It means a NEW DEAL all around. And the VAUDEVILLE interests, before they tangle further with the motion picture business, as they have shown signs of doing of late, need to see the "Stop, Look, Listen" sign. A new film LOCOMOTIVE is coming down the track.

The vaudeville boys may know more TRICK holds than the picture boys. But the picture business is a wrestler that cannot be pinned to the mat. Like the mythical fighter of old, it takes on NEW STRENGTH every time it hits the EARTH. Vaudeville will ALWAYS be vaudeville. The moving picture today is SOMETHING ELSE again tomorrow.

The effect of the vaudeville "war," if any, on the picture business becomes an incident in the face of the change which is coming in the film industry, from within itself.

George K. Spoor and John Berggren are breaking a COLD DECK into the picture game. They are going to hand out a new deal ALL AROUND.

THE RIGHT MEDICINE

Compounded During Laugh Month

"No use of you calling again, Doc. I've got the right medicine all right."

WILL SOMEBODY kindly trot out a gold and diamond medal for J. D. Williams for his work in actually bringing out "British pictures?" In "Nell Gwyn" he strikes the universal chord. It's a pip!

Somebody Oughta Give 'Em a Medal

So Here Goes!

We have handed a medal.

For some time.

To M-G-M's advertising department.

For a revolutionary use of type.

In a business.

Where stills are the mainstay.

Of advertising display.

Now we give 'em a medal.

For the use of color.

On the inside front cover.

Of Moving Picture World.

Last week.

On "Mike"—"It's a riot!"

Riot is right!

On their color treatment.

Two colors talked.

Like a rainbow.

On "The Talk of the Industry."

ROD LA ROCQUE, seen as the Indian in "Braveheart" (Producers Distributing Corporation), deserves a medal for his development into one of the screen's dominant figures.

KATHRYN PERRY, the William Fox star, wins a medal with clasps! She always scores in the "Helen and Warren Series," and in "The First Year" she helps translate a hit fom stage to screen!

Looking Them Over—With Gray Strider

Reviews from the Screen Angle of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

Picture Chefs Can Make Dishes of Cuts from Broadway Play Meat

WHEN I first tried to cook I noticed that nobody liked my roast meat. No matter how carefully it was prepared each member of the family pushed it to one side and tried to fill up the vacuum with vegetables. Now that meat cost money and it couldn't be thrown away so the next day I would make a delicious stew, curry, goulash—or whatever you like to call it —out of the discard roast and the family's enthusiasm was boundless.

Of course it was uphill, discouraging work for I had no cookbook. My imagination was my only guide. And what orgies of paprika, worcestershire sauce, bay leaves and sage I indulged in before the curry reached the tempting point! BUT I KNEW I HAD SOMETHING BASICALLY GOOD. MEAT! I only needed to find out THE TASTE OF THE FAMILY.

"Beware of Widows" (the review appeared in this magazine December 26th) which Crosby Gaige recently presented, did not have a particularly long run on Broadway but he sold the movie rights to Universal for a satisfactory price. It will make an excellent picture—for it's a satisfying comedy that will delight nearly every type of person. BROADWAY'S MEAT TODAY WILL BE THE MOVIE'S GOULASH OF TOMORROW—goulash which will amuse the many millions throughout the United States.

There are hundreds of plays which are basically good going to waste each year while producers tear their hair for something original. These plays need only a far-seeing eye to whip up the whites of comedy and beat up the yolks of action into a thoroughly delectable dish—a well balanced picture to thrill the audiences and to enrich both producer and exhibitor.

No Theatrical Producer on earth can know the exact taste of the public each and every day of the year. But here is where the Picture Producer gets in his subtle work. If an experienced theatrical producer thinks enough of a play to pour his thousands into its presentation a clever moving picture producer can surely find PRETTY GOOD PICKINGS.

The Romance of Ponce de Leon

One of the most beautiful and one of the most miserable plays I have seen this year is O'Neill's "The Fountain." Now Picture Producers, don't bridle up. There is no Literateur living or dead too good for your movies. Don't get the idea because O'Neill is a so-called "highbrow" that he has no place on the screen. Just remember if there were no experimental theatres of today there would be do dramatic originality tomorrow.

With one hand bound behind me and one eye glued shut I could make "The Fountain" (review appeared in this department January 9) into an enthralling picture. And no credit to me—the essentials are there! The romantic figures of Christopher Columbus and Ponce de Leon, Indians in tortuous dances; semi-tropical settings; chanting monks; gorgeous women and a heartbreaking love story. What more could a director ask? And there's no trouble about the happy ending for Ponce de Leon's young nephew comes out of the East and marries the lovely Beatriz.

This play has unearthly beauty and marvelous possibilities. And someday soon somebody will wake up and see it!

"The Jazz Singer"

And while you are looking around don't pass up Sam Harris' "Jazz Singer" (the review appeared in this department January 23). With the rash of mother and daughter pictures which is breaking out on all sides—NOW is the time for this poignant story of the young Jewish boy's sacrifice for his mother and father to be picturized. It's a strictly Hebraic play but mother and father love are catholic, disregarding religion, color or country. And the "Jazz Singer" is a magnificent chip of dramatic worth. There's nothing forced or sugary about it. It's just heart's blood all the way through.

"The Makropoulos Secret"

Karl Capek's comedy, "The Makropoulos Secret" which Charles Hopkins is presenting at the Charles Hopkin's Theatre is unsuited for the screen in every way. But if any Moving Picture Producer is looking for a second Lois Moran he can find her in the person of Joanna Roos, who plays the part of Kristina in this drama. Miss Roos bears no physical resemblance to Miss Moran but they both have that quality of sweet freshness of unsophisticated girlishness which the screen so bitterly needs. AND THEY CAN BOTH ACT!

All Dillingham & Erlanger Plays Released for Films

Exploitation Stunts Are Not Limited To Any Particular Picture. Save All

EXPERIENCED readers of Moving Picture World know the value of the service section in the back pages. They know that the real exhibitor helps take care of themselves and can be safely shoved back.

Moving Picture World is something like a rice pudding. Most the raisins fall to the bottom of the dish. In other words, the real meat is found in the back pages where the service departments are tucked away.

But this week we are carefully hoisted to the front, where even the chance reader can see what it is all about, and this seems to be a good opportunity to talk about the exploitation raisins that are bumping around the tail end of every issue.

Some, perhaps many, managers fail to get the full good out of this department because they fail to realize that an exploitation stunt is not riveted to one particular picture. They do not get the big idea that a stunt is a stunt, no matter to what picture it may be applied. Of course there are some limitations, but not many. Most of the ideas we pass along can be applied to almost any picture.

Change It Around

For example, take the Live Wire Exhibition used by George E. Planck in the last issue. This was suggested by The Live Wire, a Johnny Hines picture. But if you figured that this does not interest you because you already have played The Live Wire, or because you do not expect to, you are losing about ninety percent of the idea of this department.

There are a number of titles to which the same idea may be applied. Universal's The Home Maker is one of them. The various frivolous wives titles also apply. It's not the title but the idea which has the real value, and hundreds of titles will permit you to make a display of electrical labor savers that will draw a crowd to your house, get you plenty of free advertising and sell extra tickets. The title is the least important part of the story.

Change Them Around

The main thing is to get the idea. The application will suggest itself. Some years ago the Metro-Goldwyn exploitation staff conceived the idea of a demonstration of cosmetics in a drug store window. It fitted a certain title. It was a money maker for theatre and store. Metro-Goldwyn has used precisely the same idea on half a dozen other titles, and always with the same result. The title was secondary. The idea was the main thing.

Fashion shows have generally been tied to clothes titles or to pictures in which there was some sort of fashion display. It is an idea that is worked two to five times a year in some houses. For years it was that and nothing more. The idea was good for dry goods stores.

Then a live wire went out and got a hardware store, too, on the argument that dishwashers and vacuum cleaners made it possible to wear pretty things. Now whenever you use the fashion show you can hook the hardware man in, too.

All Are Plastic

Practically all of the ideas offered in this department can be changed as readily as a sculptor remodels his clay. You can take the main idea and alter it to suit any picture of the same general style. Hundreds of exhibitors built miniature locomotives on auto trucks for The Iron Horse, but the miniature locomotive has been used on scores of other plays: not so universally, but with considerable regularity. The prehistoric monsters for The Lost World sound new, but the skeleton of a dinosaur was paraded in Los Angeles for a De Mille play some years ago.

Read the department with an open mind, and with the idea of adapting the ideas to your own needs. Only in this way can you get the full benefit of the suggestions from other live wires.

Keep a Scrap Book

The best way to use this department is to keep a scrap book. The very best way is to keep several, classifying the stunts to your own liking, but even a straight scrap book will soon become a real asset in your business.

If you want to classify, clip only the best basic stunts, with one book for lobby work, another for street stunts, a third for advertisements and another for newspaper schemes and merchant hook-ups.

This may be some trouble, but it will pay you in the long run. Books known to stationers as invoice books make the best scrap books because they are so bound as to allow for the pasting up of invoices. They are larger than the average scrap book, and better and cheaper.

Just One Book

But even a straight pasting up of the pages will help when you have accumulated a three month's file. For this get a book with a page about ten by thirteen inches. Cut a sheet of cardboard the size of the type page of the paper. Use this as a guide to cut out a section of each sheet. Paste the edges on one side and put down a page so that the reverse side shows through the window thus formed. You'll have both sides of the sheet with only one copy.

When you need an idea, keep turning over the pages until you hit something that fits. You are bound to find something; probably a number of ideas.

Do this and in six months you would not sell your books for real money.

But the big idea is not to look for a stunt ON a certain title but FOR a given feature. That's different.

A Naval Premier

Bremmerton, Wash., got The Midshipman before Seattle or Portland. There is a Navy Yard there, and the premiere was given in honor of Rear Admiral Chase and his sisters and his cousins and his aunts. When he drove up to theatre in company with the Mayor he got a salute of thirteen guns. The streets near the theatre had been decorated by the store keepers in recognition of his visit.

A prologue was given by two naval bands, one from the U. S. Virginia and the other formed from the yard workers.

Several thousand persons had to be turned away, but they came on other nights and helped to keep business to the maximum.

A First National Release

NO FORD CHASSIS FOR GUATEMALA—THEY USE A DRAY

J. C. Searcy, of Guatemala City, is doing exploitation stuff pretty regularly for the Palace Theatre. This is his stunt for Sandra. It is not elaborate, but he can reach the entire town with this outfit. It's enough.

The Cream of Exploitation Ideas in Tabloid

Gets "Bug" Letters From All Sections

C. J. Latta, the manager of the Empress Theatre, Shenandoah, Ia., who got country-wide notice when he issued an advertisement warning his patrons not to come on a certain night, is reaping the harvest. He is getting letters from all over the country about all sorts of things.

A Canadian minister writes that he is short $20,000 on the construction of a $60,000 "high school academy" and wants him to remit by return mail, while a Pittsburgh paper scolds Mr. Latta for not having seen the picture before he booked it. It is supposed to be a picture publication, but any picture paper should know that often pictures are booked before they are made.

Mr. Latta has not yet received an offer of marriage, but short of that he has been the target of cranks from all over the country.

Also he has broken into the picture sections of the state papers. One Des Moines newspaper made the now famous ad one of the features of its rotogravure section.

And the next man to pull the same stunt probably will not be heard of in the next county.

Quarantined 1000

Yellow has been the quarantine color since memory of man runneth not to the contrary, and a thousand yellow quarantine signs with not only the color but the word in big black type startled Dallas, Texas, not long ago.

Closer inspection showed that the complete text read: "Even if you are in quarantine you should not miss Bebe Daniels in Lovers in Quarantine, the laugh classic of any season. Melba theatre."

The Health Officer told Raymond B. Jones that he should put him in jail for interfering with the department, which had been swamped with calls, but decided to come around and see the picture instead.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Four musical presentations, running altogether thirty-eight minutes, and the Mark Strand Topical Review, on the program with Corinne Griffith in "Infatuation" made up a show which was one hour and fifty minutes long. The feature itself was sixty-four minutes in length, somewhat shorter than average picture and thereby better for all concerned. The Topical Review ran nine minutes.

The opening musical incident was supplied by Lilly Kovacs, girl pianist. Sitting at her accustomed place to the left of the orchestra stage, she played Liszt's "Spanish Rhapsody," under a rose-pink bridge spot. The musicians were covered by midnight blue floods from the dome, and the new cyclorama drapes extending from one side of the proscenium arch to the other were flooded by amber from the sides and bridge, and augmented from the projection room. Seven minutes for this solo.

A Revue Espagnole introduced six principals and ten girl dancers. The number was in special Spanish setting showing garden with high wall and grill gates center-stage flanked on either side by a torch light. There was a star-lit sky-drop back of the wall. Routine of act: "La Paloma," mixed quartette (tenor, contralto, soprano, baritone) with dancers grouped in front of the wall; "Madeiro," by tenor; "El Chocolo Tango," De Villa and Ruarke; "Cuba," soprano; Spanish dance, ten girls; "Mattinata," baritone; "La Spagnola," by ensemble. This presentation required sixteen minutes.

Following the topical review came a xylophone solo by Harry Breuer, playing from his accustomed place to the right of the orchestra stage. "Opera a la Carte" was the selection, requiring three minutes.

The four Indian Love lyrics from the Garden of Kama were revived owing to their popularity, but were given with different choreography than previously. The setting included a large set row on which was painted mosques, minarets, arches, etc., with transparency windows. Over the top of the set was a canopy striped red and white and masked in at the sides by draped gold curtains. Back of the set piece was blue neutral sky, showing only one star. A raconteur, seated in Omar Kayham make-up on a pile of cushions, recited the verses preceding each selection. Members of the ballet provided pantomime story to fit the songs. In their order, these songs were "The Temple Bells," as an introduction; "Less than the Dust," contralto; "Till I Wake," soprano; "Pale Hands," tenor. The running time of this presentation was twelve minutes.

Reused Panels to Cut Display Costs

When C. E. Twiss, publicity director of the Gem theatre, Sandpoint, Idaho, writes that his display panels cost only 48 cents a piece, he forgets to add in the cost of labor. He never would do to make out "swindle sheets" on the studio lots.

He arrives at this figure by dividing the cost of a sheet of compo board by six and adding in the cost of the material used, but he does not figure the labor cost of these really artistic products. Forty eight cents is merely the material cost. A sheet of compo board will stand six repaintings, being coated each time with alabastine in some light color and then worked up with water colors.

The example shown is taken from the Fox cover for the campaign book on The Fool, and it will stand comparison with the best of them. One of these is prepared for each important picture, and is shown in the foyer for a week in advance of the opening. Then it is taken into the lobby for the run. As they are rather elaborate for a small town, they build business into S. R. O. for a three day run.

This is a fine stunt if you have a good artist, but unless you can come measurably close to a high standard, it would scarcely pay, for the chief appeal of such a panel is largely made through the elegance of its appearance.

HERE'S AN IRON HORSE THAT BEATS THE BLOCKADE

We said we would use no more, but this comes with specifications, and so it gets in. It was built for the Weir Theatre, Aberdeen, Wash., mostly from borrowed materials, and it was built by Leo L. Hartley, of the D. & R. Theatres, Hoquiam.

Borrowed Most Parts For This Iron Horse

There are so many good points about this locomotive perambulator from the D. & R. circuit, Alberdeen, Wash., that we are showing it here, though most locos have gone to join Lost World monsters. It was built by Leo L. Hartley of the Hoquiam Theatres of the circuit, but is shown bannered for the Weir theatre, Alberdeen.

The tractor which serves as a foundation and motive power was borrowed from an agency in return for a sign three feet long by four inches high reading: "Every farmer needs an Iron Horse." This was lettered on the roof of the cab on that portion which shows all white in the photograph.

The boiler is of compo board, but the stack is tin, and the exhaust is connected so that the noise is amplified. Putting oil in the gas also gives a heavy smoke. The sand dome is an old washpan soldered to a cylinder of tin and the bell is the property of the Northern Pacific R. R. The whistle does not show as it was placed in the cab. This was taken from the photographer ni one of the theatres, and is operated by a bellows. The headlight is a baby spot and the two lanterns on the sides, as well as a tali light, als ocame from the N. P.

The tender is supported by a pair of front wheels from a Ford, bolted to a 2x2 frame, The front wheels are those of the tractor.

It was worked one week in each town and pulled a lot of real money into each house.

Finds New Hook-up for Classified Ad

Most managers have hooked Classified to the classified ads, generally through the names-in-the-ads stunt. That's good and has worked well all over the country, but H. Stelling beat this for the Plaza Theatre, Asheville, N. C.

He induced the newspaper to run a lot of small mentions in the classified ads without cost in return for the privilege of opening a branch office in the theatre lobby during the run of the play.

A regular office was set up in the lobby, with desk, filing cabinet and all the rest, and it excited no end of comment. There also was a large paste-up of the classified ad sheet with the slogan used by the newspaper, overpasted with the head of Corinne Griffith and stills.

Even without the generous allowance of classified ads Mr. Stelling would have profited on the lobby stunt.

Ground Novarro

Knowing what the picture was doing nearby, C. T. Perrin dropped his four-show policy at the Sterling theatre, Greeley, Colorado, and ground The Midshipman from one to eleven. The mere fact that he was grinding made people feel that they ought to see it.

The lastline-Limerick is not dead yet. Frank J. Miller recently used it to put over Introduce Me at the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., and he reports that he got a good business with it on a four day trial.

Suspected Realtors

Starting far enough in advance of his regular campaign, A. S. Grist tacked 200 pointers in and around Greenville, S. C., reading merely "California Straight Ahead."

Until he came through with his posters and display advertising a lot of people thought this a scheme of California realtors to catch the stream of Florida tourists which blocks all the roads leading into the state.

When the stunt was broken open they laughed a little and when the Rivoli theatre displayed an enlargement of the same sign, they hustled in to see Denny.

Newspaper Tabloids Phantom Chapters

Because of the demand for the first instalments of The Phantom of the Opera in the Cleveland News after the serial had been started, the Broadway Strand persuaded the newspaper to reprint the first twelve chapters in tabloid form and took 6,000 of these to fold into rotos on the picture.

The very evident effect upon the circulation so pleased the News that it repainted its delivery fleet a Phantom Red and pasted the 200 wagons with advertising for the picture during the run at the theatre.

If your local editor does not believe in circulation schemes, show him this or refer him to the Cleveland News.

For Wise Ones

Would you give 500 singles for a three sevens for five days? The Kearse Theatre Charleston, W. Va., did and cleaned up.

Charles Lowenberg, of the Pittsburgh Universal exchange, framed the stunt and laid it off to the Gazette, which used it as a circulation scheme. Inside of a large outline horseshoe he asked 25 questions about racing, such as "What is a chief clocker?" "What is a tout?" "Who won the last English Derby?"

The best answers got the tickets, but they were good only for the opening day, to give the theatre the benefit of the verbal advertising on Sporting Life.

Courtesy Paid

RAILROAD EQUIPMENT FOR THE IRON HORSE IS A HELP

The Cameo Theatre, San Francisco, playing the big picture second run borrowed switch points for either side of the lobby, strung lanterns below the banner and used a dozen signal flags to get an atmospheric lobby.

Followed a Fad

Iowa City, Ia., is a university town. Lately the students have had a craze for poetry and some of them have had their effusions set up and printed for distribution to their friends.

Charles Brown, or the Strand Theatre, knowing this, wrote a six stanza poem with the title the Hounded Bachelor, and had it set up in imitation of the prevailing style. At the bottom he ran a small line: "At the Strand! 'Twill be grand! This Week End!"

The students all grabbed for the sheets, read the story of Where Was I? and decided they would have to see the Denny comedy —so they did almost to a man.

A Premium

So far as we can figure there have been 7,873,961 appeals to patronize this or that sundae named after a star or a feature. All have been helpful.

So far as we know, J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas, is the first to offer a pass good for a month to the soda clerk selling the greatest number of a special sundae, in this case the Gold Rush. There were five stores and five hustling clerks.

Harrison's hotel ads were gilded rocks lettered for the attraction, and he did a lot of other good stunts but nothing as good as the prize idea.

THE TOWER OF LIES WAS TWINS IN DENVER

The America Theatre used two towers with a crosspiece carrying the title and Chaney's name, forming a gateway to its semi-circular lobby. It made a conspicuous showing, but a miss was made in not counting in Miss Shearer.

Change of Pace Was Big Help to Faunce

D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand theatre, Birmingham, Ala., generally uses a large lobby display often animated so a small attractor for Cobra got more attention than it would have done had it been merely one of a series of small ones. He used the figure of Valentino coiled about by a cobra with a woman's face.

But on the other hand he went out and blew up the streets with 500 letter cards each set of five spelling the title. These were cutouts and the letters along the thoroughfares followed up a set of teaser ads previously run in the newspaper with tickets to those who could assemble the letters in their proper order. This was a part of the campaign as outlined by Lem Stewart and it worked out so well that a heavy lobby was not necessary.

Milk Diet Helped

Eleanor Boardman's milk diet, printed on a substantial card, was tied to each bottle of milk supplied by the Metzger Dairies, Dallas, Texas, one morning. The card added that if you wanted to see what it had done for Eleanor you could go to the Melba Theatre.

Really you did not have to do that, for there were more than two dozen window displays and any one of them would convert you to a milk diet. One of the stores never had used theatrical photographs before. Even with their first venture they would not name the theatre or attraction, but other means had been taken to tell the Dallas section of the world that she was at the Melba in The Way of a Girl.

A Color Scheme

For Thank You, which was its Thanksgiving attraction, the Wisconsin Theatre, Eau Claire, got out all its printing in red on white. All heralds, cards, stickers and even the shashes worn by the house employes were uniform with the result that the very colors helped to advertise the Fox release.

Another good stunt was a card ostensibly from the hotel manager to his guests, but which worked in a reminder that Thank You was at the Wisconsin. These were placed in all mail boxes Thanksgiving morning in the six leading hotels.

Girl Callers Were A Philadelphia Hit

Two exploiteers were used in putting over The Merry Widow at the Aldine Theatre, Philadelphia. Abe Einstein, publicity director for the Stanley Company, had L. B. Jacobs, of M-G, for an associate, and together they put over a campaign that was largely responsible for the lengthy stay of the Widow, though she is her own best advertisement.

About the best bet was the use of two college girls of good presence who made house-to-house canvasses in the better sections of the town. They knew all about the Metro-Goldwyn product and could discuss plays and players interestingly. They told about The Big Parade, The Unholy Three, Tower of Lies and a lot of others, saving the Merry Widow for the last. They created a new interest in Metro-Goldwyns and did more than put over the one picture.

The Stanley Company has a trackless train and this was sent through the streets with the observation platform piled with hat boxes labeled with the title. Two pretty girls stood on the platform and handed out printed matter.

Other hat boxes were perambulated by five girls, each carrying two of the fancy affairs made up from wallpaper. They stuck around the shopping district and everyone simply had to see them. They were far ahead of the usual sandwich men.

A drive put over the music in every phonograph store in Philadelphia and the suburbs. There were 75 windows in the city alone, and posters were sent to all Victor dealers within commuting distance, these being stripped for the showing at the Aldine.

And no radio, dinner or dance program was complete without the waltz. It was 100 percent Merry Widow even over in Camden.

Change These Stunts to Match Your Bookings

An Aerial Football For The Freshman

Thousands of ballons have been released from tall buildings to exploit various titles, but the Connellee Theatre, Eastland, Texas, put a new kink in the idea when a brand new football was kicked off the roof of the Daily Tribune office.

The idea was sponsored by the Tribune, which advertised the stunt for several days. A local football hero booted the pigskin off the roof of the building, which is close to the theatre. The boy who crossed the line in front of the theatre wit hthe ball in his possession kept the ball and got $5 in addition.

Traffic was stopped while the stunt was pulled and most of the town stood on the sidelines. The original catcher made his touchdown, but not until he had made Red Grange look like a one legged man in the last mile of a marathon.

Sixteen Miles

A once popular song had it that it was sixteen miles from Schenectady to Troy, and it is about the same distance to Albany. But there is a trolley to the Capital and the road ran a special car from Albany direct to Loew's State Theatre, Schenectady, that those along the route might witness The Phantom of the Opera.

The car wa swell bannered and the time table was played up in the newspaper advertisements. Paul Perez went up from the New York office to give a demonstration of the Universal plan book, and added this to the other stunts.

Keyed Right

Apparently W. A. Rogers struck the right key in his advertising for Seven Keys to Baldpate at the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., when he used a key shaped shadow box to house a miniature of Baldpate Inn. A small spotlight brought the door into relief with a suggestion of keys.

A hardware hook-up gave a trade display with another Baldpate Inn. Here four stills were mounted so as to suggest that they were interiors seen through the windows of the inn.

One of the sales features was the first stage presentation of the Charleston.

Spooky

Getting up Spook Ranch for his Hallowe'en attraction, Bert Jordan, of the Majestic Theatre, Memphis, played up the mystery angle. His lobby appeal was a square painted with a spook hovering over a ranch house, and this was framed in cornstalks. Pumpkins were hung from the underside of the lobby banner and lighted from the flasher sign so that the jack o' lanterns were intermittent.

Most of the lobby lights were shut off to enhance the mystery suggestion and the sidewalk crowds attested the value of the idea while the box office showed the best receipts for the past six months.

gets a much more sightly display than would come from the use of the full width cut. knows that white space is better than all-cut, and he saves money while getting out a more sightly display. This display for Classified is only a three sevens, but it has as good a display value as the average four tens because a better than usual employment of the space is made. One of the nice touches is the panel in the upper left hand corner for the closing attraction, The Dark Angel. Generally the closing show is tucked away wherever it can be slipped in and the effect is lost. Here the story gets the full advantage of the entire space. The opening on The Dark Angel gets a three eights, with a paneled space inside a panel. This is one of the best that Planck has sent in. It possesses a strong display value and by using a deeper margin on the left than on the right, he gets room to tell of the supporting features without either sinking them or spoiling the display for the feature. Planck writes that he has solved the problem of his vaudeville acts, mentioned in a recent issue. He just announces "Five acts of vaudeville" and lets the house put them over. Junior time vaudeville names do not mean much at best. The Sedalia standard does carry weight. He says merely that he has vaudeville on the appointed days and finds that this draws just as well without interfering with the film advertisement. Another angle to this is the fact that the bookings often are changed at the last moment. Merely announcing five acts avoids any disappointments due to a change in the bookings.

Good Selling Done In This Display

characters, and the talk carries on with an exceedingly well written appeal. We think it would have been better to have told that this was a different from usual play, for the average spectator will not be prepared for the artistry of this picture without due warning. He needs to be told that it is different, or he will go in looking for the usual type of happy ending and perhaps be disappointed to the point where he will not appreciate the excellence of this picture. The success of The Tower of Lies is largely dependent upon the mental attitude of the spectator. If he knows what to expect, he will enjoy the fine work, but he must be prepared or appreciation will fall short of what is possible. Stress should be given the fact that this picture appeals most to those who want a higher grade of product than the usual machine-made plot. Like Begger on Horseback, the selling is half the battle. Typographically we think that this is better than the usual Loew space, though their usual space is a fine example of layout in this proportion. They always are better than average, but this is even better than their usual result. It is not flashy, but it is genuinely good.

Cut Attractor Is Half the Sale

Using the alley itself for the cut attractor gets the money for the Circle theatre, Cleveland, on Hogan's Alley. This seems to be a plan book cut, though the signature is so nicely set in at the top as to suggest that it is all a local drawing. Hogan's Alley sells on the title, with its suggestion of the picturesque East Side, which is more picturesque the further away from it you get. The title sells the idea, and here the cut backs up the title to the point where it makes sales on its own account. Of course, the artist could not know that a six-story tenement is the limit where there is no elevator, so he makes these eight-story fronts. The space is a two nines, and it sells a lot for eighteen inches, but more space would have sold no more tickets. It's just about the right size, certainly not too large and yet not too small. The entire space could have been spoiled

In the reproduction this all reverse on The Tower of Lies from the Warfield Theatre San Francisco, will look better than it did on the newspaper page where the small letters were additionally handicapped by poor presswork. Even had the space come out a strong black most of the lettering would still have been too small to come through, but with a poor impression the only things to show up are the star names, the title and the house signature. All of the rest would have sold as well had they been omitted, for they did not come through. It is an almost total loss of nearly 16 column inches, not counting the loss of publicity, since the message did not get over. Probably this looked like a fine display when it was shown for managerial approval in india ink on a white card, but in a dirty grey on a newsprint none too white, the result by no means justifies the cost. This was the opening display. Contrast it with the smaller advance used the day before. This gets over in every line because it is all straight rule with a rule attractor. It is only ten inches against the other's sixteen, but it is worth a great deal more in display because every word can be read without the slightest effort. This is a much better black, because there is not so much surface. The trouble with the reverse is that the large surfaces do not ink well and come up poorly. The smaller lettering in the signature of the advance comes through much better because there is less cut. It always is a risky experiment to use large reverses in newspaper work. It is impossible to use make-up to give additional pressure, and the paper simply will not take all the ink it needs on a cylinder press. Now and then an accident happens and a reverse will come through nicely, but the chances against this happening are so great that it does not pay to take the chance. In about 95 per cent. of the gambles the theatre loses, and yet staff artists never seem to learn through experience, though perhaps the staff man was not to blame. The loss on a reverse is not merely the cost of the ad. It is the loss of publicity from that issue of the paper, and generally reverse is used when the theatre is mose anxious to get the best display. That's why they take a chance on the reverse. The cut probably will be more legible in this reduction than it was in the original, since here it will come out a better black. A flat bed press and a better grade ink will give more nearly the effect the theatre did not get in the newspaper. The money that is wasted on poor illustrations, hand lettering and reverses would run into six figures were data accessible.

VERY MUCH BETTER

Burns Works in Cuts to Gain Art Effect

Frank Burns got busy on the Florida boom and forgot to send in his display for a time, but he promises to take his mind off real estate now and then and shoot in some ads from the Beacham theatre, Orlando, Florida. Meantime he sends in a couple of old timers, including this for The Marriage Whirl in which he gets very good results from a two column cut and a single column portrait. This is a four sevens, but unless you put the yardstick to it it looks like a five nines because the use of white space gives the appearance of greater size. The cut is the regular press book two-column design, but it looks much better in the four column space than would the standard three or four column, and it does not cost as much to run. The paneled portrait cut of Miss Griffith is more striking than it would be running wild, and setting it partly outside of the supposed limitations of the space gives it far greater attention value. This is rather a fussy sort of a job for the compositor and we imagine that Burns has to sweeten the printer with passes now and then, but he must do it very effectively, for the printer certainly works well with him and follows his designs nicely. The most valuable space in this layout is that three and a half square inches of white space to the left of the design. It looks like waste, but it really is what gives this entire space its distinction, and it looks even better in the page than it does isolated for reproduction, for there it functions to hold this announcement apart from all other matter on the page. We hold with Lem Stewart that the only proper way is to give the entire page, but this is not practicable in the limited space at our command so you will have to use your imagination. We think, however, that you can visualize this—and appreciate the idea.

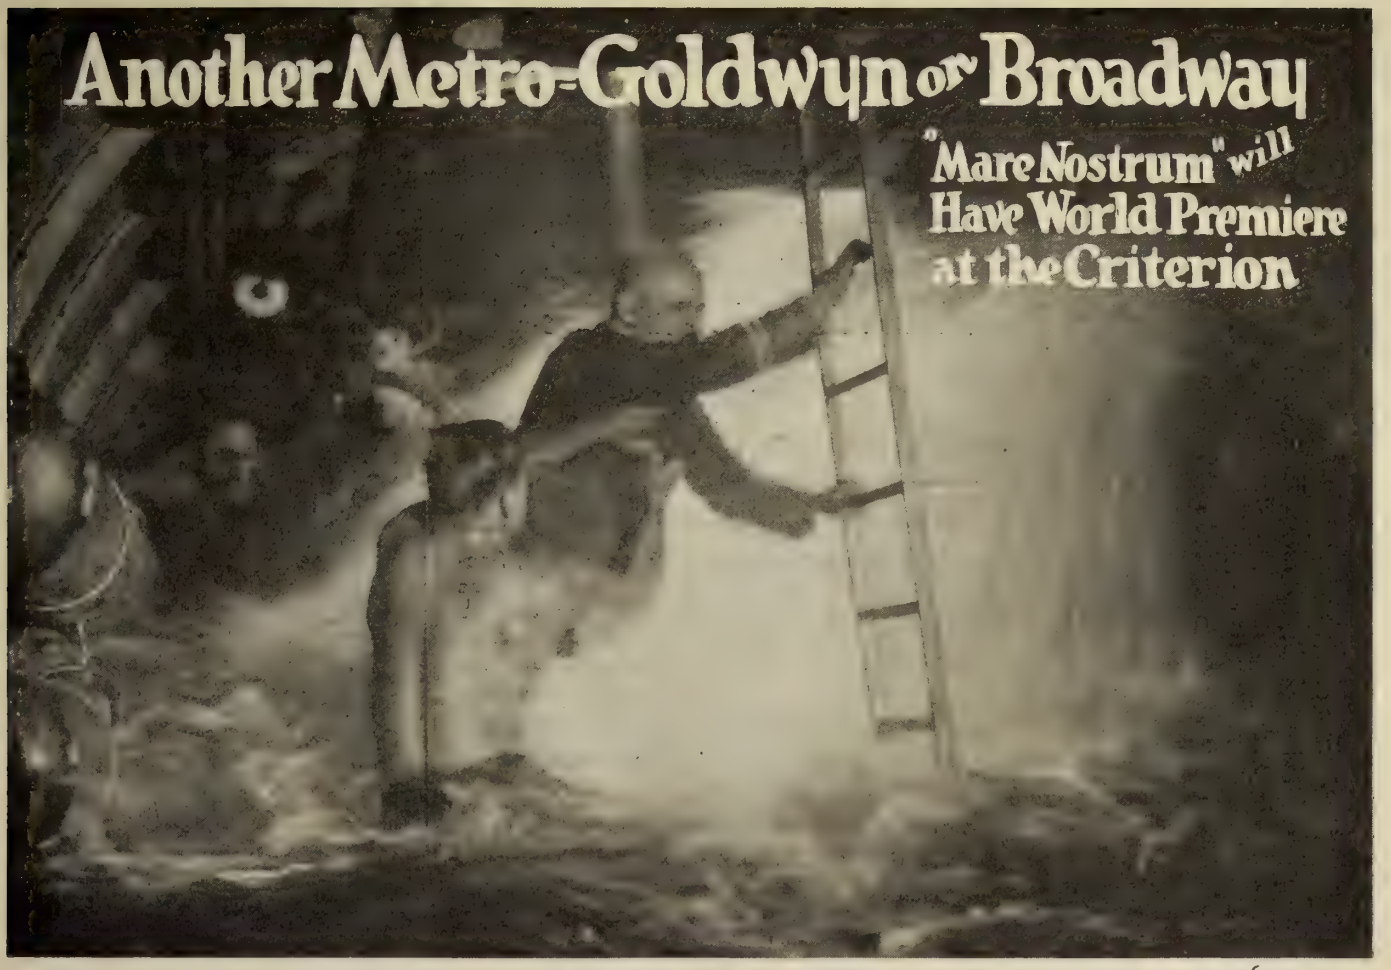
More Than

H. C. Olson, who has been a valued contributor to this department, recently moved over to the Majestic Theatre, Reedsburg, Wis., and writes that he will have more chance than ever to work out schemes.

To build a mailing list in his new job he used the ever-reliable ten-names stunt with unique results. While only sixty children claimed the matinee tickets for turning in the books, he found that nearly one hundred books had been turned in. Eliminating duplications he still had a fine live list.

One good point in Mr. Olson's handling is that he told of the scheme at a regular Saturday matinee and gave the youngsters the outline of a selling talk on Tom Mix in The Everlasting Whisper, which was the picture they were to tell their ten about. That helped a lot.



WITH "THE MERRY WIDOW" AT THE EMBASSY, "The Big Parade" at the Astor, and "Ben Hur" at the George M. Cohan, this makes a quartet of long-run specials for M-G-M on Broadway. Scene shows commander escaping as "Our Sea" pours into the submarine. "Mare Nostrum" is a Rex Ingram Production.

"MARE NOSTRUM," Rex Ingram's latest photoplay for Metro-Goldwyn, will have its world premiere Monday, February 15, at the Criterion Theatre, Broadway and 44th street; and Lillian Gish in "La Boheme," with John Gilbert, soon will replace "The Merry Widow" in the intimate Embassy Theatre, Broadway at 46th street, according to announcement made yesterday by Nicholas M. Schenck, executive vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

This arrangement, consummated by Mr. Schenck, will result in the same company having on Broadway at the same time four motion pictures running in four legitimate theatres—"Ben Hur" at the Cohan, "The Big Parade" at the Astor, "Mare Nostrum" at the Criterion, and "aL Boheme" at the Embassy.

The triple runs of "The Big Parade," which has standing room only at every performance, and of "Ben Hur," which has been running ever since the opening of the Embassy last August, set a new high water mark for New York motion picture showing by one company—and that is not counting the regular appearance of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film premieres of feature pictures at the Capitol and of their appearances in the Loew theatres and others, either. Now with four big pictures due to be unreeling simultaneously on the greatest show street in the world, each in its own theatre home, and with all seats reserved, this company will have set a high tide mark never before even approached.

John Gilbert has been playing in both "The Big Parade" and "The Merry Widow"; now he will be seen in both "The Big Parade" and "La Boheme," both of which pictures by the way were produced by Irving Thalberg and directed by King Vidor. Renee Adoree, the heroine of "The Big Parade," also is in "La Boheme."

Ingram was about nine months shooting "Mare Nostrum" from the novel by Blasco Ibanez. "Mare Nostrum" means "Our Sea," which has been the classic name for the Mediterranean ever since the old Romans conquered all the lands that surround its tideless waters. The story, in which Alice Terry and Antonio Moreno have the leading roles, has a war background. She is a spy who entangles the Spanish mariner, who is Moreno, in her net of intrigue. Submarines and torpedoes are used. This picture was made in the exact locations in France, Spain, Italy and the Mediterranean described by Ibanez.

"La Boheme," the first starring vehicle for Miss Gish since she signed her Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract with Mr. Schenck last Spring, is a picturization of the famous opera. Advance reports are that it is an unusual photodrama in every way; those few who have seen it in preview on the West Coast have called it a "screen poem." And it has love and thrills, and beautiful sets and locations and the best possible cast, supporting Miss Gish with Gilbert.

Porter in Hollywood

Verne Hardin Porter, former editor of "Cosmopolitan," "Smart Set" and other magazines, who now holds the position of editor-in-chief of Paramount productions, has arrived in Hollywood with story material for the inspection of Hector Turnbull and B. P. Schulberg, associate producers at Paramount's West Coast studio. He expects to remain in Hollywood several weeks.

Completes "Dixie Merchant"

Frank Borzage has completed "The Dixie Merchant," his fourth special production for Fox Films. J. Farrell MacDonald is featured in the title role of this whimsical drama, based on Barry Benefield's novel "The Chicken Wagon Family." Madge Bellamy and Jack Mulhall have the romantic leads. Others in the cast are Claire McDowell, Evelyn Arden, Paul Panzer, Edward Martindale, Frank Beal, Harvey Clark, Onest Conly and the horse "Cherryblossom," one of the fastest trotters in California.

President of Principal Pictures, Releasing Through United Artists, Does Not Fear "Corner in Theatres"—Will Sell New York Franchise

SOL LESSER, First Vice-President of First National Pictures, Inc., Secretary of the West Coast Theatres, and President of Principal Pictures Corporation, is in New York City completing details for the further financing of the West Coast chain of 165 theatres. He will return to Los Angeles shortly. In a chat, at the Ambassador, Mr. Lesser brought out the following results of his trip to the Metropolis:

1.—Principal Pictures Corporation will produce "The Winning of Barbara Worth," the Harold Bell Wright novel, for release by United Artists Corporation.

2.—West Coast Theatres will issue $4,000,000 in treasury certificates to expand the company's business. Stockholders of record as of date of issue of this flotation will have first bid on the treasury stock.

3.—First National Pictures, Inc., remains free and wholly independent of any interests seeking to turn it from its original status of an independent producing unit. Rumors that First National might, under certain conditions, lose its identity as an independent production company, were frowned upon by Mr. Lesser.

4.—On the subject of "one group controlling all motion picture theatres in the United States," Mr. Lesser said he is not alarmed at the possibility of success for any such group. So many large "chains" enjoy such tremendous individual financial backing, they will experience no difficulty in maintaining their separate identification, in the opinion of Mr. Lesser.

5.—The West Coast chain seeks to operate exclusively on the West Coast, and for that reason the New York State franchise for First National Pictures, control of which is held by Lesser and his associates in West Coast Theatres, will be sold to any independent exhibitor or circuit, if such sale "will react to the general good of the industry." In some circles, it is expected that Moe Mark, head of the Mark Strand circuit, will acquire the Lesser interests.

Following a series of conference with Hiram Abrams, President of United Artists Corporation, Mr. Lesser said he will produce the Harold Bell Wright novel, "The Winning of Barbara Worth," for release through United Artists.

Lesser Casts His Lot With United Artists

"Frankly, I am an exhibitor, "Mr. Lesser said. "But at heart, I am a producer, and in this instance I feel that I can add to the picture a certain quality of showmanship that should, if the experiment proves to sustain my thought, enhance the value of the picture for theatre owners.

"Mr. Wright has given us a novel that anticipates some of the great hydroelectric development plans for the Colorado River, and while the romance is being woven into the picture, the cameras doubtless will catch splendid 'shots' of some of the greatest engineering works in the world, now building in the West.

"We shall bring to patrons of motion picture theatres a new angle on the West, we hope. Easterners will find, there, something of the 'contact' with the East, with which the West has been endowed. Eastern engineers, doubtless, are playing a mighty big role in those vast water power developments, and the Easterner feels more 'at home' now in the West than he ever did before. Basically, 'The Winning of Barbara Worth' will prove that it has an appeal that is universal—a story that will not be wholly associated with the West.

"Our plans for the production call for a fine cast and ample interiors, with about 70% of the story laid in the open. But the selling points will be story and author. Charles Brabin, our director, will have a free hand in every respect. Marceline Day, a new star, will be given the role of Barbara Worth."

SOL LESSER
Native Californian will sell his interest in New York State Franchise of First National to devote himself to West Coast Circuit.

West Coast Theatres to Issue Stock

When Mr. Lesser was asked regarding the West Coast Theatres situation, he said the circuit never was in better shape.

"Business expansion," he continued, 'requires an issue of treasury certificates up to $4,000,000, however.

"This will be offered first to our stockholders, and without doubt will be disposed of in that way. We do not anticipate any of it going outside the company."

Mr. Lesser said he had spent the better part of ten days chatting with bankers in Wall Street, and enjoyed every moment of it.

"West Coast Theatres will remain independent," Mr. Lesser said, "and we shall continue to grow."

He said there are 165 theatres in this group, the bookings going through one office, thus tending toward efficiency and speed. Bookings can be arranged in fifteen minutes, where, before, the exhibitor went "shopping" among the exchanges for several days.

"West Coast never interferes with an exhibitor's business. No exhibitor can truthfully state that we have ever adopted a policy inimical to his welfare. The progressive showman will keep up his house, and attend to his bookings. Where a man 'falls down' on his community, and we see an indication of some other interests stepping in, we take action at once. But there is no 'stamping out' of the small exhibitor, and there won't be—while I have anything to say about it."

When asked whether showmen booking their houses through West Coast affiliation have ample sway for showmanship effort Mr. Lesser said:

"I can see no reason why he would not have plenty of elbow room. We save him all of the worry about the actual bookings, but with his press book, accessories, etc., at hand, he can go to any extremes, and in ample time. To this extent, chain houses work a great advantage to the exhibitor who delights in spreading himself on his bookings. I can lay my hand on no point where it operates to his disadvantage."

First National to Remain Independent

When the subject changed and First National matters were brought up, the First Vice-President of First National said he is not in any fear of this company losing its complete independence.

"I do not look for any meeting of First National franchise holders until the stated meeting in April, "Mr. Lesser said. "In the interval, there is nothing to become alarmed about. The franchise holders know, or should know, precisely what it is all about. The Katz interest is less than 50%, and with my knowledge of the men backing their own chain operations, I see no danger at this time. I cannot, of course, speak for the future, and I speak only for myself. I believe there are enough 'big men' in this group to see the thing right through to the end."

Without in any way admitting the success of any scheme to take First National into any other group, Mr. Lesser said he can't see where "big interests" will find competent men to manage their colossal theatre chains. He named a dozen big exhibitors, and gave it as his opinion that the industry will suffer if they quit.

Mr. Lesser pointed out that all the big theatre chains, regardless of where they are located, have their own financial backing, and are in a position to protect their interests in their own way, at all times.

On this subject, however, Mr. Lesser's seemingly decisive point is the inability of "a super-chain" finding qualified men to operate their houses.

First National New York Franchise on Market

When the topic of West Coast Theatres retaining its majority interest in the First National New York State franchise, Mr. Lesser asserted West Coast Theatres prefer to operate on the West Coast, and in curtailing its wide operations the New York State franchise will be sold to an independent exhibitor or a competent chain.

"I would sell that franchise tomorrow, if I thought it would react to the benefit of the industry," Mr. Lesser said. "We hold the majority interest in this franchise, but in order to center our operations in the West, I certainly wouldn't hesitate to dispose of my holdings in New York. I will study any offer presented, the matter of money being a remote consideration, I assure you."

It is understood that an offer has been made to West Coast Theatres for their interest in the New York State franchise for First National pictures. No details were forthcoming on this point when the World man was chatting with Mr. Lesser, however. It will be recalled that several weeks ago Moe Mark, head of the Mark Strand chain in New York and New England, announced that he would have an important announcement to make very soon. In this connection, reports couple Mr. Mark with the early acquisition of the Lesesr interests in this important franchise.

Big Laemmle Anniversary Party At Hotel Commodore, Feb. 5

1200 Employees, Associates and Friends of Universal Chief Will Gather to Felicitate Him on His Twenty Years in the Motion Picture Business

THE first event of the round of activities which will mark Carl Laemmle's Twentieth Anniversary in the motion picture industry, will be a big supper dance to be held by the officers and employees of Universal at the Commodore Hotel, New York City, Friday evening, February 5th. Mr. Laemmle will be the guest of honor. More than 1,200 persons will be present, including many of the leaders of the industry.

The Universal employees present will include the home office force, the personnel of the New York or Big "U" Exchange and the staff and operatives of Universal's laboratory at Fort Lee, N. J. These employees, many of whom are veterans in the service of Carl Laemmle, will gather to felicitate their chief on his twentieth anniversary and to pledge him another faithful twenty years of success in the motion picture field.

The affair will be held in the main ball room of the Commodore. Dancing will begin at 9 p. m. and will be interrupted by a supper at 11:30. Following the supper there will be dancing and entertainment.

Music will be supplied by Ben Bernie and his orchestra. E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of Universal, will be the master of ceremonies for the evening, and R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of the big film concern, will be the toastmaster.

Laemmle is now returning from Europe aboard the steamship Olympic, and will arrive in New York on February 2, well in time for the party at the Commodore. Many activities are projected for his anniversary period. His friends both in and out of the industry will participate in the various functions and festivities. The anniversary will be marked in all parts of the world—wherever Universal's and Laemmle's zones of influence extend.

Among the letters of congratulation pouring in upon the Universal president, are messages from heads of other film companies, including Marcus Loew, Samuel Goldwyn and Robert Lieber.

Loew wrote as follows:

"I just learned that it is twenty years since you entered the motion picture industry, and I wish to take this opportunity of congratulating you on your wonderful success.

"No one knows better than I of the trials and tribulations that attended both exhibitors and producers in the early stages.

"With very best wishes for continued success."

Lieber, the president of Associated First National Pictures, paid the following tribute to Laemmle:

"My attention has been brought to the fact that this year of 1926 marks for you twenty years of constructive work towards the advancement of motion pictures.

"I, myself, can think back over a goodly share of these same years, and as I do I am constantly reminded of your definite purpose through all of this time. Through all of this period your work has been significant of all that is best in the advancement of this industry of ours.

"I am hoping that you will continue to find this same interest for many years to come, for we still need you now as we did in the early days."

Goldwyn sent the following congratulations:

"It has just come to my knowledge that in February you will have been in the business for twenty years, and I therefore feel that it is only befitting the occasion that I express to you my appreciation for the constructive work you have done for the motion picture industry as a whole during that period.

"You have always stood for clean, wholesome entertainment and honest dealings with the public and motion picture theatre owners, as well as with your competitors, and I hope that you will continue for the next twenty years to do the good for the industry that you have in the past.

"Best wishes and kindest regards."

Exhibitors all over the country are felicitating Laemmle. The following letter was received from H. L. Berinstein of the William Berinstein Theatres, Elmira, New York, and is an example of the attitude of theatre owners towards Carl Laemmle:

"Allow us to congratulate you upon the twentieth anniversary of your entrance into the motion picture industry.

"We have been using your product for several years and to us, each season seems to be an improvement over the preceding ones.

"Trusting you may continue your excellent service."

No wonder the public likes him, wants to see him!

Now presented in his newest and greatest picture, with thrill, fight, heart interest and pathos. The Carey fans, who are legion, will eat it up. And it will make many new friends for him.

Mary Philbin to Star in "The Star Maker"

"Tecnic," Dana Burnett's brilliant "Saturday Evening Post" story of the making of a star, has been acquired by Universal as a starring vehicle for Mary Philbin and will be produced as a Universal-Jewel for the 1926-1927 season under the title "The Star Maker."

Francis X. Bushman has been engaged to play the important role of Barry, the talented but unfortunate actor, to whom the heroine owes her spectacular success in the story. Sada Cowan has been engaged to adapt the story for screen purposes.

Titled Russians Appear in De Mille's "Volga Boatman"

Many of the Former Czar's Blue Blood Drafted For Big Producers Distributing Corporation's Picture; Aristocrats Converse with Producer Through Interpreter

THE axiom pertaining to the superlative illness of a wind that blows nobody good might have been written with the needs of motion picture producers especially in mind. For the tornado of Bolshevism which upset the aristocratic apple-cart in Russia a short time ago, scattered titled Russians all over the face of the globe, and as a result Cecil B. De Mille was fortunate in casting his newest production, "The Volga Boatman" with Russia and the Red Revolution. For this picture De Mille drafted a dozen members of Imperial Russia's bluest-blood gentry to give an aristocratic background for the dramatic actions of his featured players.

For instance, there is General Ivan Ikonnikoff, one of the ranking officers of the Czar's army, in service for seventeen years before the Bolshevists captured him. A year and a half in the mines of Siberia was followed by a fortunate escape, and he walked from upper Siberia to China, from whence he made his way to America. He still retains his military bearing and superb aristocratic aloofness, and has figured prominently in several scenes in "The Volga Boatman."

Dimitriof Volgannin, uncrowned poet-laureate of Russia, whose lyrics in praise of the Volga were nationally famous, is another fallen aristocrat whom Cecil B. De Mille seized gleefully to give the much-desired Russian tinge to his picture, and Prince Sergis M'Divani, distanty related to the late Czar, and formerly possessing fabulous wealth, is also appearing in the production, George Blagoi, a young fleet officer, escaped with his life from the Bolshevik uprising, and now considers himself fortunate to do atmosphere work in "The Volga Boatman." Victor de Linsky, a lieutenant in the Imperial Russian Cavalry, also exiled, is portraying a prominent part in Revolutionary scenes, while Vasilli Kalmykoff, who stayed in Russia to gather the art collection of his father, Ivan, has just made his way to America to dispose of it. Kalmykoff was captured by the Reds and lifted up on their bayonets as a gesture of ruthlessness, and left for dead. The manner in which he regained possession of his father's valuable paintings and reached America is a remarkable story. He fills the role of a Russian officer in "The Volga Boatman."

Most of these former aristocrats speak little English, and converse with De Mille through Theodore Kosloff as an interpreter.

Konrad Bercovici, noted author from Asia Minor, wrote "The Volga Boatman" for De Mille, and Lenore J. Coffee wrote the adaptation. William Boyd, Elinor Fair, Victor Varconi, Julia Faye and Theodore Kosloff are the featured players.

HONEST INJUN, you ought to find audience appeal in "Braveheart" because Rod LaRocque put his best into it, with Alan Hale directing and Cecil B. DeMille supervising to hold it up to Producers Distributing Corp.'s standard.

Miss Marion Joins Goldwyn

Samuel Goldwyn advised Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists Corporation that he has just completed an agreement with Frances Marion, well-known scenario writer, by which she will devote herself exclusively to Samuel Goldwyn productions, which are to be released through that organization.

Raoul Walsh in New York to Find Cast for "What Price Glory"

Important Roles Awaiting Ideal Players; Director Will Consider All Applications; Tests Being Made at Fox Eastern Studios

RAOUL WALSH, assigned by Fox Films to direct the screen version of "What Price Glory," has arrived in New York from Hollywood to put the final touches on the scenario of the great war play and select actors and actresses to portray the principal roles.

Players have not yet been selected for any of the parts. Mr. Walsh's visit to this city is for the express purpose of making screen tests of a number of prominent actresses and actors who have applied for the parts of Captain Flagg, Sergeant Quirk and the French girl, Charmaine. These tests will be made at the home office studios of the Fox organization, No. 850 Tenth avenue, New York City.

Regarding players for these parts Mr. Walsh let it be known that he still has an open mind regarding them. He invites the applications of all who consider themselves eligible, and is willing to interview them while he is here.

Seen at the Fox studios where he made his appearance on Tuesday, January 19, after his trip across the country, Mr. Walsh expressed his enthusiasm over the picture possibilities of "What Price Glory." He said: 'What Price Glory' in scenario form looks to me as the greatest of pictures. There is no doubt but that the tremendous success it has attained on the stage will be duplicated, if not surpassed, as a motion picture."

Mr. Walsh said he expects to complete his work here and secure players in time to begin filming on the Fox lot in Hollywood on February 10.

"What Price Glory," based on the stage play which is duplicating its sensational New York success with road companies throughout the country, will be Mr. Walsh's first picture for Fox under his new contract. Since he made "The Honor System" for Fox several years ago, Mr. Walsh has directed several successes, including Douglas Fairbanks in "The Thief of Bagdad." His most recent picture was "The Wanderer."

Universal to Make Soutar Story With Laura La Plante

ANDREW SOUTAR'S widely real novel, "Butterflies in the Rain," soon will be put into screen form, it was announced this week by Universal, which has acquired the motion picture rights to the story and will film it as one of the coming season's big pictures.

The story will be used as a starring vehicle for Laura LaPlante, Universal's blonde star, who has risen to top ranks during the past twelve months. It will be released as one of the outstanding features in Universal's 1926-27 schedule of productions.

"Butterflies in the Rain" had an immense vogue when it appeared as a novel. It first was printed serially in the New York Sunday American and in fifteen other papers.

O'Connor to Direct "Hearts and Spangles"

The favorable comments from the trade press, exhibitors and the public on the excellent direction of Frank O'Connor for the Gotham Production "One of the Bravest" secured for him the job of staging "The Speed Limit" which he has just completed.

At a pre-view of this subject in California, Mr. O'Connor's work so pleased Sam Sax, the producer, that O'Connor was immediately assigned the directorial megaphone on "Hearts and Spangles" and he was placed under contract to personally direct not less than two more pictures for the forthcoming Gotham program for 1926-27.

First National to Build World's Largest Studio, Announces Lieber

Site Located in Los Angeles and Comprises Seventy-Five Acres—Property, Plant and Equipment Will Represent $1,500,000 —Work to Start at Once

ROBERT LIEBER, president of First National Pictures, Inc., announced that in accordance with the company's policy of expansion, arrangements have been completed for the erection of a new West Coast Studio, which will be the largest and best equipped in the world. Negotiations, which have been under way for several months, were concluded this week by Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National, and John McCormick, West Coast production manager, as announced in a telegram just received by Mr. Lieber from Mr. Rowland.

"This studio will provide First National with its own plant for the continuation and the enlargement of the policy which has been that of First National from its inception in the production and distribution of pictures," said President Lieber. "Through First National Productions Corporation, we will continue our individual efforts in making pictures for the entire world. As a distributing company we will continue to handle not only our own product but that of independent producers.

Will Continue to Develop Selling Policy

"Our selling policy will be developed along the same lines as in the past and changed only by the needs of the business as it expands. We will meet all changes in conditions and meet them in the spirit of fairness that has always characterized the policies of First National. And we will continue to conduct our selling operations in our own way and we hope with an ever increasing number of exhibitors.

"The very fact that we are entering into this studio project is evidence of our intention to meet all such needs. It is evidence also of our intention to continue First National's part, and in a bigger way, in providing the exhibitors of the world with the only necessity that they require for the growth of their business, namely, good pictures."

Investment Will Run to $1,500,000

The new studio site is located in Los Angeles and will comprise seventy-five acres. The investment will run to $1,500,000, including the property, studios, and equipment. The construction of the studios will be started at once and it is expected that a greater part of First National's West Coast units will be at work in the studio by June 1.

Mr. Rowland, in his wire to Mr. Lieber, said: "In looking over studios now standing and with the future in mind, and with the growing proportion of the film industry, we felt that there was nothing now built that would suit our purpose in size or modern equipment. We are progressing at so rapid a pace that we must look ahead fully twenty-five years. The only way to turn is towards acreage and this was our only solution in providing for our needs in years to come.

"We will pofit by the experience of others who have built large plants and we have made our plans to make this the most spacious and most perfectly equipped studio existing."

Will Have Last Word in Studio Organization

John McCormick, who has been working with Mr. Rowland on studio plans, makes the following statement:

"Beginning with this season, the First National organization will have the last word in studio construction and every up-to-date device will be installed. Bids are now being received from the foremost architects in the country and work on plans will commence at once. Special lighting system and hot and cold temperature for stages will be a feature, also experimental photographic laboratories will be installed for the obtaining of novel photographic effects. Plans call for the largest stages in the world and there will be sufficient space for as many stages as we find necessary."

Among the units now producing in Los Angeles for First National release are: The Joseph M. Schenck Productions starring Norma Talmadge, Colleen Moore Pictures, produced by John McCormick, Constance Talmadge pictures under Mr. Schenck, the Frank Lloyd Productions, the Edwin Carewe Productions, Corinne Griffith Productions, Sam Rork Productions, those of June Mathis, M. C. Levee, Harry Langdon, Marion Fairfax, Charles Rogers and the many special features together with the direct First National units controlled by the First National organization.

Stars, Players and Directors

Among the stars and players are Norma Talmadge, Colleen Moore, Corinne Griffith, Richard Barthelmess, Constance Talmadge, Milton Sills, Harry Langdon, Leon Errol, Johnny Hines, Lewis Stone, Anna Qi Nilsson, Doris Kenyon, Blanche Sweet, Dorothy Mackaill, Lloyd Hughes, Ben Lyon, Mary Astor, Jack Mulhall, Charles Murray, Philo McCullough, Hugh Allen, Joyce Compton and many more famous to the film fans of the country.

In the directorial division will be found Frank Lloyd, Edwin Carewe, Alfred E. Green, Alfred Santell, Lambert Hillyer, Sylvano Balboni, Clarence Brown, Sidney Johnny Hines, Lewis Stone, Anna Q. Nilsneur, Fred Newmeyer, Geoge Archainbaud, Sidney Olcott, John Francis Dillon and others who are directing product for First National at this time.

McEvoy With Famous Players; To Write For W. C. Fields

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION has signed J. P. McEvoy, the humorist, to write at least three orginal stories for W. C. Fields. McEvoy also will co-direct, working with the Fields' unit from start to finish.

McEvoy's humorous syndicate series, "The Potters," is read by millions throughout the country every week. His sketches in Ziegfeld's "Follies" have introduced him to the audiences in the big towns. His play, "The Potters," based on the newspaper series, had long New York and Chicago runs, and is now about to proceed to the Pacific Coast.

The first of the McEvoy comedies starring W. C. Fields will contain the pantomime material with which Fields convulsed the Follies' audiences.

Abrams Announces Expansion In United Artists Sale Department

With Increased Product Company Felt Need of Dividing Country Into Three Divisions, Each Under Own Sales Manager; Hines Is General Sales Head

BECAUSE of increased product, and the certainty of a very considerable additional increase in the next few months, Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, has announced several changes in the sales force and the sales department of the organization.

In making this announcement Mr. Abrams points out that United Artists Corporation rapidly is approaching another birthday, when the company will be seven years old, and in this connection cites the fact that is the only corporation in motion picture distribution which has maintained one continuous selling policy since its inception, or for anything like such a length of time.

United Artists' Corporation was founded on Mr. Abrams' idea that each picture should be sold separately and independently on its own merits, he believing then that was the only policy which was fair to exhibitor and producer alike.

Administration Satisfied With the Result

This policy and its administration has been more than justified with the result, Mr. Abrams states, that United Artists' Corporation, as it approaches its seventh birthday, occupies a position which commands the respect and confidence of every exhibitor, every producer, and every distributor of motion pictures.

"Because we had the right policy as a foundation, and because that policy faithfully has been adhered to and as faithfully administered," says Mr. Abrams, "United Artists' Corporation has most of the great screen stars and great producers for the screen in its ranks.

"Increased product brought with it increased problems. These, in turn, brought about the present phase of expansion. The necessity for intensive field supervision became felt. Men who had long been identified with the growth and development of our organization were called upon to help in reshaping and strengthening our sales force.

Hines Remains As General Sales Head

"E. A. Eschmann, a man of high standing in the film industry and its various branches, resigned as general manager of one of the large distributing companies and was added to our organization as assistant to the President. W. W. Hines, who long has been general sales manager, remains in that important post.

"It had become apparent that the sales business of United Artists' Corporation best and most efficiently could be handled by dividing the country into three divisions, each to be in charge of a general sales manager.

"Paul N. Lazarus, who has been with us since the corporation was organized, has been chosen as general sales manager of the southern and western division; Cresson E. Smith, long a valuable member of the selling staff, becomes general sales manager of the mid-west division, and Moxley A. Hill, well and favorably known in the industry, was selected as general sales manager of the eastern division."

To Direct "Silence"

Rupert Julian, whose reputation as a "builder of thrills" was convincingly established by his two most recent directorial efforts, "The Phantom of the Opera" and "Three Faces East," is to do another mystery melodrama. An announcement from the De Mille Studio tells of his assignment to the task of directing "Silence," the Beulah Marie Dix-Bertram Millhauser screen adaptation of Max Marcin's sensational crook play. Julian is now busy, the word says, collaborating on the selection of the cast. H. B. Warner, star of the original New York stage presentation, will be featured.

"The Skyrocket" Gets Off to Flying Start in Providence

Rhode Island Audiences Applaud; Exploitation Keeps Big Crowds in Line Despite Inclement Weather

PROVIDENCE, R. I., greeted Peggy Hopkins Joyce in "The Skyrocket" with open arms and B. F. Keith's Victory Theatre where the Associated Exhibitors' special opened Monday, Dec. 18th, reports the picture drew tremendous crowds all day despite very inclement weather.

The SRO sign was in use during the afternoon and although a very severe rainstorm prevented a continuance of capacity business during the evening shows, receipts for the day were far in excess of the daily average for this theatre.

This was the first public showing of "The Skyrocket" and the first test of the drawing power of Peggy Hopkins Joyce as a screen star. Both came through handsomely and there is little doubt that this long-awaited Marshall Neilan production will prove an even greater box-office bonanza than was anticipated by its producers and the trade.

Despite heavy rain and fog which was general all through the East last Monday, "The Skyrocket" exceeded the opening day figure attained by "The Merry Widow" at the Victory Theatre, and the management expect to equal the house record at present held by Harold Lloyd in "The Freshman." The theatre availed itself of the remarkable exploitation opportunities offered by "The Skyrocket" and as a result there was a pronounced public expectancy for the premiere.

The picture lends itself to numerous tie-ups and all the larger stores carried Peggy Hopkins Joyce windows in which her fame as the best dressed woman in the world proved a considerable advantage. Peggy Hopkins Joyce demonstrated that she is "automatic front page copy" and the large newspaper space given her Providence screen debut is no doubt responsible for the immense crowd that assembled at the theatre awaiting its opening at 10:30 A. M.

Associated Exhibitors report heavy booking on "The Skyrocket" and contracts are underway in all important cities with many theatres already signed for showings during January and February. Among these is an extended run at the St. Francis Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., starting January 24, consecutive weeks over the Alexander Frank Circuit in Iowa and the Delft Circuit in Wisconsin; Poli's Bijou Theatre, New Haven, Conn.; Piccadilly Theatre, Rochester; State Theatre, Altoona; Temple Theatre, Toledo, and an extended Broadway run commencing January 24 at the Colony Theatre, New York City.

Finishes "Black Pirate"

The last shots for Douglas Fairbanks' latest production, "The Black Pirate," have been made. The picture is now completed. There remains now only to do the editing and titling. When this work is finished the master print will be sent to the Technicolor laboratory in Boston to serve as a guide in making all release prints. The picture will not be distributed generally through United Artists Corporation until autumn.

"Irene" Complet d; Prints in Exchanges February 21

A WIRE received from the Coast announces completion of "Irene," a special production starring Colleen Moore which, according to reports, surpasses any picture made by this popular actress. "Irene" is the first of the three First National specials for the coming season to be completed, "The Viennese Medley" and "Men of Steel" still being in preparation.

In order to give exhibitors every opportunity to arrange early showings for "Irene," orders have been issued for prints to be rushed to exchanges at the earliest possible date. According to the present schedule, all branches will be supplied before the end of January. The release date is set for February 21st.

In "Sally," "So Big" and "We Moderns," Miss Moore set a record for 1925 and proved her steadily increasing drawing power at the box office; but it appears that her earlier performances will be totally eclipsed by "Irene," an adaptation of the most popular musical comedy of the last decade. The picture is more sumptuous in its scenic investiture than any of Miss Moore's earlier productions and, in the character of the shop girl who aspires to become a lady, offers an ideal role for the piquant star. Comedy and pathos are delightfully blended in the unfolding of an unusual story.

Alfred E. Green, who has been so successful in handling other pictures starring Miss Moore, directed "Irene," with June Mathis acting as editorial supervisor. There are many striking sequences in this production, including a gorgeously lavish fashion show photographed in color through a new process. The most beautiful young women that could be found in Hollywood were enrolled for the fashion show.

Numbered in the large cast seen in support of Miss Moore are Lloyd Hughes, Kate Price,

Owen Moore Signs Long Term Contract With Metro

LOUIS B. MAYER, vice-president in charge of production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, announced on the Coast early last week that he had signed a long term contract with Owen Moore. At the present time Moore is playing the role of West End Bertie in "The Black Bird," Lon Chaney's forthcoming M-G-M release.

By the terms of the contract entered into Owen Moore becomes one of the M-G-M featured players and his name is added to the list that already comprises Lew Cody, Eleanor Boardman, Aileen Pringle, Charles Ray and Pauline Starke. Mr. Mayer further announced that within a short time he would assign Moore to a big leading role for his initial appearance as an M-G-M featured contract player.

Otis Harlan and Rose Tapley Are Added to "Prince of Pilsen" Cast

Royal Tournament Scenes Already Filmed George Sidney Central Character in These Sequences Will Be Special Release by Producers Dist. Corp.

OTIS HARLAN, one of filmdom's best known character actors, has been engaged for the part of a comedy bandit in "The Prince of Pilsen," now being made at the Metropolitan Studios, for release by Producers Distributing Corporation.

Rose Tapley, formerly a reigning favorite in the old Vitagraph company in Brooklyn, has been cast in the part of the chief Lady in Waiting to Princess Bertha of Thorwold, played by Myrtle Stedman.

Film Spectacular Scenes of "Prince of Pilsen"

With more than five hundred extras in the scenes, the most spectacular sequences of "The Prince of Pilsen" were filmed this week under the direction of Paul Powell. The scenes represented the great court yard of the castle of Thorwald, and revealed the activities of a jousting tournament and the attendant festivities which immediaely precede the wedding of Princess Bertha and the pseudo Prince of Pilsen. George Sidney, of course, is the central character in these scenes, having been mistaken for the real Prince and made the center of the festivities, without realizing that it is more than simply a royal reception in honor of himself as a prominent citizen of Cincinnati.

There were knights in armor, all descriptions of soldiery in their gaudy costumes, great crowds of peasants and helmeted gladiators, forming a procession before the royal coach bearing George Sidney.

A jousting tournament was also staged and when the knights, encased from head to foot in heavy armor, charged at, and knocked each other from their horses with their levelled lances, director Paul Powell secured a number of scenes which are as stirring as anything of the sort ever seen on the screen.

Movie in Court is Test Of Mother Love For Baby

KING SOLOMON'S method of deciding which of two mothers was most devoted to a child they both claimed was adopted in modern form by Judge Vincent M. Brennan in the Circuit Court Saturday at the hearing of a writ of habeas corpus obtained by Mr. Julia Przybyla, 11570 Waltham avenue, natural mother of a three-year-old daughter Irene, in her fight to wrest the child from Mrs. Irene Goosen, 12599 Flanders avenue, foster-mother of Irene and formerly Mrs. Przybyla's sister-in-law.

Instead of threatening to dismember the child with a sword, as did King Solomon to study the emotions of the two mothers, Judge Brennan announced that he would award the child to neither Mrs. Przybyla nor Mrs. Goosen, but would commit her to an institution. At the very instant the announcement was made a movie man under Judge Brennan's direction trained his camera on the two women to record their emotional reactions on a film.

Judge Brennan said he would employ the aid of psychologists in studying the film and award the child to the claimant whose features show the greatest expression of grief. His decision will be announced Wednesday, he said.

After the hearing of testimony, which consumed the afternoon, Judge Brennan ordered the two women before him and directed court attaches to place the child, who is now living with Mrs. Goosen, between them on a chair. Behind the judge stood the motion picture operator with a camera and his lights.

"In view of the fact that the Court has heard much testimony against both parties in this action, I have decided to commit the child to an institution," announced the Judge.

As the "movie" lights were flashed on the women and the operator started grinding on his camera, Mrs. Goosen burst into tears and, bending over, clasped the child to her arms, while her 13-year-old son, Edward, who sat in the front row of spectators, also began crying. Mrs. Przybyla made no demonstration.

Asked if they had any statement to make to the court, Mrs. Przybyla said he was married and had a home, and wished the child for her own—so Irene could benefit by these advantages. Mrs. Goosen was so overcome she could make no statement.

A large crowd witnessed the experiment in the courtroom.

Irene, who was born out of wedlock to Mrs. Przybyla Feb. 10, 1922, was placed in the care of Mrs. Goosen at the age of six weeks. On Feb. 10, 1925 Mrs. Przybyla was married to her present husband.

Dec. 24 Mrs. Goosen obtained a decree of divorce from her husband, William Goosen, who is Mrs. Przybyla's brother, but retained possession of Irene. March 20, 1925, Mrs. Przybyla obtained a writ of habeas corpus but it could not be served on Mrs. Goosen.

A previous writ has been refused Oct. 24, 1924. The present action was commenced last week.

"The Devil's Circus" Is Christianson's First For M-G-M

LOUIS B. MAYER, vice-president in charge of production at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, announced that the title finally decided upon for Benjamin Christianson's, the famous Swedish director's first American production, starring Norma Shearer, is "The Devil's Circus."

"The Devil's Circus" has had two titles previous to this one. They were "The Light Eternal," and 'The Devilkin." The title, "The Devil's Circus," was finally chosen as having more box office appeal, and being more fully descriptive of the picture, a story of Scandinavian circus life, than the two former titles.

Norma Shearer is the star of the picture, and gives an admirable performance as the entirely human, little human heroine, "Mary." Charles Emmett Mack, a comparative newcomer to the real of the reels, has the leading male role, as "Jensen," a handsome young rogue who is reformed by his love for "Mary." "Tony Runs Wild"

Tony, Tom Mix's wonder horse, co-stars with Mix in "Tony Runs Wild," latest Fox Films Western production. Although he has a difficult part, Tony does it so well that he almost takes the honors away from his master. Don't Gamble Your Advertising

For the ADVERTISER'S PROTECTION the Audit Bureau of Circulation insists:

1. That a paper keep its circulation records in a clean, business-like basis.
2. That it show its net paid circulation.
3. That it classify its circulation.
4. That it show subscriptions in arrears.
5. That it show the percentage of expiring subscriptions that renew.
6. That it show what premium or other come-on offers were made to get subscriptions.

It is these searching demands that strip a publisher of all his camouflage and leave his paper for what it is worth as an advertising investment.

The only true reason a paper will not meet these tests is Reader Weakness, and a paper that is weak with its readers is a poor advertising investment.

Advertising placed in the paper which measures highest by A. B. C. standards is INVESTED ADVERTISING.

Advertising placed otherwise is GAMBLED ADVERTISING. MOVING PICTURE WORLD does not have to resort to camouflage; it is selling proven facts; it is not asking its advertisers to gamble.

February "Jimmy Grainger Month" at Fox; Sales Force Plans Big Drive in Chief's Honor

FEBRUARY is "Jimmy Grainger Month" at Fox Films. This signal honor is a tribute to the genial general sales manager by his associates in appreciation of his tremendous efforts for the Fox company since his affiliation with it last May.

During the short month, according to a scheme, details of which have just leaked out, every member of the greatly rejuvenated Fox sales staff is going to bend every muscle and strain every brain cell to make certain the accomplishment of their chief's one ambition, that is, to make the current season the most successful in the history of the Fox Film Corporation.

The production department, under the spur of General Manager Winfield R. Sheehan's personal direction, has come through with a group of releases that should lighten the sales force's task considerably.

The sponsors of the plan are confident of success. The spokesman for this group said: "When the boys in the field tell the exhibitors they are out to make a showing as a tribute to Jimmy Grainger we are confident of a response that will result in a greater gross than our chief ever expected. There is no doubt but that the exhibitors will meet our salesmen more than half way in showing their appreciation of the outstanding figure in the motion picture sales field."

Mr. Grainger knows nothing about his associates' plans to have him realize his ambition. He left for the Southland for a well earned rest a few days before it was mentioned by Fred C. Quimby, Fox short subject sales manager; J. Sichelman, assistant general sales manager; M. J. Schwartz and E. C. Grainger.

On Saturday, January 23, the details were set before the branch managers and special representatives and a number of the salesmen at specially convened gatherings at various strategic points throughout the country, and all is now in readiness for the start.

As an added spur, although it was not thought necessary, there will be a number of prizes to be presented personally by Mr. Grainger to the managers and salesmen who turn in the greatest amount of business during the twenty-eight days of "Jimmy Grainger Month."

Fox Selects Beaumont to Direct Great Newspaper Serial "Sandy"

Madge Bellamy Has Been Assigned the Role of Sandy; Production Will Have Many Prominent Persons in Cast; Work on Picture Will Start Within Ten Days

"SANDY," one of the most popular and widely-read serials ever written, which is running in over one-hundred newspapers throughout the country, will soon be produced on the screen by Fox Films with one of the greatest casts ever assembled, according to a telegram from the Fox West Coast Studio.

Harry Beaumont, who has been selected for the filming of this Elenore Meherin story, is considered one of the foremost directors in the motion picture industry.

Finding an actress who exactly fitted the role of Sandy was no easy task, since it requires a rare combination of beauty, vivacity and what Director Beaumont terms "pepful personality." After dozens of screen actresses had been carefully considered and found lacking in one or more of the essential qualities, Madge Bellamy, winsome little Fox star, was assigned to the part. She was highly elated at what she regards as the greatest opportunity of her film career and willingly had her beautiful hair bobbed in order to fit the author's description of Sandy.

Bardson Bard, a recent recruit from the vaudeville stage, will play the part of Ben Murrillo, the husband, with Leslie Fenton, one of the films' most talented young players, in the role of Douglas Keith. Fenton, who first attracted serious attention by his work in "Havoc," a Fox production, added greatly to his reputation in "Thunder Mountain," "East Lynne," and "Lazybones." Harrison Ford will play Ramon; Gloria Hope is to be Judith, with David Torrence and Lillian Leighton playing the father and mother of Sandy. Joan Standing will play the sister and Charles Farrell the role of Timmy.

Ralph Ince Plays Dramatic Lead in "Yellow Fingers"

Ralph Ince plays the leading male role in "Yellow Fingers," Fox Films version of Gene Wright's novel, in which beautiful Olive Borden is starred. As the gruff sea captain who has earned the sobriquet of "Brute" McShane, he does remarkable work.

Besides Miss Borden and Mr. Ince the cast includes Claire Adams, Nigel de Brulier, Otto Matieson, Armand Kaliz, Edward Piel, John Wallace, Charles Newton, Josephine Crowel and May Foster. Emmet Flynn directed the production.

Box-office nights should be long in Universal's filmland of "The Midnight Sun." As Laura La Plante shows, this Dimitri Buchowetzki production is blazing celluloid sunlight.

Although in chains here, Laura La Plante is free to help the exhibitor sit where the midnight sun shines—on top the world.

F. B. O. at Work on Last Three Gold Bonds of Current Season

Schnitzer to Stay in Hollywood for Several Months; To Confer with Fineman on 1926-27 Schedule; "Non-Stop Flight" Based on Big Airplane Jump

WITH three of its twelve specials at the post and ready to start in the production sweepstakes the moment the barrier is sprung, the F. B. O. Studios are winding up their current schedule and completing details for next season's line-up.

J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O. in charge of production is in Hollywood for a stay of several months to confer with General Manager B. B. Fineman and conclude negotiations for the launching of the 1926-27 schedule, the largest in the company's history.

"The Non-Stop Flight," one of the remainining Gold Bonds on the current schedule, an Emory Johnson melodrama glorifying the famous hop to Hawaii by the navy seaplanes and the subsequent loss for nine days of Commander Rogers and his intrepid crew, is in process of filming; "A Poor Girl's Romance," second of the Laura Jean Libbey stories, and "The Isle of Retribution" await the starting gong. These last two specials will be begun within a few weeks, it is anticipated.

Fred Thompson 'Lefty' Flynn, Evelyn Brent, Richard Talmadge, Tom Tyler and Bob Custer are finishing work on their individual output of pictures. Alberta Vaughn has finished the first episode of the new "Fighting Hearts" series.

The same general type of production which was featured during the past year will compose the backbone of the forthcoming product, according to Mr. Schnitzer, but more attention will be paid during the next year to the exploitable possibilities of the productions, particularly the specials. Again there will be twelve of these, each with an outstanding "show idea. All but two have already been selected, and will be announced as soon as the list is filled.

Fred Thomson will produce several pictures for 1926-27, bigger than those of last year. Evelyn Brent, 'Lefty' Flynn, Richard Talmadge, Bob Custer and Tom Tyler were also scheduled for eight productions each, and Alberta Vaughn has been added to the list in her first series of feature length starring vehicles.

"Red Dice" Completed

The last foot of celluloid on "Red Dice" starring Rod La Rocque clicked its way through the cameras at the De Mille Studio this week, and into the cutting room where the film is now in the process of editing.

"Red Dice" is the screen version of "The Iron Chalice" by Octavus Roy Cohen. The adaptation was made by Jeanie Maspherson and Douglas Z. Doty. William K. Howard directed the picture, while Miss Macpherson as well as collaborating on the adaptation, supervised the filming of the production.

IF THESE DON'T CONVINCE YOU that Fred Thomson, in "The Tough Guy," is one of F. B. O.'s best with that popular star—you're harder boiled than we are.

"Her Lucky Leap" New Wanda Wiley Comedy Picture

THE Stern Brothers, makers of two-reel comedies for Universal release, announce a new Wanda Riley comedy for this week. It is "Her Lucky Leap," and is the first Wanda Wiley comedy of the new year.

"Her Lucky Leap" was made by Edward I. Luddy, with Whitney Raymond in the chief supporting role. In this picture Miss Wiley has ample opportunity for displaying her ability as a stunt comedienne. The action of the picture includes some thrilling motorcycle riding and an automobile accident in which Miss Wiley figures in hair-breadth escapes and reckless daring.

The popular comedy star is now at work on a new series of two-reelers, "What Happened to Jane," a series which will form one of the important factors in the Stern Brothers' new policy of high class comedy releases for the coming film season.

Columbia Films Signs Lester Allen for Comedy Series

THERE has been a concerted effort on the part of motion picture producers and theatrical producers to engage in a campaign to make the world ring with laughter. The ever-increasing demand on the part of the public has brought about the signing by Columbia Pictures of Lester Allen, a clever Broadway comedian, to appear in a series of comedies they will produce.

Lester Allen has created a tremendous following by his comical antics before the footlights and he will now bring to the screen a new and jovial form of entertainment.

Mr. Allen will enter into active work on his motion picture productions as soon as he is finished with his present engagement in the Earl Carroll Vanities, and Columbia Pictures have already secured options on several Broadway farces and comedy stories by several well known authors.

Selects Permanent Titles for Two F. N. Pictures

THE title of Edwin Carewe's forthcoming picture for First National has been definitely set as "High Steppers." This is an adaptation of the story "Heirs Apparent," which recently has been referred to under the title of "Twentieth Century, Unlimited." Another title announced by First National is "Her Second Chance" instead of "The Second Chance."

"Heirs Apparent" was written by Sir Philip Gibbs and deals with the post-war period in England, particularly as represented by the younger generation that casts off all restraint in a spirit of recklessness and cynicism. Lloyd Hughes and Mary Astor have the principal roles.

Famous Players Wins "Covered Wagon" Character Suit

A $1,000,000 suit against Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, pending since the release of "The Covered Wagon," has just been won by the defendant in the federal court at Kansas City.

The suit, brought by Mrs. Virginia Bridger Hahn, daughter of Jim Bridger, famous Indian scout, charged that the picture defamed the character of her father in that it depicted him as the husband of Indian wives and as a drunkard.

Federal Judge Albert L. Reeves held that the changing standards of living made it impossible to defame one's ancestors. Things considered proper in one generation might be held as improper in another, he ruled.

Critics Acclaim "The Skyrocket" As Peggy Joyce's Triumphant Debut

Associated Exhibitors' Production Now Playing at Moss' Colony Theatre Draws Unstinted Praise from Newspaper Reviewers

THE press of New York is unanimous in hailing Peggy Hopkins Joyce's screen debut in "The Skyrocket" as a triumph of entertainment. Opening at B. S. Moss' Colony Theatre on January 24, this Associated Exhibitors' special received the praises of some of New York's hardest-boiled critics. For instance, Quinn Martin, of the New York World, says:

"The fragilely white and internationally provocative Miss Peggy Hopkins Joyce, one-time show girl and married so importantly and so often as to have engaged the envy of the whole world of femininity is being seen (and by large and eager crowds) this week in "The Skyrocket."

"The Skyrocket" is better than dozens of pictures which have passed down the road this season. It is good enough to have held this reviewer through to the end without a struggle.

"As for Miss Joyce, this young woman appears in the films a lovely person of extreme blonde coloring. I see no reason for denying the beauty which is so richly hers. In closeups she seems even more delightful to look upon.

"Miss Joyce is now, and the statement is made without fear of any contradiction whatsoever, as well equipped in screen acting as are four out of five of the oldtimers, and, furthermore, she gives promise of a fine future. Especially, I thought, did she seem gifted with the ability to perform her serious scenes with effect.

Of course, she wore her suits and her dresses with great good grace. The girl is stylish beyond words.

The New York Times says that "The Skyrocket" is "fair diversion, the interest in which is heightened by the scenes in Hollywood." "Miss Joyce makes an auspicious bow," writes Dorothy Herzog of "The Mirror." "She photographs beautifully and stands out as a well-defined personality. Indeed, Peggy Hopkins Joyce is the magnet that should pack Mr. Moss' Colony this week."

Harriette Underhill, of the Herald Tribune, has this to say: "You won't be disappointed in Peggy Hopkins Joyce nor in her first picture, "The Skyrocket." Both are exactly what one would expect, at least that is our 'reaction.' Miss Joyce wears stunning costumes and looks very pretty in many of the scenes." To which Eileen Greelman of the New York "American," adds:

"Peggy Hopkins Joyce. Those three words are enough to fill the Colony Theatre during the showing of her first picture at least."

"MEMORY LANE" brings out the best of two talented First National players—Conrad Nagel and Eleanor Boardman.

Hutchinson to Make Three More Horton Features for Associated

Productions to Be An Addition to "Triumphant Thirty"; Officials Highly Pleased with "The Nutcracker" Picture at Its New York Preview Went Over Big

SSOCIATED EXHIBITORS, INC., have arranged with S. S. Hutchinson to produce three additional pictures starring Edward Everett Horton. These will be released as an addition to the "Triumphant Thirty" and great things are expected of them by all who have seen the rare talent and comedy flare revealed by Mr. Horton in "The Nutcracker," in which he is co-starred with Mae Bush.

"The Nutcracker" was originally listed in the "Triumphant Thirty" group, but when the completed picture was recently shown to Associated officials, it was decided that it should henceforth be issued as one of a group of Edward Everett Horton features to be released by Associated Exhibitors, Inc., in addition to their already announced schedule.

Officials of the company were highly delighted with "The Nutcracker," which was directed by Lloyd Ingraham for S. S. Hutchinson and is a comedy drama of married life based upon the stage and book success of that name. It was previewed at a regular performance in an uptown Broadway theatre two weeks ago and the audience showed a distinct preference for it over the regular feature in which two of the screen's foremost players appeared. The following day negotiations were started with Mr. Hutchinson and the contract for three additional Edward Everett Horton pictures was signed with him a few days ago.

Associated Exhibitors deem themselves exceptionally fortunate in having secured three additional pictures with Mr. Horton, as after "The Nutcracker" is generally released there will undoubtedly be a considerable demand for every picture in which he plays a prominent role. There is little doubt that "The Nutcracker" will prove one of the most delightful polite comedies ever made and that it will place Mr. Horton in an enviable position as a distinctive comedy player.

Strayer Has Made Many Successful Productions

FRANK R. STRAYER, whose latest achievement is "Lure of the Wild," a Columbia Pictures Corporation production featuring the dog Lightning, was discovered by Harry Cohen, who is in charge of production for this organization. Mr. Strayer, who was formerly one of the best known assistant directors in the motion picture industry, was given his first opportunity to reveal his directorial genius when he was signed by Harry Cohen to direct "Enemy of Men."

The Messrs. Jack and Harry Cohn and Joe Brandt, the executives of Columbia, felt the need of new directors and decided that Mr. Strayer with his background of many years of experience associated with the production of pictures and as an assistant to many of the best known directors, would make good with the right opportunity.

Test Harry Langdon Comedy in Several Key Cities

HARRY LANGDON'S first starring picture for First National entitled "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," will be given test showings in key cities before the sales department decides on a definite selling plan for this production.

It is believed that Langdon, as the most rapidly rising comedian of the day, offers a brand new element in the picture field and First National officials are anxious to get a line on the public reaction through engagements in different parts of the country.

"Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," is the first full-length feature in which the comedian has ever appeared and according to all reports from the Coast, will be one of the most continuously amusing comedies ever screened. The story was prepared with the assistance of Mr. Langdon himself.

Plans are now going forward at the Associated Studios in Los Angeles, where Griffith is to make his production headquarters, for the series. Six pictures are to be made in the series, all of which will be up-to-the-minute comedy dramas by leading authors.

"Get Off the Earth" New Title of Griffith Film

"Get Off the Earth" has been selected as the final title for the picture which Raymond Griffith will make following "Fresh Paint." "Get Off the Earth" replaces the title originally selected, "The Ship That Sailed to Mars."

Kerr Signed by Fox

Robert Kerr, who recently finished direction on "A Trip to Chinatown," first of the Charles H. Hoyt comedy-dramas to reach the screen, has been signed to a three-year contract by Fox Films. His first assignment under his new contract will be a starring vehicle for Buck Jones, "30 Below Zero."

Public and Exhibitors Get Behind Picture Broadcasting

First National Announces That All of Its Pictures Will Be Put on the Air; Verdict Based on Messages Received from Radio Fans the Country Over

"RADIO-MOVIES" appear to have won a permanent place for themselves on the air. At least, First National Pictures, Inc., which launched the novel experiment recently with a broadcast of one of its productions, "Too Much Money," from Station WJZ, New York, now announces that it will put all of its pictures on the air. This decision was based, it was explained, upon the verdict of the radio fans, themselves.

A thousand or more telegrams, postcards and leters were sent in from all over the country, following the initial broadcast. They came from Michigan, Nebraska, Louisiana, Florida, Maine and points between. And the verdict was unanimous that the radio-movie afforded excellent entertainment.

Some of the messages offered suggestions aimed to improve the entertainment, but all agreed that it was a welcome innovation in radio programs and should be continued.

Equally enthusiastic has been the response of exhibitors who find in radio an effective way of interesting the public in their programs. A number of exhbitors report that their patrons are commenting favorably on the new broadcasting feature.

The time of broadcasting remains 8:30 o'clock every Thursday evening from Station WJZ, New York. "Just Suppose," starring Richard Barthelmess, was put on the air January 21; "The Reckless Lady," Sir Philip Gibbs' story, with Ben Lyon, Belle Bennett, James Kirkwood, Lois Moran and Lowell Sherman, will be the feature January 28; "Memory Lane," featuring Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagle is scheduled for February 4; "The Far Cry," featuring Blanche Sweet and Jack Mulhall, will be broadcast February 11, and the John McCormick production of "Irene," starring Colleen Moore, February 18.

Producers Dist. Corp. Arranges For De Luxe Trade Showings

Previews at Wurlitzer Hall Held for Convenience Of Exhibitors in New York Territory; Pictures Presented with Musical Setting from Cue Sheet

THE first of a series of de luxe trade showings of the Producers' Distributing Corporation releases was held on Thursday (January 28) at Wurlitzer Hall, 120 West 42nd Street, New York, beginning at 2:30 P. M. These showings are being held for the especial convenience of the exhibitors in the New York territory and as each picture will be presented with a musical setting arranged from the cue sheets issued with the production, exhibitors will be given a more comprehensive display of the attraction as it will shape up in their respective theatres.

Another feature of these screenings will be the presence of a "public" audience. George Dillon, New York sales manager for Producers Distributing Corporation, who is arranging the showings, intends to issue a limited number of invitations to persons outside of the industry, and especially to members of women's organizations, for the purpose of getting an actual public reaction on each picture. This will give exhibitors a splendid opportunity to judge the entertainment value of the production and gauge the reception it will be receive when presented in their theatres.

Two productions will be screened at the first showing next Thursday. "The Million Dollar Handicap," the Metropolitan Picture featuring Vera Reynolds, Edmund Burns and Ralph Lewis will be screened at 2:30. This will be immediately followed by the presentation of "Fifth Avenue" featuring Marguerite De La Motte and Allan Forrest. According to advance reviews, both of these picture are attractions of the highest type. "The Million Dollar Handicap" is an exciting story of the race track, adapted from W. A. Fraser's novel, "Thoroughbreds." "Fifth Avenue" is the long heralded epic of New York City's ultra fashionable thoroughfare, suggested by Arthur Stringer's Saturday Evening Post story of the same title.

This visualization of the Wisby Cinema-Regie, presented in recent issues of Moving Picture World, scarcely needs an explanation. This should be added: Each unit indicated above is asked to contribute something original and cinematic to the producton in advance. Following the selection and balancing of dramatic values the main sequences of the picture are blocked out and pre- visualized in a series of panels. This drama-blueprint permits of careful picture building and lops off an appreciable percentage of actual production time and costs.

George Ingleton Research Library Acquired by Fox for Coast Plant

In Addition to Books of All Kinds There Are Files of National and International Magazines Dating Back 40 Years; Collector in Charge of Literature

FOX FILMS West Coast Studios has just acquired the George Ingleton research library, one of the most complete private collections of rare books in America. Mr. Ingleton, who has spent twelve years assembling several thousand books, has been put in personal charge of the library and has organized what is probably the greatest research department in the motion picture industry. Besides the great number of books, obtained in every section of the world, the library includes files of national and international magazines and reference books dating back forty years.

These are supplemented by clippings from other magazines, covering every important event in modern history, postcards, color prints, drawings and photostat copies of architecture of every period since Rome.

Information is at hand dealing with peoples, customs, modes of living, habits of thought, dress, architecture, transportation, scenery and in fact every subject with which the motion picture maker needs.

One recent evidence of the value of the Fox Library appeared with the beginning of work on the screen version of "The Johnstown Flood," under the direction of Irving Cummings. From the recess of the library files were drawn original copies of all the Pittsburgh newspapers of May 31, 1889, and the following week, with all the first hand accounts of the great disaster.

The script writers found all their facts about Russians and Siberians, customs and thought habits. The wardrobe department obtained detailed descriptions, drawings and color prints of costumes. The technicians had at hand floor plans, elevations, sketches and prints of all structures varying from the peasant's hut, through the more pretentious homes of the local gentry, from the minor nobles to the palaces and castles of the grand dukes and other powerful nobles and the greatest of cathedrals and administrative buildings.

ANNOUNCEMENT of the appointment of Charles Furthman as scenario editor-in-chief of Paramount's West Coast studio was made recently by Hector Turnbull and B. P. Schulberg, associate producers.

The new scenario editor has been in motion pictures since the close of the World War in which he served as an intelligence department operative in this country and as a first lieutenant with the A. E. F. in Russia. He was with Universal three years, his last script there being "The Goose Woman." His original screen stories include "Purple Stripe," "Velvet Fingers," "Legally Dead" and others. His short stories have appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines.

Donald Crisp Signed To Direct De Mille Productions

DONALD CRISP was recently signed to a long-time contract by Cecil B. De Mille, and will direct three productions this year for release through Producers Distributing Corporation.

This announcement, coming from William Sistrom, general manager of the De Mille studio, marks the addition of one of the industry's motion picture figures gracing the De Mille roster. Crip comes to De Mille direct from his post as co-director with Douglas Fairbanks on the latter's most recent production, "The Black Pirate." Just prior to this picture he directed Fairbanks in "Don Q."

DORIS HILL

The new beauty signed by Warner Bros. Miss Hill is a cousin of Eugene O'Neill, the dramatist, and has had no professional experience.

Jones Finishes Work For Fox; Goes On Earned Rest

BUCK JONES, prominent western star, who recently completed "The Fighting Buckaroo" for Fox Films, thereby completing his season's work, has earned a vacation. Jones is undecided whether he will go to Europe, China or the South Seas—but wherever he goes he plans to rest.

Jones during the 1925-26 season made seven pictures for Fox Films, six of them westerns and the seventh, "Lazybones," a William Fox supreme attraction. In this picture Jones demonstrated that he could act straight leads as well as western roles.

The westerns made by Jones during the past season were "The Timber Wolf," with Elinor Fair; "Durand of the Bad Lands," with Marian Nixon; "The Desert's Price," with Florence Gilbert; "The Cowboy and the Countess," with Helena D'Algy; "A Man Four Square," with Florence Gilbert; "The Gentle Cyclone," with Rose Blossom, and "The Fighting Buckaroo," with Sally Long.

In the above six westerns Jones has played every conceivable role depicting the wide open spaces where men are men. His departure from westerns for a brief period to play the title role in "Lazybones" was perhaps the greatest achievement for this ace of the west.

American Films Firmly Entrenched Abroad Says Cruze

"EUROPE has some things to teach us in the production of motion pictures, but we have a great deal more to teach Europe. The making of motion pictures is a business that is changing so rapidly that Europe is having a hard time keeping up."

That is the impression of conditions in the European film industry which James Cruze brought back after a two months' tour abroad, which took him to Germany, France, England, Italy, and across the Mediterranean to Tripoli. He was accompanied by his wife, Betty Compson.

Cruze Returned From N. Y. With Stallings

Cruze returned from New York in company with Laurence Stallings, co-author of "What Price Glory," who is to act as special dramatist on "Old Ironsides," the epic of early American naval history, which Cruze is to make for Paramount. On their arrival in Hollywood they went into conference immediately with Walter Woods and Harry Carr, authors of the story of "Old Ironsides."

"European tastes in pictures change, just as tastes change in this country," said Cruze. "However, the American movie is firmly entrenched abroad. Except in rare cases, audiences seem to like American pictures better than those made in their own countries. In some ways producers have more liberty there than here. European audiences have no chronic objection to unhappy endings, and this enables European producers to produce tragedies."

Unit Production Policy Adopted by F. B. O.

J. I. SCHNITZER, vice-president in charge of production of F. B. O., will take complete charge of the F. B. O. Studios in Hollywood for the time being and will institute a reorganization based upon the unit of production, according to an announcement from Major H. C. S. Thomson, president and managing director of the company.

This move is the immediate result of the resignation of B. F. Fineman who has been, for the last two years, general manager of the F. B. O. Studios and who will supervise First National on the West Coast.

Mr. Schnitzer, who went to the Coast from New York early in December to work out details and plans for the 1926-27 releasing schedule of F. B. O., will remain indefinitely.

"The plan of unit production at our studios is the result of no hastily reached decision," said Major Thomson, in discussing the subject, "for it has been contemplated for some months that we would put it into effect at the start of production on next year's schedule. However, Mr. Fineman's resignation has precipitated an immediate organization along the lines of unit production.

"Since the reorganization of the executive staff, effective early last summer, at which time Mr. Schnitzer became vice-president in charge of production, and Colvin W. Brown became vice-president in charge of distribution, Mr. Schnitzer was able to concentrate on production, and it had been planned that he would spend considerable of his time at the studios.

"Mr. Schnitzer returned East a week ago for a short conference with me after my return from Europe, and at that time we decided that the unit plan of production would be put into effect in our studio operations as soon as it was practical to do so.

"We have always been convinced that the unit plan of production is the most efficient method of motion picture manufacture, but have operated our studio under a general manager because of the fact that up until this year our own production has been more or less limited. The percentage of F. B. O. pictures has increased to a point where we feel the adoption of a unit plan of management necessary.

"In addition to taking direct charge of the studio, Mr. Schnitzer will handle the relations of the company with independent producers making pictures for F. B. O. distribution."

READ WHAT ROXY SAYS:—

"That the Handbook should have a place in the library of every motion picture projectionist goes without saying; also in my opinion it should be in the office of every motion picture theatre manager so that he may be able to check himself up on what is right and wrong in projection practice."

They're Fiddling All Over New York

A WAVE of old fiddlers' contests is sweeping over Northern and Central New York, with dozens of picture theatres arranging for these unique contests. William Smalley of Cooperstown, operating a dozen or more theatres in the Mohawk Valley and along the southern tier, will pit the old-time fiddlers of Herkimer county against those of Montgomery county in his theatres in these two counties, while a similar contest in the theatres of Otsego and Delaware counties will determine the winners in this district. Mr. Smalley is going a bit further and not only guaranteeing expenses and a salary to the old timers, but also a vaudeville engagement to the best. "Al" Bothner, one time of Troy, now connected with the Smalley circuit, has already unearthed an 80-year-old fiddler who he claims is the equal of Mellie Dunham. The Schine brothers, with headquarters in Gloversville and with over sixty picture theatres in the state, already have an old fiddlers' contest under way starting January 31. The fiddlers from Jefferson, Lewis and St. Lawrence counties will compete at Carthage and the winners will then do their best against winners from other counties. At Harmanus-Bleecker Hall in Albany, Manager Joseph Saperstein, enlisting the aid of one of the newspapers of the city, has a contest in which more than a dozen of the best fiddlers in the Capital District have been entered. There is a possibility that the winner of the Schine circuit will be pitted against the winner of the Smalley chain.

SLOW RECOVERY

Jake Golden, manager of the Griswold in Troy, isn't recovering from his illness as speedily as his friends would wish. Mr. Golden entered a hospital at Boston shortly after Christmas and is still confined there. Employes of the theatre have sent him flowers, but would much prefer to shake his hand and welcome him back. During Mr. Golden's enforced absence the theatre is being well handled by John Campbell, assistant manager.

WANTS NEW NAME

Carl A. Phillips of Watertown, who recently purchased the Antique Theatre in that city, doesn't take kindly to the name under which the house has been run for several years and is willing to spend $50 for a new and appropriate name. He has offered that amount and now the names are coming in thick and fast. The theatre will be remodeled before it is re-opened.

ROSE BUILDS ANOTHER

Jimmy Rose, one time Pathe salesman in Albany, who started a chain of picture theatres in Troy and Rensselaer on a veritable shoestring, is succeeding to the extent that he will erect a new house in upper Rensselaer, to be known as the Cameo, this coming spring. The house will seat 600 and be within a stone's throw of the Brightspot. Associated with Mr. Rose in the enterprise will be Henry Windeknecht, the two men constituting the Rosewind chain.

GOING SOUTH

Dr. J. Victor Wilson, for three years manager of the Robbins houses in Watertown, is about to become a resident of Miami, Fla., where he will manage one of the largest picture theatres in the southern boom town. Doctor Wilson resigned from the Watertown houses several months ago and managed a theatre in Great Neck, L. I., for a time.

PAGE CURWOOD

Wearing a big raccoon coat and looking like a denizen of the far north, Bob Landry of Ogdensburg was along Film Row during the past week, visiting the exchanges and incidentally booking pictures which will be featured during his coming big anniversary week.

THE AFTERMATH

Among well known exhibitors in town during the past week were Bill Smalley of Cooperstown and Bob Pierce of Ilion. While Mr. Pierce now runs Sunday shows, he admits that it has been rather tough sledding for the church members are still a bit sore over being defeated in the taxpayers' election.

CARRYING ON

Tom Thornton of the Orpheum in Saugerties since his father's death, has stepped into the breach and is handling the house like an old-timer, leaving the management of the automobile agency to his younger brother, Gene.

SALESMEN, PLEASE NOTE

If anyone in New York City wants to see Julius Berinstein of the Colonial and Hudson Theatres in Albany, all that is necessary for that person to do is to hang around the Grand Central terminal, for Mr. Berinstein always attends the big fistic battles in the metropolis. He was down to last week's affair.

Precautions

Jake Rosenthal, owner of the Rose in Troy, certainly doesn't intend to take any risks if he can help it. Mr. Rosenthal is using a vaudeville act each Friday and Saturday in connection with his pictures. One of the actors announced a little something special in that he would stand on his head on the cornice running along the top of the theatre.

Jake thought that would be a good advertisement but on second thought he decided that he had better have the actor sign papers to the effect that the theatre would not be liable in case of accident. Jake and the actor stood across the street looking at the top of the theatre where the act was to take place. Mr. Rosenthal's eyes chanced to fall on the glass marquee.

"Who is to pay for the marquee in case you fall off the top of the building?" inquired Jake.

"Don't look to me for the money," replied the actor, "for if I ever fall from the top of the building, I'll be in no shape to worry about it."

A FIGHTER

Harry Lux of the Alhambra in Utica was in town last week in connection with a matter which was up before the Court of Appeals. Mr. Lux doesn't hit the local Film Row very often, as he is generally too busy in the winter and his camp calls him during the summer. Mr. Lux is a fighter and has carried his legal action from court to court until it is now before the highest tribunal in the state.

A RARE VISITOR

Well, Larry Tifft of Berlin was in town last week and he didn't bring his snowshoes with him, either. He did quite a bit of booking and the chances are that Albany won't see him much before next June again.

CONDOLENCES

The sympathy of the many friends of Fred Elliott, veteran exhibitor of Albany and owner of the Clinton Square Theatre, is extended through these columns over the death of a daughter, Dorothy, 19 years of age, which occurred a week or so ago, following an illness of some duration. Among those from out-of-town attending the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Charles of Wilkes-Barre. Mr. Charles was formerly connected with various exchanges in Albany.

IT WORKED ONCE

Bill Benton of Saratoga now has a considerable chain of houses and, like the Schine boys, is much sought after by the film exchange salesmen, as well as managers. When Mr. Benton came down to his theatre the other morning, he noticed from afar off a group camping in front of the house. Smiling quietly to himself, Mr. Benton entered the rear of his theatre and was able to accomplish quite a bit of work before the ruse was discovered. But he won't get away with it again.

A NICE BOOST

Manager Arthur M. Bowler and Smalley's Cameo Theatre in St. Johnsville, N. Y., got a nice boost recently when the St. Johnsville Enterprise and News remarked that the Cameo is "one of the things we should be thankful for." The editorial, signed by Bill Slocum, also pointed out that St. Johnsville folks are seeing first releases almost at the same time that they are playing Broadway, and at moderate prices. "Three Faces East" was the current attraction.

A CLEAN BILL

Maybe C. H. Buckley of Albany and John Garry, manager of Mr. Buckley's house, the Empire in Glens Falls, weren't a tickled pair last week when James L. Gurnon, director of the State Bureau of Inspection, after looking over the theatre remarked: "My wife is a good housekeeper, but our parlor is no better kept than the Empire." Mr. Gurnon stated that the sprinkler system of the theatre is the most complete of any in New York State. He said many nice things about the theatre.

A TALENTED FAMILY

Harry Hellman of the Royal in Albany played the part of host a week or so ago to his daughter and his talented son-in-law, Jack Little, the well known song writer. Mr. and Mrs. Little stopped over in Albany on their way to the Middle West, where Mr. Little has a vaudeville engagement of many weeks.

CONGRATS

Elmer Griffin, exhibitor in Troy, who has been confined to the hospital in that city, is back on the job.

Kenmore, N. Y., House Opens Brilliantly

THERE was a brilliant gathering of town officials, stockholders, Buffalo city officials, invited guests and friends of Mitchell Fitzer at the private formal opening of the new Kenmore Theatre in Kenmore, N. Y., January 29, when the beautiful 2,000-seat picture theatre was enthusiastically praised by those assembled. Mr. Fitzer, who also operates the Strand in Auburn and the Rivoli, Swan and Savoy in Syracuse, has leased the house for a long period. The theatre has a $50,000 organ and is modernly and completely equipped. George Albert Bouchard has been engaged as organist. Mr. Fitzer will personally manage the house.

A BATAVIA SALE

The Dellinger theatre property in Batavia has been sold for approximately $65,000. While the buyer's name has been withheld, it is understood that the house went to Wolf and David Krieger of Batavia and a capitalist in Medina. This trio desires the property for theatre purposes. A court order has been applied for to allow the sale to go through and at the same time to make it valid under the will of the late John Dellinger, which provided that William F. Haitz, present manager of the property, should have the life use of it in case of his wife's death. Mrs. Haitz died some time ago.

PLANS READY

Bacon & Lurkey, architects, have completed plans for the new picture theatre that Hager, Askey, Forrest, Inc., will build at Main street and West Northrup place, Buffalo. Plans call for an 1,800-seat house in Spanish architecture to cost about $300,000. There will be a stage 30 by 80 feet and an organ to cost $50,000.

ELECTED DIRECTORS

FORM STOCK COMPANY

Fitzer-Syracuse, Inc., a stock company, has been formed and papers filed with County Clerk Harry D. Banham in Auburn, N. Y. Benjamin Fitzer is president. The papers set forth that the company will purchase, lease and manage theatres and opera houses, and deal in film and picture supplies. The directors are: Mr. Fitzer, Charles D. Blessing and Joseph N. Schwartzwalder. The company operates the Strand Theatre in Auburn, N. Y.

STILL AT IT

Al Beckerich, manager of Loew's State, Buffalo, put over some fine publicity for "Mike," his current attraction, when he tied up with the Evening Times in a contest to find a Buffalo girl who resembled Sally O'Neill.

Heroism

THE recent fire in the Strand Theatre at Woonsocket, R. I., made heroes of the house employes. Thomas Gilbert groped his way through smoke and flames to the front row of seats where a boy had fainted. With the lad Gilbert made his way to a window facing Main street. Stopping only long enough to inhale the fresh air, he continued to the exit and out of the theatre. Just as he reached safety Gilbert collapsed.

William Dunn, projectionist, continued to run the machine while the audience rushed for the exits and until the pictures on the screen were totally obscured by the dense smoke. When the house nearly was empty Dunn left the booth and grabbed two children, one of whom was caught between seats. Just as Dunn started down the stairs he turned one of his ankles and fell. The boys scrambled to their feet and rushed on. Dunn got up with difficulty and managed to make his way out.

Fred Puffer, pianist, played until the last person had left the roaring furnace. His piano is junk now, but he had the satisfaction of knowing that he had extracted from it its last harmonious note.

Albert Hebert, another employe of the Strand, was overcome with smoke while endeavoring to direct children to safety from the balcony. He was saved by firemen.

Peter Clark, chief projectionist, helped in the removal of children and also was one of the last to leave the burning theatre.

Canadian Managers Win Bonuses

THE Famous Players Canadian Corp., Ltd., Toronto, recently concluded a three months' managers' bonus competition in which a majority of the houses were entered, three classifications according to a quota system being arranged.

In the highest division, the winner of the $400 first prize was James Lynch, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Regina, Sask. The next in order were Harry Dahn, manager of the Capitol, Montreal, and Manager J. M. Robertson, Dominion Theatre, Victoria, B. C. In the second group, the winner, A. P. Drohan, Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ont., took down a $300 cash prize. Other winners were Frank Miley, Daylight Theatre, Saskatoon, Sask.; E. Christensen, Capitol Theatre, Brandon, Man.; Leon Osler, Regent Theatre, Oshawa, Ontario; T. R. Tubman, Algoma Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Ont. In Class 3 the winner was C. S. Ferguson, manager of the Dominion Theatre, Nanaimo, B. C., whose prize was $250. Others were E. Landsborough, Regent Theatre, Galt, Ont.; J. S. Smart, Royal Theatre, Port Hope, Ontario; J. P. Pitner, Starland Theatre, Nelson, B. C.

NEW MANAGEMENT

The Algoma Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, is under the management now of W. P. McGeachie, who for some years was manager of the Capitol Theatre at Welland, Ontario. Ray Tubman, formerly manager of the Algoma, is now in charge of the Capitol Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario.

New Conn. Theatre

A new $300,000 theatre, the Capitol, the stock of which was sold to the movie-going public as well as large investors, was opened in Willimantic, Conn., last week, with a special program of vaudeville and pictures. The Capitol is one of the most beautiful theatres in New England. It seats 1,200, with 800 seats in the orchestra and 400 in the balcony. Its stage is unusually large, being 80 feet wide and 36 feet deep. Manager George A. Bartlett announced that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and United Artists pictures would be shown, besides vaudeville three days a week.

A Bit of Luck

The biggest surprise in his career as an exhibitor came to Leon C. Bolduc of the Bijou Theatre, Conway, N. H., when he presented the motion picture, "Abraham Lincoln," at Lovell, Me.

For in the audience was W. W. Durgin, aged 86, of North Lovell, Me., the only living pall-bearer and bodyguard of Abraham Lincoln.

Fiddlers the Rage in Lynn, Mass.

HATS off again this week to "Al" Newhall, managing director of the Mark-Strand Theatre in Lynn, Mass. Al had as his concert feature all last week no less a distinguished personage than the champion fiddler of New England—so acclaimed in a contest conducted at Boston. He is Johnny Franklin and what gave Al Newhall an even better break was the fact that Franklin is a resident of Lynn. Luck? No, sirree. Al's showmanship, nothing else but and we don't mean perhaps or maybe. The old-time fiddler was a riot and aside from his appearance being a success for Al, he got, and of course so did the Strand, reams of publicity not only in the local newspapers, but in the Boston sheets as well. This week the fiddler is at Abe Goodside's Capitol Theatre in Springfield. Then he will go to Hartford for a week. This date will be followed by an appearance in Boston and then Worcester.

BAD LUCK

While other exhibitors are finding it a simple matter to obtain old-time fiddlers for contests, E. L. Knight, manager of the Strand Theatre in Westfield, Mass., was out of luck. He announced such a contest but no one in Westfield could be found to enter it. When Manager Knight attempted to get some fiddlers from out-of-town it was too late and he had to call off the contest. Amateurs are easy to get, says Manager Knight, but old-time fiddlers, "phew, what a job it is to try to corral them."

Inexpert Advice

Does an exhibitor know anything about the cabbage industry?

Adolph Eisner, former president of the M. P. T. O., Kansas City, and manager of the Circle Theatre, believes not, but he couldn't convince a circuit court judge of that fact this week. Mr. Eisner was summoned for jury service. The case involved a delayed carlot shipment of cabbage. A dozen or more farmers were discharged from jury service, but they kept Adolph.

And Claudia, the good wife, worked harder than ever as first assistant manager.

Kansas City's Newman Changes Policy

THE Newman Theatre, Kansas City Paramount house, will start a change of policy begining January 30. Instead of showing a new picture on Sunday the change will be on Saturday. It is to be made largely to accommodate the John Murray Anderson Revues, musical and dance acts, produced in New York and first featured at the Rivoli there before being sent westward.

The Garden Theatre, Kansas City, formerly a vaudeville house, began operation under new management this week. A. L. Greene, formerly of Goodland, Kas., and C. F. Case of Kansas City leased the theatre from the Davidson estate for the showing of first-run pictures. Only the highest type of pictures will be shown, according to Mr. Greene, and one of the city's most popular orchestras eventually will be a feature.

BOXING PROFITABLE

Fred Sears of the Empress Theatre, Kansas City, found the stunt of staging three boxing bouts at his theatre Firday night to be a profitable venture, obtaining publicity gratis on one bout as a proverbial "family quarrel." Thus far this season Mr. Sears has found that wrestling bouts as an added attraction draw big, but boxing is a new venture.

PALMER BOOKED

Archer Palmer and his Revellers, Chicago orchestra, have been booked at the Isis Theatre, Kansas City suburban house, according to Jack Roth, manager.

ULRICH KIDNAPPED

After kidnapping H. E. Ulrich, manager of the Midland Theatre, Hutchinson, Kas., and Mrs. Ulrich, two youthful bandits forced them to disclose the combination of the safe Sunday night in the theatre, escaping with about $2,000.

NEW UNIVERSAL HOUSE

A deal between Universal and J. W. Cotter of the Fourth Street Theatre, Moberly, Mo., has been completed whereby Universal purchases the house, according to Charles Sears, in charge of Universal theatres in the Kansas City territory. Lee Jones will manage the house temporarily. The purchase price was not named.

A CLEAN-UP

Hugh Gardner, manager of the Orpheum and Fotosho Theatres, Neosho, Mo., not only induced the mayor of his town to declare a "Thank You" week in conjunction with the showing of the Fox picture by that name, but succeeded in getting all ministers of the town to write editorials on the subject. It was a great week, financially and otherwise.

VISITORS

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City territory this week were: Hugh Gardner, Orpheum and Fotosho Theatres, Neosho, Mo.; Laurence Brenninger, operating a Topeka, Kas., chain of theatres; Ed Peskay, Sun Amusement Company, St. Joseph, Mo.; Ensley Barbour, Orpheum, Springfield, Mo.; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.; Edward Wilhoit, Jefferson, Springfield, Mo.; M. W. Hubble, Hubble Theatre, Trenton, Mo.; Myer Brothers, Slater, Mo.; Mrs. H. Winkler, Mainstreet Theatre, Lexington, Mo.; William Sears, Lyric, Boonville, Mo.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee Theatre, Lawrence, Kas.

REX REOPENED

The Rex Theatre, Maysville, Mo., has been re-opened by J. C. Allison, veteran showman, it has been announced.

Altoona Exhibitor Wins His Spring Hat

A NEW TWIST

Charleston contests are proving a big money-getter as added attractions in picture theatres, and most theatres hold them for a week's duration. However, George Sallows, manager of the Strand Theatre, Morgantown, W. Va., is working a little differently, with excellent results. George is conducting his contest in somewhat of a serial nature. Every Tuesday for four weeks he stages his contest, and on the final Tuesday the prizes are awarded. Working out great, and a crackerjack way to boost business on a poor night.

George Hall will reopen his Lyric Theatre, Monogh, W. Va., about February 1 and will have the house in operations three nights a week for the present. The Lyric has been closed for two years on account of poor conditions in the town, owing to the miners' strike.

SOON TO OPEN

He is the son of Charles Holt, owner of the Star Theatre in Richwood, which was destroyed by fire four years ago and never rebuilt.

Jinx Pursuing Ohio Theatre Owner

MANAGER JOHN SCHWALM, big chief around the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, is wondering whether he is being pursued by a miniature jinx. During a recent matinee his house was in darkness for thirty minutes owing to mechanical trouble at the city power plant. Candles were lighted to keep the audience quiet. Almost the next day he had a slight fire at his home. "It's all a part of the game," is Schwalm's view, "and as long as it's nothing worse, I'm satisfied."

Novel Seattle Tie-up Most Successful

UNIQUE in Seattle's show annals is the presentation of a dramatic offering on the legitimate stage and a motion picture of the same play during the same week. This was deliberately worked out. Manager W. B. McCurdy of the President Theatre, playing Henry Duffy stock attractions, brought Norman Hackett to Seattle for a two weeks' engagement of "Thank You." Manager Lloyd Dearth of Pantages secured a print of the film. Together they worked out a splendid campaign of "courtesy." Tremendous publicity resulted in capacity business at both houses.

SHORT FEATURE MAGAZINE

A MAGAZINE WITHIN A MAGAZINE, DEVOTED EXCLUSIVELY TO THE LITTLE PICTURES WITH THE BIG PUNCH

Edited By Charles Edward Hastings

Roy Tillson, of the Fuller, Kalamazoo, Wins First Week's Exploitation Prize

Michigan Showman "Spread Himself" on the Lupino Lane-Educational Comedy, "The Fighting Dude"—Kennebeck, of Omaha, Takes Second Prize

ROY TILLSON, Manager of the Fuller Theatre, Kalamazoo, Michigan, won first prize, $100.00, for the best entry for the first week in the Laugh Month exploitation contest.

Mr. Tillson's entry was the most comprehensive campaign ever displayed on a two-reel comedy.

Making the Educational Pictures release, "The Fighting Dude," a Lupino Lane Comedy, the center of his Laugh Month advertising for the first week of the month, Mr. Tillson backed up a great lobby display with newspaper advertising, newspaper publicity, street ballyhoo, special posters, half sheet posters on the fronts of street cars, trailers and slides and practically every other form of advertising available to this live wire exhibitor.

The second prize for the week, $50,00, was awarded to F. V. Kennebeck, North Star Theatre, Omaha, Nebraska, a second run house, for a comprehensive display arranged Uto run throughout the month and which, during this week, was tied up to exploit the Felix the Cat cartoon, "Felix Trifles With Time;" Pathe's Our Gang Comedy, "Dog Days;" an Aesop Fable, "Noah Had Trouble," and the Fox Imperial Comedy, "Cloudy Romance."

The Omaha newspapers were enlisted in support of the Laugh Month campaign by Mr. Kennebeck and the Laugh Month idea was carried through all the programs as well as through all advertising and publicity throughout the week.

The $25.00 third prize went to J. A. Murphy and Lou Williams of the Family Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., a neighborhood house with a daily change of program. It was Lou Williams who won the cup recently awarded by "The Exhibitor," the Philadelphia regional trade publication, for "the best featurette exploitation campaign."

A large cut-out of a laughing face with red cheese cloth over the mouth was the center of an attractive lobby display at the Family Theatre. Behind this large head was a loud speaker connected by an automatic appliance to a phonograph which was kept continuously playing a laughing record.

As a lobby ballyhoo a colored mammy weighing 300 pounds defied all comers to make her laugh. A placard on her back bore the words: "January is Laugh Month. Sober Sal gives one dollar to anyone who can make her laugh. Sober Sal is the only one who won't laugh during Laugh Month."

Sam Carlton, manager of the Strand Theatre, Frankfort, Indiana, took fourth prize, $12.50, the principal item of his campaign for the week being a large newspaper display advertisement 3 columns by 11 inches in the form of a proclamation to the citizens of Frankfort, inviting them to begin the year with a month of laughter. Comedies released by F. B. O., Universal and Educational were shown during Laugh Month by Mr. Carlton.

The short feature department of Moving Picture World, detailing the news and reviews of the little pictures with the big punch, will be continued in our "Short Feature Magazine," which begins with this issue.

ROY TILLSON
Winner of the first prize in first week of Exploitation Contests in conjunction with the "Laugh Month" campaign.

Fifth prize, $10.00, went to Guy Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Va., for a ballyhoo in connection with the two-reel Century Comedy "Queen of Aces."

Sixth prize, $5.00, was awarded to H. A. Giles, Royal Theatre, Garrett, Indiana. Mr. Giles' mail for the month of January went out in envelopes bearing a large type display calling attention to Laugh Month.

As to the results at the box- office, Mr. Tillson and Mr. Kennebeck, winners respectively of the first and second prizes, can testify.

"Box-office pepped up at least 25 per cent during Laugh Month campaign," is the report wired by Mr. Tillson, while Mr. Kennebeck closes his description of his campaign with:

"We have found that the business during this period has shown a good increase. * * * Yours till another Laugh Month."

Reviews of Little Pictures with a Big Punch

"A Bankrupt Honeymoon"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

BUILT around a novel and genuinely clever comedy idea, this Imperial Comedy proves unusually entertaining. Harold Goodwin appears as a young spendthrift who is informed just after his wedding that he is bankrupt. He already owes a terrible taxi-bill as he has kept the machine under hire for twenty-four hours. Buying sandwiches and coffee with his last quarter, the chauffeur forces him to vacate the rear seat for a cash customer who eats the sandwiches. Harold charges him a dollar for them and this gives him the idea of establishing an "Eat-as-you-ride" bus line which gets all the business. The father-in-law, who owns the old line, buys him out for $50,000. The combination bus-restaurant-automat gives good opportunities for gags and slapstick and for good measure there is a wild ride when the chauffeur is hit on the head and the bus runs away down hills and through traffic. A thoroughly amusing two-reeler that is full of laughs.—C. S. Sewell.

"For Sadie's Sake"

(Educational-Comedy-Two Reels)

COLLECTION of barnyard animals headed by a donkey are used in the earlier scenes of this Jimmie Adams Comedy in which he appears as a rube who has been commissioned to provide the animals for a city show in which his sweetheart, played by Molly Malone, is the star. The mule's propensity for kicking everything to pieces has been utilized in some amusing situations and Jimmie has an awful time with the traffic rules in getting his menagarie to the theatre, as they break away and create considerable havoc. Finally he gets in dutch with the manager and is chased on the stage in various disguises, as the king and even as a cow. These antics come very near breaking up the show but set the audience in the picture in an uproar and will probably amuse the majority of patrons. Finally Jimmie and Molly decide to go back to the farm. There is plenty of action, a real idea that is adhered to consistently and both situations and rough and tumble stuff that is funny. —C. S. Sewell.

"Marvels of Motion"

(Red Seal—Novelty—One Reel)

ISSUE "I" of this series, shows the movements of a horse in motion, a champion making a record broad jump, a number of spills at a steeplechase hurdle and other subjects. By means of Max Fleischer-Novagraph process these are all analyzed and presented in normal, slow, suspended and reverse motion, resulting in a number of novel and amusing effects. Especially amusing is the normal and reverse motion scenes attributing the "Charleston" to ordinary barnyard chickens.—C. S. Sewell.

"Funymooners"

(Pathe-Comedy-Two Reels)

MACK SENNETT'S newest comedy in the series featuring Ralph Graves, deals with his efforts to elope with Thelma Parr again her parents' wishes. Ralph disguises as a teacher to take her off to a boarding school and there is a new and amusing gag where he gradually discards his disguise while walking along the street. Marvin Lobach as an insurance agent who fastens himself on to the young couple succeeds in muddling things up generally, finally insisting on taking them to a hotel and sharing a room with his wife. Ralph gets around this embarrassing situation by getting the insurance man in his bed to talk business with him. The girl's father appears the next morning and Ralph is tickled when he insists that they get married, but the pest almost queers matters by phoning to the justice of the peace that his house is on fire and his wife murdered. There are a number of laughable situations and a witty lot of subtitles. It will provide good fund for the majority of patrons.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Strenuous Life"

(Pathe-Sportlight-One Reel)

GRANTLAND RICE in this issue of Sportlights shows how strenuous work enters into various lines of sport and entertainment. Among these are the professional strong man who bends iron bars around his neck, the arduous training and work of the gymnast, the training of the ballet dancer, while boxing, soccer and the popular Charleston dancing are all strenuous. An interesting issue of this series.—C. S. Sewell.

"Hair Cartoon"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—One Reel)

IN Issue "2" of the new series of Animated Hair Cartoons, Marcus of the New York Times continues his clever changing of character by moving about or adding bits of hair. These changes result in likenesses of Sessue Hayakawa, Pauline Frederick, Theodore Roberts, Anita Stewart and Pola Negri, the last one being especially good. In most of the instances portraits of men are changed to those of women and vice versa.—C. S. Sewell.

DMUND COBB is the featured player in this Universal Mustang Western which deals with the attempt of a chap to keep from his blind mother the fact that his father left a trail of debt on the ranch when he died. Edmund saves the life of Sylvia, an Eastern girl and they become fast friends. Clegg, who holds the notes spills the beans to Edmund's mother and uses his henchman to keep Edmund from winning the cross-country race, he wins however and when he goes to pay off the debt discovers that Clegg has forged the notes. Edmund wins Sylvia's hand. An average western with the usual quantity of hard-riding and fighting.—C. S. Sewell.

"Helpful Al"

(Universal-Comedy-Two Reels)

THIS Century Comedy features Al Alt, who with his pal are shown as two well-dressed social climbers. After various mishaps with the flivver they find a kidnapped baby in the car. They have a time getting the right kind of clothes for her and finding out what she will eat. In the meantime the baby walks out on a plank hanging over a cliff and then is carried aloft by a bunch of toy balloons finally falling into the auto of her father. Al and his friend collect the big reward but the winds blow their money away. There are several amusing gags, and considerable slapstick of a familiar type.—C. S. Sewell.

"Pathe Review No. 6"

(Pathe Magazine-One Reel)

ANOTHER chapter of "Plundering the Sea," the camera record of the Beebe expedition to Equatorial waters is shown in this issue. The subjects include an enormous fish somewhat resembling a shark, weighing a ton, also views of a colony of frigate birds on Gallipagos Island. The male birds attract their mates by inflating a wind bag on their breasts until it resembles a toy balloon. Other features include a Korean marriage with its quaint ceremony and views in Pathecolor along the River Elbe and the City of Dresden, Germany.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Windjammers"

(Pathe-Cartoon-One Reel)

PAUL TERRY'S offering this time shows the familiar cat and mouse with a huge bellows which they use effectively. The mouse goes to the bottom of a lake and blows the fish into the cat's hands. Then they have an argument with a cop and finaly drive the old farmer and a horde of rats out of a house by blowing the smoke back down the chimney. Up to the standard of this series both from the standpoint of clever imagination and humor.—C. S. Sewell.

Paul Terry, the Artist, Gives Talk On How Cartoons Are Made

PAUL TERRY, cartoonist of "Aesop's Film Fables," made his first personal appearance since his entry into the film field, Saturday evening, January 23rd, to help Sydney Cohen and Felix Feist, well known film men, present a "Laugh Month" movie program at the famous Metropolitan Club on West 57th Street, New York City, upon the occasion of a special dinner, entertainment and dance.

As vice president of the Metropolis Club, Sydney Cohen is very active in the entertainment activities, as is befitting this well known New York City exhibitor, nationally known as former president, and now Chairman of the Board of Directors, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Cohen has staged several movie nights at the Club but he wanted something out of the ordinary for "Laugh Month" movie night. Being a short subject enthusiast, he sought the aid of Paul Terry in making up his program.

Short subjects in general were paid a marked tribute by Mr. Cohen in his remarks on Saturday evening. He explained to the audience that his fellow exhibitors and he do not depend entirely upon so-called features for their programs, saying in part:

"There are many meritorious short subjects which are features in their appeal. We have short comedies, news reels and novelties like 'Aesop's Fables' and 'Topics' which we are showing here tonight. The shorts are very entertaining and very popular. We in the motion picture business are celebrating 'Laugh Month' and for our program this evening we have a comedy program with a personal appearance of a different kind of star—the creator of 'Aesop's Film Fables' cartoon movies, Paul Terry, making his first personal appearance."

Before the audience of about eight hundred members of the Metropolis City and County Club and their friends, Terry explained all the intricacies of making cartoon movies move. After a detailed description of the progressive stages of the work, the cartoonist drew Henry Cat in a sequence of poses. Then, by a clever manipulation of the sheets of drawings, he made Henry do a Charleston that took the house by storm.

Two pre-release subjects of "Aesop's Film Fables," embodying the drawings previously explained by Terry, were shown.

REVIEWS OF LITTLE PICTURES WITH THE BIG PUNCH

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

UNIVERSAL'S newest Mustang Brand western in the series featuring Josie Sedgwick follows one of the familiar formulas of this type, with an Eastern girl who owns a ranch falling in love with a polished villain who turns out to be a cattle rustler. Certain changes have been made to make Miss Sedgwick the centre of the interest and romance. She appears as the "foreman" of the ranch and, as in the past, proves to be as courageous and as fine a "horseman" as any of the male Western stars. There is even one snappy scene in which she subdues a bucking horse that no one else has been able to ride. Finally she unmasks the rustler but succumbs to the proposal of one of the boys who has fallen in love with her. A good average western which is made more than unusually entertaining by Miss Sedgwick's appearance in the role of the foreman.—C. S. Sewell.

"Your Husband's Past"

(Pathe-Comedy-Two Reels)

WHEN a reformed crook marries the governor's daughter, a detective recognizes him and secures proofs which the crook's pal steals. The truth finally comes out but the girl sticks by him anyway. This furnished the idea behind this Hal Roach comedy in which Tyler Brooke appears as the reformed one, George Cooper as his pal and Vivian Oakland as the girl. There are a number of amusing complications, most of the laughs being furnished by George Cooper as the pal who continues to lapse into his old ways and has to be refrained from taking everything in sight. The boob detectives are the butt of a lot of the comedy. Especially funny is a scene where Cooper razzes them when a diamond studded collar is stolen from a dog and he says that is about their speed.—C. S. Sewell.

"Be Careful Dearie"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

Joe Moore, brother of Owen, Matt and Tom, has the leading role in this amusing Cameo Comedy, appearing in the role of a henpecked husband whose wife demands that he get a raise. The cook quits and comes to Joe's office for her wages and his bachelor boss mistakes her for Joe's wife, gives him the raise and invites himself to lunch. Joe's efforts to keep up the deception not only angers his wife but "starts something" with the cook's sweetheart and there are a number of laughable complications before all is straightened out. The boss at last learns the truth but forgives Joe. This reel has good snap and humor and is one of the best of the recent Cameos.—C. S. Sewell.

"Reelview"

(Red Seal—Magazine—One Reel)

A WIDE variety of subjects are covered by Issue "B" of the new Urban-Kineto Reelview. First comes studies of animals in a zoo, including a monkey, hyena, leopard, Rocky Mountain goat, wart hog, cheeta and brown bear with family. A section shows the by-ways of Egypt, crude methods of irrigation, camel power, boats on the Nile, hired mourners at a funeral, mimic fighters on a desert, and dancing women. The final section contrasts the modern girl with her predecessor, showing views of girls dancing, swimming, etc. An interesting number.—C. S. Sewell.

Pathe Review No. 4

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

THIS presents three interesting subjects, "Workers Under the Earth," a microscopic study of the ant; "The Harvest Fleet," showing old and new methods of harvesting grain in the West, and Pathecolor views of Rutgers College. Well up to the standard. —Sumner Smith.

"Pathe Review No. 5"

(Pathe Magazine-One Reel)

INCLUDED in this issue of Pathe Review is a section devoted to the sport of archery showing various types of bows, feathered tails and arrow heads, also an expert showing how to hold the bow and making a perfect bull's eye. Another section shows pictures in color taken with the time-lapse camera, of American wildflowers including the aster and blazing star. F. H. Tolhurst contributes a section dealing with the hatching of the mosquito illustrated with miscroscopic views. A very instrutive and entertaining issue.—C. S. Sewell.

"Searchlight"

(Red Seal—Magazine—One Reel)

A SUBJECT that while not new is always intensely interesting opens Issue "B" of the Urban-Kineto Searchlight experiments with liquid air which is produced at 232 degrees below the freezing point of water. It has the effect of making objects such as a plum and a live eel so hard and brittle that they can be broken with a hammer. One of the marvels of nature is shown in the fact that an eel that has been frozen when thawed out is still alive.—C. S. Sewell.

"Dolly Gray"

(Red Seal—Song Car-Tune—One Reel)

ONE of the very best of this series of Ko-Ko Song Car-Tunes is "Dolly Gray." There is good snap to this war song of years ago and the handling of the chorus is a pippin. The soldier boy is shown doing various stunts, going to the front, fighting the enemy, shooting away the words, racing back to the rear, etc., all of this is handled in an exceptionally amusing and clever manner that is sure to get the laughs. Even if your patrons do not remember the song they will roar at the way the chorus is handled. Good for any audience.—C. S. Sewell.

Fox-O. Henry Two-Reeler Wins Review in Liberty Magazine

TO Fox Films goves the distinction of receiving the first review ever published in Liberty Magazine of a two-reel comedy.

The picture is "Cupid a la Carte," one of the O. Henry series released for National Laugh Month showing, and the reviewer is Quinn Martin, film critic of The New York World, who conducts a weekly page of screen reviews in Liberty Magazine. Mr. Martin devotes a column of praise to the comedy in the issue of January 23.

"The first motion picture company in the world," observes the reviewer, "to take seriously that much-abused line from Hamlet about brevity being the soul of wit is the firm belonging to William Fox and called the Wiliam Fox Film Corporation. As proof of his willingness to give Shakespeare a trial, Mr. Fox has begun the screening of a series of eight O. Henry stories, each to be of two reels' length and none of them running a second over thirty minutes. The first has come through, and in its presentation in the Fox private projection room in New York, it strikes me as being one of the most delightful novelties of the year."

Attention is called by the Fox publicity department to the fact that "Cupid a la Carte" is in reality the fourth of the O. Henry series. The first O. Henry comedy was "Shoes," and it was released September 6. Next came "Transients in Arcadia," on October 18 and "Failure" followed on November 29.

"'Cupid a la Carte,'" continued Mr. Martin, "is simple narrative spinning with the plot always running at even pace with itself in the running picture and with the characteristic O. Henry kick at the final scene. By its very simplicity and its strict adherence almost to the letter) with the original story it becomes a little thing of individuality and charm, and I should prefer seeing this series of bright, comic and human storiettes in the cinema than a like number of full-length productions by the best and most lavish of the screen makers. It is a distinct departure from the common run of the movies and so it is to be hoped that patrons everywhere will take advantage of the opportunity to view it as soon as it is placed upon the silver sheets over the land.

"Naturally it would be an unkind move for anyone to retell in advance the method employed in bringing about the 'O. Henry finish' in this story about Mame and her boarding house and all her gentlemen friends on the railroad line to whom she so handsomely and efficiently catered. But it may be remarked in passing that the author's fine flair for slapping a living, breathing caracterization into a story in a half-dozen bare lines of type has been lent to the direction of the film version, and so Jeffrey Peters, the comical railroad officer whose sole aim in life lay in eating, has been drawn truly, even to the expression which wreathes his face and the fleeting mannerisms with which his creator so painstakingly endowed him.

"For my part I am gong to watch for these short plays and see them whenever it is possible.

"Of course, what I mean to say is that you should watch for them, too."

The role of Mame in "Cupid a la Carte" was played by Florence Gilbert. Carroll Nye, a newcomer on the Fox lot, played Tom Hardin; Maine Geary did the part of Jeffrey Peters and William Colvin his voracious sire, with an eye for feminine charm.

The picture was directed by Robert Kerr, under the supervision of George E. Marshall. The next movie in the series will be "Elsie in New York," to be followed by "From the Cabby's Seat" and "A Social Triangle."

"TOL'ABLE ROMEO" is a Hal Roach single-reeler, directed by Jess Robbins. The plot concerns a presentation of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" with variations that provoke mirth. Katherine Grant is the leading lady.

CHARLES PUFFY

The jolly, rotund comedian of Century-Universal Comedies will be amply represented in "Laugh Month" offerings from the Universal exchanges.

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld's Musical Settings On Short Reels

DR. HUGO RIESENFELD, famous musical director, and former leader of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion Theatre orchestras in New York, is responsible for the unusual musical scores which will be furnished to theatres with the various subjects of Pathe's new "Famous Melody Series," the first of which, "Songs of Ireland," will be released on February 7th.

Founded upon the folksongs and airs of the different nations of the world, the films naturally lend themselves to musical accompaniment. James A. FitzPatrick, the producer, who, with Peggy Shaw, former Ziegfeld Follies beauty, plays a leading role, has staged each production in the country which it picturizes, giving it a background of natural scenery and authenticity. Pictorially beautiful on the screen, the musical score enhances its romance and charm.

In the musical score for "Songs of Ireland" are such well-known Irish airs as "The Minstrel Boy," "Come Back to Erin," "Killarney," "The Low-Backed Car," "Rory O'Moore," "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," and a medley of Irish dances.

Charles Chase in New York

Charley Chase, starred in a series of Pathe comedies produced by Hal Roach at his studios in California, arrived in New York on Friday, January 22, on the Twentieth Century for a month's vacation. The comedian was accompanied by his director, Leo McCarey.

Just before leaving California he completed a comedy in which Martha Sleeper, Virginia Pearson and Anders Randolph appeared in his support.

"A Good Comedy Covers the Whole World"

BY MACK SENNETT,
Pathe Comedy Producer.

A GOOD COMEDY covers the world. There has never been a time when the public did not want comedies. In "Laugh Month" everybody will be able to enjoy a full share of laughs.

We have gone through many phases of melodrama, costume, sex and problem pictures. They have their day and pass on to the next sensation. These pictures are limited to localities. The sophisticated audience of a large city demands something different from a country town. A heated love drama will appeal to youth and old age will be held by human interest. A woman will rave over a romantic hero; while her husband is bored to slumber.

But the demand for short comedies, the desire to laugh, has always been consistent and unswerving.

The great problem of the movie-producer is to find an idea which will cover the whole territory. A good comedy does this as no other kind of play. All audiences seem to laugh at the same things.

Most adventurers in Laughland will discover, however, that there is more grief in making comedies than in drama. People have an almost pathetic eagerness to laugh; but it is hard to make them do it. In making my own comedies for Pathe I find we have to use better stories and directors than ever before. The fact is, making laugh plays has become almost inconceivably difficult.

Exaggerated make-ups and the custard pie have gone forever. A comedy in these days has to be built with brains and real drama as a foundation. A comedy produced in this manner is usually a good comedy. And a good comedy covers the whole world for the laugh in the only universal idea

WHAT BECAME OF THE MONEY? The police try to keep an eye on Harry Langdon in the latter's current three-reel Mack Sennett comedy, "There He Goes." The charming Peggy Montgomery is the beautiful girl opposite the comedy star.

"Flashes of the Past" to Be Released as 2-Reel Subject

AS a result of the nation-wide approval with which "Flashes of the Past," the Pathe News Fifteenth Anniversary film, has been received, both by exhibitors and press, the news film is to be released as a two-reel subject.

"Flashes of the Past," as its title indicates, is a comprehensive review of the historic events of the last fifteen years, and bring back to the screen the important happenings throughout the world as presented by Pathe News during that decade and a half.

First shown at the Pathe News Fifteenth Anniversary Dinner in New York, on November 14th, to a gathering of dignitaries of the nation, leaders in the motion-picture world and prominent editors and writers, the film evoked enthusiastic comment and brought forth many recommendations that it be released to the general public. Newspapers all over the country, notable among them the Chicago Tribune, Minneapolis Journal, Kansas City Journal-Post, Omaha World-Herald and Atlanta Journal, devoted columns to the reproduction of scenes from the film, in both rotogravure and black-and-white sections.

Subsequently, at the request of members of the National Press Club, in Washington, D. C., Emanuel Cohen, editor of Pathe News, brought the film to the capital, where it was given a private showing in Keith's Theatre before an audience of twelve hundred, numbering among them members of the Cabinet, prominent educators and representatives of newspapers and press associations all over the country.

Laugh Month's Practicability Tried-and-Proved

By FRED McCONNELL
Short Subject Sales Manager

EXHIBITORS have manifested great eagerness in getting behind National Laugh Month, in many cases running virtually all-comedy programs for the entire week. Judging by bookings received at the Universal exchanges, this situation will remain in effect during the entire month of January.

Virtually every exhibitor availing himself of Carl Laemmle's Complete Service Plan is able to present programs comprised, for the most part, of Universal's 1-reel Bluebird Comedies, 2-reel Mustang Westerns (including the highly-amusing series staring Ben Corbett and Pee Wee Holmes) and the chapter-thrillers released under the Adventure Pictures brand, as well as the several attractive series of two-reel comedies produced by the Stern Brothers.

To Make Public Realize Importance of "Shorts"

The purpose of National Laugh Month was to have exhibitors make the press and theatre-goers realize the importance of short products, especially comedies. By expending a little extra effort on his short features, the theatre manager has shown both editor and patron that short features are continually becoming more important. The result has been a recognition of this fact, evidenced by the newspapers in additional publicity, and by the public in increased attendance.

The exhibitor signing Universal's Complete Service Contract today gets a wonderful line-up to select his program. This arrangement has provided a great boon to the small-town theatre manager, and permits him to show his patrons a short-feature program, mostly comedies, thus deriving the maximum benefit of the nation-wide advertising and exploitation accorded Laugh Month.

THERE ARE LOTS OF WAYS TO GET THE LAUGH. Here's another combination — Edna Marian, Century Comedy and Universal.

A representative program, as employed by hundreds of exhibitors, includes a Bluebird 1-reel comedy, starring Arthur Lake, Charles Puffy or Neely Edwards; a 2-reel Mustang Western, starring Pete Morrison, Jack Mower, Fred Humes, Ben Corbett and Pee Wee Holmes; a 2-reel Stern Brothers Comedy, either a Buster Brown Production, or a Wanda Wiley, Edna Marian, Al Alt, or Eddie Gordon Comedy, and one of the many chapter-thrillers released under the Adventure Pictures brand.

Laugh Month May Become An Annual Event

This great variety of Universal short product enables the enterprising exhibitor to arrange a two-hour program without having recourse to full-length features. That programs of this sort meet the approval of theatre-goers is evidenced by the enthusiastic reports pouring into Universal exchanges from delighted exhibitors, praising both our short product and the Complete Service Plan.

Judging by the success enjoyed by exhibitors participating in Laugh Month, the project is almost certain to become an annual event. Although but one week of Laugh Month has elapsed, the results to date are most gratifying. In keeping with its policy of backing up its sales with every possible exhibitor aid, Universal has instituted a careful checking system to determine how exhibitors fare with its product during Laugh Month. Compilations of these reports, telegraphed to the Universal Home Office, indicate a considerable increase in box-office receipts during a corresponding period for several years past.

THREE TINY TOTS AID "NATIONAL LAUGH MONTH" —"Fat" Karr, "Tiny" Ross and "Fatty" Alexander do their stuff for Nat G. Rothstein, Director of Advertising, Publicity and Exploitation for F. B. O. Two of the three little tads seem to enjoy their contribution to "Laff Month." The firm of "Karr, Ross and Alexander" is featured in Standard Fat Men's Comedies for F. B. O. release.

"Too Many Relatives"

The seventh of the "Married Life of Helen and Warren" comedy series, "Too Many Relatives," has gone into production at the Fox West Coast Studios. Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley again portray the leading roles, with Arthur Housman, Belva McKay, Jimmy Boudwin, "Pal" the wonder dog, and "Pussy-Purr-Mew," the "Helen and Warren" Persian cat, completing the cast. Albert Ray is directing.

ANY RABBIT WOULD QUAIL to be hunted thusly as Clyde Cook proves for Pathe with his trick hunt-hound.

F. B. O. Breaks High Record For "Laugh Month" Bookings

Washington and Philadelphia Houses on List; Balaban and Katz Takes Several in Series; Loew's Newark Circuit Books F. B. O. Shorts

WITH reports coming in daily of new short subjects bookings in all sections of the country, the sales department of F. B. O. announces that at the present time it is far ahead of estimated returns on laugh subjects for "Laugh Month."

Evidence that F. B. O. short subjects are being booked extensively and largely by the biggest and best first run houses throughout the country is contained in an announcement, that to date scores of first run theatres have already contracted for laugh subjects for January. The list of theatre bookings which follows is but a portion of the contracts with which the sales department has been flooded for the last month:

Loew's Circuit, Newark, N. J., has bought "Mummy Love" and "A Peaceful Riot," two Blue Ribbon comedies starring Alice Ardell, the former for 31 days; the State Theatre at Oakland, Cal., will play six Bray cartoons; the Globe at McKeesport, Pa., will play "Dinky Doodle at the Circus," and the Liberty at Sharon, Pa., three Bray cartoons. The Bijou Theatre at Decatur, Ill., has contracted for the entire series (twelve episodes) of "The Adventures of Mazie," starring Alberta Vaughn.

The New Milo in Chicago (a Balaban and Katz house) will play ten Standard Fat Men comedies, ten Blue Ribbons and twenty-six Bray cartoons; the Lyric at Indianapolis has contracted for "Dinky Doodle in the Restaurant" and "The Leopard's Spots." Each will play one entire week. The Strand at Moundsville, W. Va., has bought "The Adventures of Mazie" series, the new "Fighting Hearts" series, consisting of twelve episodes, the thirteen Standard Fat Men comedies and thirteen Blue Ribbon comedies.

The Star Theatre at Fall River, Mass., has contracted for "The Telephone Girl" series, "The Go-Getters," "The Pacemakers," twelve Jimmy Aubrey comedies, eleven Stan Laurel comedies, thirteen Heeza Liar cartoons, twelve Dinky Doodles and nine Screen Almanacs. These subjects will be played at the rate of five a week.

Y., has contracted for the twelve Mazies, four Aubreys, five Laurels and two Blue Ribbons for a repeat performance in Albany; the American at Troy, N. Y., will play thirteen Dinky Doodles and thirteen Bray cartoons, while Proctor's Griswold, in the same city, will play thirteen Dinky Doodles for a repeat performance.

Fox's at Philadelphia has bought eight Bray cartoons; the Earle Theatre at Washington, D. C., will play "In the Air," a two reel Standard Fat Men comedy, and "Mummy Love," while the Gem at Salt Lake City, Utah, has contracted for the twelve episodes of "The Adventures of Mazie."

The Strand at Washington, D. C., has purchased "Mummy Love" and "All Out." Each subject will play one entire week. The American at San Jose, Cal., has contracted for twenty-six Bray cartoons; Pantages at Los Angeles will play "Hold Tight," a Blue Ribbon comedy, for an entire week, while the Saenger Amusement Company at New Orleans, La., has contracted for "The Adventures of Mazie" and "Fighting Hearts" for their entire circuit.

Stanley Circuit Likes "Ko-Ko"

"Ko-Ko Steps Out," the Max Fleischer Out-of-the-Inkwell Cartoon, released by Red Seal Pictures, has been booked for the entire Stanley Circuit after proving to be a hilarious hit last week at the Stanley Theatre of Philadelphia.

"Laugh and Grow Fat," Says Cline

By EDDIE CLINE
Mack Sennett, Director

"Laugh Month" has been instituted, no doubt, by the weight reducing organizations of the country. Those who attend the theatres will put on pounds and pounds of avoirdupois.

Think what this will mean to the guardians of the waist line, and all their allied industries, dietitians and such.

Just as a word to the wise—January is THE month!

WHO "WOODEN" LAUGH at "His Wooden Wedding" with Chase—the groom—to chase the gloom? Pathe distributing.

"Laugh Month" Is Particularly Fitting for F. B. O. Releases

"LAUGH and the world laughs with you. Weep and you make bum pictures!"

That is the motto which Vice President J. I. Schnitzer, of F. B. O., has adopted for his guidance in lining up next season's product. And there is nobody that believes more sincerely in the Creed of the expansive, open-faced, Swiss movement Gurgle any more heartily than this motion picture executive—even among the strict comedy producers themselves. Or rather, the producers of strict comedy.

"Laughter is the real essence of entertainment," says Mr. Schnitzer. "Drama and melodrama are all right in their place, and they have a big place on our program. Particularly the latter. But no production would be unrelievedly serious. Laughter is the back lighting by which strong situations are brought into stronger relief. After years of misunderstanding of the motion picture, producers are coming to realize that no production should be made devoid of humor. It's been a hard struggle, but we have finally found that out.

"The biggest and most outstanding successes have nearly always been either comedies or dramas with plenty of comedy relief. I attribute the success of such stars as Fred Thomson very largely to the fact that they realize the tremendous value of merriment. The public wanted to laugh in Caesar's time—and it probably did, at some of the antics of Senators dodging such political issues as the paving of the Appian way. The public wants to laugh now. And it always will. We have only to go back to the very human principals that the humble and lowly laugh at the pretentions of the great, and the great laugh at the naivete of the humble and lowly. Nowhere is this principle more apparent than in America. Americans are laugh-lovers par excellence, and 'Laugh Month' is therefore particularly fitting for us."

Pathe Release for February 7 Has First of Famous Melodies

"SONGS OF IRELAND," the first of the new "Famous Melody Series," and "The Strenuous Life," a Grantland Rice "Sportlight," add diversity to the Pathe short feature program for the week of February 7, which also includes the usual comedy, news and serial subjects.

Both Hal Roach and Mack Sennett offer two-reel comedies and "Topics of the Day" and "Aesop's Film Fables" add to the comedy element on the schedule.

The last chapter of the Patheserial, "The Green Archer," Pathe Review No. 6 and two issues of Pathe News complete the releases for the week.

The "Famous Melody Series" of single reel subjects, which is inaugurated with the release of "Songs of Ireland," affords exhibitors a novelty subject of great audience appeal. "The Streunous Life" is a timely Grantland Rice "Sportlight" produced by J. L. Hawkinson. "Your Husband's Past" is a two-reeler produced by Hal Roach with an all-star cast including such favorites as Vivian Oakland, George Cooper, Tyler Brooke, Fred Kelsey, James Finlayson and Arthur Millett. Fred L. Guiol directed.

"Funnymooners" is a two-reel comedy produced by Mack Sennett with Ralph Graves in the leading role. Thelma Parr continues as Graves' leading lady and Marvin Lobach lends capable support. Lloyd Bacon directed. "The Smoke Clears Away" is the title of the closing chapter of the Patheserial, adapted by Frank Leon Smith from Edgar Wallace's novel of the same name. Allene Ray and Walter Miller play the leading roes and are supported by such screen favories as Burr McIntosh, Frank Lackteen, Dorothy Kink and Walter Lewis.

Pathe Review No. 6 presents three subjects of wide appeal: "Art in Anarchy," an old

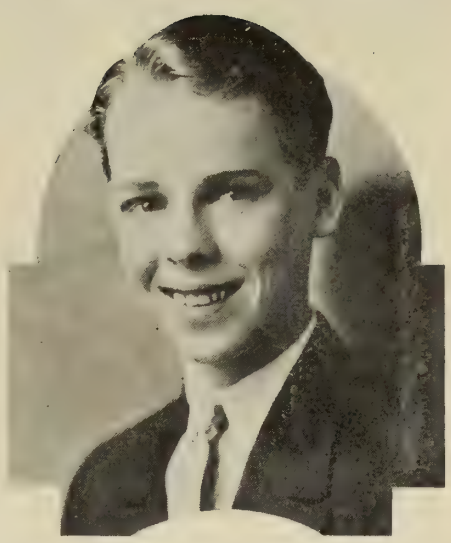
Bernstein Appointed General Manager of Red Seal Sales

THE first official act of Max Fleischer, President of Red Seal Pictures, upon assuming his present office in conjunction with his work as head of the Out-of-the-Inkwell Studios, was the appointment of Harry Bernstein to be General Sales Manager of the national Red Seal organization.

Bernstein previously was head of Red Seal's New York Exchange, where he was the prime factor in selling Red Seal's product to the big, first-run Broadway houses. Such big local theatre circuits as Loew's, Fabian, Reade, Stern and a number of others have already booked this product.

Before joining Red Seal, Bernstein ran a number of the biggest theatres in the East. His training in the show business included the management of important exchanges for a number of the big distributing organizations.

When questioned as to the forthcoming Red Seal policy, both Fleischer and Bernstein stated that a series of plans are being formulated, and a definite statement bearing on both productions and distribution will be issued within a short time.



ARTHUR LAKE

Among the things to "keep your eye on" during 1926 will be this splendid young comedian of Universal comedies.

Carey's New Mount

Harry Carey, the popular Western star now under the Pathe banner, introduces a new horse as his equine pal in "Driftin' Thru," which will be released on February 21. Charles R. Rogers is presenting Carey in this series. "Sandy" is the name of Carey's new mount. The equine is a little Western thoroughbred that Carey bought several years ago when it was just a little colt at pasture in Arizona, where he was on location. Pete, Carey's fellow player and faithful companion for twelve years, recently was retired for life, and pensioned with an acreage of green fields on the Carey ranch at Saugas, where the equine screen star may browse to his heart's content the rest of his days.

Red Seal "Up To Date"

Max Fleischer, president of Red Seal Pictures, after the second week of assuming his new duties as head of a national distributing organization, says his production work at the Inkwell Studios has continued up to schedule. "Our releasing is up to date," Fleischer explained, "thanks to the co-operation on the part of my entire organization, producing as well as distributing, during this period."

"Ko-Ko Paradise"

Dave Fleischer, general director of the Inkwell Studios, has just completed "Ko-Ko Paradise," an Out-of-the-Inkwell Cartoon. Dave's present efforts are centered upon a circus scene, to appear in the next Inkwell, which has just been put into production.

"Song Car-Tune" in Capitol

The Capitol, New York, played Red Seal's latest, Max Fleischer's Ko-Ko Song Cartune, "Dolly Gray," last week, following Red Seal's first of the new Urban-Kineo Reelview series which played this same theatre the previous two weeks.

ADVENTURES OF MAZIE NO. 9. (F. O. B. Series). Star, Alberta Vaughn. "High But Not Handsome," which is number nine of this laugh-producing series, is a jim-dandy; in fact they seem to be getting better, if that is possible. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

ADVENTURES OF MAZIE, NO. 3. (F. B. O.—Series). Star, Alberta Vaughn. Fine comedy. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, 95 per cent. Farm class, town of 1,1500. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (250 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

AIR TIGHT. (Educational Comedy). Star, Bobby Vernon. Not quite as good as his usual comedies are. It has some new gags that give some cause for laughter, but enough of them. Tone, good. Fair appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Angelmire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ASSORTED NUTS. (Bishoff Comedy). This is the kind of stuff that hurts the cause of independent producers. Cheap production, poor photography and pathetic attempts at laugh making. Rotten. Appeal, 10 per cent. Working class, town of 7,000. Admission 10-25. A. M. Rosenbloom, Home Theatre, Rochester, Pennsylvania.

BABY BE GOOD. (Educational). If "Our Gang" comedies are uninteresting, then this is a news reel. Didn't get a laugh. The kids are not as clever as the Roach aggregation and the entire production staff doesn't come up to expectations. All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

BIG BUSINESS. (Pathe-Comedy). "Our Gang." No use to comment on this series. All "Gang" pictures may not get many laughs, but it's the idea of the thing; everyone likes them. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

BUSINESS ENGAGEMENT. Fox-Comedy). One of the two-reel comedies of the "Helen and Warren" series, and about the best polite comedy we have had. The laughs are in the situations, and not in a trick fall or a smear. The characters are real actors and Katharine Perry is one of the most pleasing actresses we have seen lately. The crowd liked it. General class, city of 15,000. Admission 40 cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre (1,000 seats), Bellaire, Ohio.

BUTTERFLY MAN. (Fox-Comedy). The best Fox comedy in many a day. A regular picture that will build up any weak picture. If you run Fox try and get this with a weak sister. It's slapstick. Factory class. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CLOUD HOPPER. (Educational-Comedy). Star, Larry Semon. His last comedy of the Educational series and as good as all the others together. It was a riot in our house. A peach of a comedy. Tone and appeal, good. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Angelmire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DON'T PINCH. (Educational-Comedy). Star, Bobby Vernon. This one helped hold up the high average set up in his former comedies. It had plenty of fine laugh-makers in it. Tone, okay. Good appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DYNAMITE DOGGIE. (Educational-Comedy). Star, Al St. John. Al St. John uses some of his famous bicycles in this and thereby gets some hearty laughs. A dandy comedy and no mistake. Tone, okay. Good appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

EVERY MAN FOR HIMSELF. (Pathe-Roach-Comedy). "Our Gang." Biff-bang-bing. The Gang gets into battle royal and tin ears fly in all directions. Good show in a house that likes juveniles. Can't say much for it here. All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

FARMYARD FOLLIES. (Pathe Fables). Terry is a genuine genius with his pen. With an indifferent feature these short reels are genuine business helps and should be shown everywhere. All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

GUMP COMEDIES. (Universal). Star, Joe Murphy. Have used three. They are mighty good comedies. Town and country class, town of 5,000. Admission 10-25. W. F. Jones, Criterion Theatre (300 seats), Frederick, Oklahoma.

HUNT. (Fox Comedy). Not a hilarious farce by any means, this comedy serves to hand quite a few good laughs to the crowd. Earle Foxe's wild ride on the back of a death-dealing bucker in a fox hunt is good and his stupidity is refreshing as well as his personality. All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

IDAHO. (Pathe Serial). Good at the start but am losing money every night I run it. I like a serial that holds up. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Oil class town of 250. Admission 10-15. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (350 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

MEET THE AMBASSADOR. (F. B. O. Comedy). Star, Jimmie Aubrey. This was too silly to be good comedy. Aubrey has a fine face, but don't think he is a good comedienne. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor appeal. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

MILK BANDIT. (Sunshine Comedy). Very good. Lots of hokum. Business class and farmers, town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

MYSTERIOUS MYSTERY. (Pathe Comedy). "Our Gang." Again the Gang pleased and sent them out in good humor. Print good. Sunday and special, yes. Great appeal. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

OUT OF THE INKWELL. Winkler). Did not like the first one, but others after were better. Have played four in all. Neighborhood class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

PACEMAKERS. (F. B. O.—Series). Star, Alberta Vaughn. These are fairly good two-reelers that seem to please my patrons very much. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. All classes, town of 500. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

PERILS OF THE WILD. (Universal Serial). This is a good serial. Nithing to burn up the town, but lots of animal stuff in it and the kids like it. The hero, being one of the world famous strong men, is watched with interest by some of the village sports who come regularly to see him perform. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Small town class, town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

PLAY BALL. (Pathe Serial). A pretty good serial, but not enough baseball. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L Barnett, Finne's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

POSTAGE DUE. (Pathe Comedy). A little comedy once in a while. Very few Pathe comics get more than a laugh only once in a while here. All classes. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

RARIN' ROMEO. (Educational-Comedy). Star, Walter Hiers. A fair comedy that received some laughs. To me an inane effort with no thought back of it or any real comedy in it. Tone, good. Fair appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ROMEO AND JULIET. (Pathe-Sennett Comedy). Star, Ben Turpin. One of Turpin's good ones. It's very seldom that Turpin can make our audience laugh; his eyes mean nothing here. All classes. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SCRAMBLED EGGS. (Rayart Serial). Star, Richard Holt. A serial with plenty of action, thrills, stunts. Just a darn good serial and it's making money for me. Prints good. Tine, okay. Sunday, no. Very good appeal. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SIT TIGHT. (Educational Comedy). Star, Jimmie Adams. This was a fair comedy. Some of the gags received some genuine laughs from our crowd. Film was very dark on screen. Tone, okay. Fair appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

TOURIST. (Educational Tuxedo Comedy). A fairly good comedy with two willums and a flivver hero who pays back taxes on the old inn and saves the fountain of youth in the front yard and incidentally getting the girl. Regular hokum. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

WILD WEST. (Pathe Serial). Star, Jack Mulhall. Wild West and world's worst go hand in hand. Title is misleading and Jack Mulhall as a halfbreed cowboy is a good joke. Don't play this one. "Nell Gwyn"—British National

Dorothy Gish Is Wonderful in English-Made Feature That Offers Splendid Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

BY FAR the best picture that has been brought to this country from England, and one that invites comparison with the best class of our product is "Nell Gwyn," the British National Pictures, Ltd., production starring Dorothy Gish, which was brought to this country by J. D. Williams, former manager of First National and a keen judge of picture values.

In construction, "Nell Gwyn" differs from the usual film offering in that it does not follow a certain defined plot or attempt to round out the story at the close. Frankly it is a character study of one of the most fascinating characters of English tradition, presenting on the screen the career of this girl of the London slums who in the time of Charles the Second, through her beauty and wit attracted the attention of the king, became the most popular and clever actress of her day and the idol of the people, and finally was ensconced in the palace of White Hall as the favorite of the monarch. The dramatic angle of the film is supplied in the jealousy of Lady Castelmaine the previous favorite and in the open disgust and dislike of this "gutter girl" by the heir apparent to the throne, whose accession to the crown brought Nell's career to an end.

CAST:

Nell Gwyn	Dorothy Gish
King Charles II	Randle Ayrton
Lady Castlemaine	Juliette Compton
Mrs. Gwyn	Sidney Fairbrother
Toby Clinker	Judd Green
Dickson	Edward Sorley

Story by Marjorie Bowen.
Scenario and direction by Herbert Wilcox.
Length, about 9,000 feet.

The presence of Dorothy Gish will insure American audiences giving this picture at least open-minded attention and her work will win their admiration. Miss Gish proves to be an absolutely ideal selection for the role of clever, buoyant, hoydenish irrepressible Nell. We know of no other actress who could have filled the role nearly so well. She brings to it beauty, vivacity, the requisite joyousness and abandon required, plus her charming personality. Her performance is a delight and is really the best thing she has ever done. She dominates the picture and holds the audience fascinated at all times.

The other players give her admirable support. We believe that despite the handicap of being entirely unknown to American audiences, they will be entirely satisfactory. Randle Ayton gives a fine performance as the jolly king and the unnamed player who portrayed the sour-faced Duke of York is as perfect a type as we have ever seen.

Herbert Wilcox's direction of this picture is excellent and the sets, production details, the lighting, and the camerawork of Roy Overbaugh, an American cameraman, is on a par with our high class films.

Possibly some of the scenes could be clipped a bit, and certain points that appeal especially to British audiences eliminated, and it would seem that changes in some of the subtitles would improve them for our audiences. American patrons, accustomed to a complete story and the inevitable happy ending may feel a bit disappointed at leaving Nell "in the air," as it were, at the death of the king and giving no hint of what happened thereafter. We believe, however, that picture patrons in this country will find out-of-the-ordinary and distinctly pleasing entertainment in the fascinating "Nell Gwyn" as so superbly portrayed by Dorothy Gish.

Many Angles of Sure-Fire Audience Appeal In Exciting Melodrama with Thrill Climax

MADE by Associated Arts and directed by F. Harmon Weight, the combination that produced the successful "Drusilla With a Million" and also including among the featured players Mary Carr who appeared as Drusilla, F. B. O. is releasing as a Gold Bond special a stirring action and heart-interest melodrama, "Flaming Waters."

Briefly the story concerns a widow whose husband was lost at sea. She toils over the washtub to make a living for her small boy who goes to sea when he grows up. Worrying at every storm and hoping to aid him she invests her savings in a wildcat oil company and loses all. When her son Dan returns he finds her working as a washwoman for an abusive, mean-tempered woman. Determined on revenge he takes his mother to the oil well and outwits the villain when a fake well begins to spout. Dan falls in love with a society girl, but she turns him down because of the villain's lies. He takes his profits and starts another well, but just as it spouts, the villain's henchman blows up a dam and the villain sets fire to the oil which is carried in a blazing torrent down the valley. In its path is the girl who has returned to him and his mother. Dan swims through the oil covered water and rescues both at once by carrying them across a rope. The villain loses his life in the Flaming Waters.

Dan O'Neill	Malcolm McGregor
Doris Laidlaw	Pauline Garon
Mrs. O'Neill	Mary Carr
Jasper Thorne	John Miljan
Midge	Johnny Gough
Mrs. Rutherford	Mayme Kelso

Story by Lloyd Sheldon.
Directed by F. Harmon Weight.
Length, 6,591 feet.

Practically every sure-fire angle that has proven its appeal to the melodrama fans who constitute the majority of the average audience has been included in this story and effectively played up by Director F. Harmon Weight. There is romance, pathos, action, excitement, villainy, mother-love, snobbery and generous human interest and sympathy, together with good comedy relief. Among the stirring sequences are a wild ride down a winding mountain road in a runaway auto which is stopped by the hero as it overhangs a precipice, a snappy fight with three of the villain's henchmen, a race between horse and auto to get back to town and corner the oil well shares, and finally the intensely thrilling climax with the rushing torrent of blazing oil over which the hero carries to safety his mother and sweetheart by laboriously swinging on a rope, reaching the other side just as the last strand burns through.

Mary Carr gives her usual fine and sympathy arousing portrayal of the mother role and Pauline Garon and Malcolm McGregor, who are featured with her, give capable performances. John Miljan is the polished gentleman villain and Johnny Gough supplies comedy as the hero's pal.

"Flaming Waters" is excellent box-office melodrama.

"The Danger Girl"—Prod. Dist. Corp.

Good Comedy and Surprise Crook-Detective Angle in Feature Starring Priscilla Dean

WITH Priscilla Dean in the starring role, the Metropolitan production "The Danger Girl" adapted from George Middleton and Stuart Olivier's play "The Bride" and released through Producers Distributing Corporation, is a combination of human interest comedy and crook-detective melodrama that offers varied and pleasing entertainment.

Wilson Travers and his brother Monty shun women and are content to spend their time collecting valuable jewels and rare fish much to the amusement of their romantic and up-to-date Aunt Henrietta. Suddenly, they are flabbergasted by the appearance of a girl in their rooms, dressed like a bride and pleading for help. She insists on staying, shocking Monty but Wilson finds the idea pleasing. Visit of the police make it appear that the girl is a crook, but Wilson stands by her. Later, it turns out that the trusted butler and the supposed policemen are crooks and that the girl who caught them stealing the jewels was a detective sent to work on the case. With their arrest, she agrees to becomes Wilson's wife.

Henderson	Erwin Connelly

Based on play, "The Bride," by George Middleton and Stuart Olivier Scenario by Finis Fox.
Directed by Edward Dillon.
Length, about 5,660 feet.

The picture starts off like a straight human interest comedy drama, the sequences following the introduction of "the bride" develop into farce and then the appearance of detectives and policemen and accomplices change the story into crook-detective melodrama. The picture holds the interest throughout. The earlier scenes are good for a number of good-natured chuckles and there is plenty of action and excitement in the later situations, together with an intriguing element of mystery and surprise in reversing the spectators' suspicions and having the crooks turn out to be the detectives and vice versa.

Priscilla Dean gives a vivacious, spirited and capable performance as the girl and John Bowers is fine as Wilson. Arthur Hoyt adds an amusing characterization as the staid bachelor whose hobby is collecting fish, Gustave Von Seffertitz makes an excellent butler-crook and Cissy Fitzgerald is especially fine as the jazzy, up-to-date aunt.

"Dance Madness"—M-G-M

Conrad Nagel and Claire Windsor Featured In Clever Robert Z. Leonard Production

A STORY by S. Jay Kaufman furnishes the basis for "Dance Madness," a Robert Z. Leonard production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer featuring Claire Windsor and Conrad Nagel. It is not a jazz picture as might be inferred from the title, but deals with the ruse employed by the hero's wife to cure him of his propensity for becoming infatuated with dancers.

"Pennie" Smith, after a wild night finds himself in a garden where classic dancers are rehearsing and falls in love with the teacher, Verda. Soon they are married and "Pennie" stays madly in love with her until they visit Paris where he becomes infatuated with Valentina, a masked dancer in a show. Verda goes to Valentina to protest and not only learns that she has refused to see "Pennie," but that her husband was Verda's former teacher. Verda arranges to teach "Pennie" a lesson by posing as Valentina and unmasking at the proper time and the scheme works perfectly.

Length, 6,393 feet.

Robert Z. Leonard has given this picture his usual high-class direction and it is sumptuously mounted with elaborate sets. The rather implausible masquerade idea where the husband fails to recognize or even suspect his wife is handled principally from a comedy angle, introducing amusing situations which border on farce, where the hero waits on the steps for a signal, fights a duel and even leaps from an upper window to escape Valentina's husband, and tells various yarns and uses other ruses to deceive his own wife. The result is moderately pleasing, light entertainment.

Conrad Nagel's work is a departure from his usual run for he has a light comedy role which he handles satisfactorily, getting quite a number of laughs. Claire Windsor is excellent, carrying off the masquerade with style, snap and "class." Director Leonard has convincingly handled the peppy Parisian atmosphere and Douglas Gilmore, Hedda Hopper and Mario Carilla, who complete the small cast, give capable performances.

New John M. Stahl Production Is Pleasing Story of Romance and Beautiful Sentiment

JOHN M. STAHL'S newest production, which Louis B. Mayer is presenting through First National with Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagel in the leading roles, unfolds a decidedly pleasing small town romance of a young girl who married one fellow while loving another and eventually found out that she had made the right choice.

Mary and Joe had been childhood sweethearts. Joe went away and not hearing from him, Mary's parents persuaded her to become engaged to Jimmy, a fine chap with money and social position. Just before the wedding, Joe returned confessing he was a failure, but pleading his love. Strolling through a wooded path, they heard a group of boys singing "Memory Lane." This brought back memories of their early love and though Joe pleaded, Mary felt she could not jilt Jim. Joe saw the wedding through a window and in desperate madness kidnapped Mary. He soon repented but a breakdown kept them from getting back home until morning. Jim's love was so great that he did not doubt Mary and soon they were ensconced in a beautiful home. He proved an ideal husband; soon a baby added to their joy. Then Joe returned and Jim brought him to dinner. He seemed to have changed and was an overdressed, shallow, loud and rather vulgar creature. Jim guessed the truth and Joe confessed that he did it to disillusion Mary. The scheme worked and Mary was happy that she had made the best choice.

"The American Venus"—Paramount

"Miss America" Featured in Pleasing Film of Great Beauty That Looks Like Big Winner

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

WITH the added advantage of an excellent exploitation angle in the appearance in the case of Fay Lanphier, winer of the title of Miss America in the recent Atlantic City Beauty Contest, the Paramount production, "The American Venus" is in itself an entertainment of sumptuous beauty, good comedy and thrilling action that should prove a winner, for it has "everything" and then some.

The plot is a trifle thin; merely the efforts of rival manufacturers of beauty creams to gain the endorsement of the winner. The press agent for the Niles company plans to make his own entry, but his employer is afraid that his wife will not approve the idea. So the agent goes to the rival camp, and puts Mary Gray up as the contestant. Mary is the daughter of his new boss and the reason why he changed allegiance. She has been engaged to the pasty-souled son of her father's rival, for which reason Niles has not put Grey out of business, but when Mary breaks the engagement, Niles sees a chance to get control of the Grey plant.

When it looks as though Mary would be the winner, he decoys her home on the pretext that her father has been seriously injured. When the trick is discovered she and Chip Armstrong head for Atlantic City, arriving too late, but the winner has told all the reporters that she owes her pulchritude to Grey's cream, and saves the day.

The picture has been given a gorgeous production. There are several sequences in color, notably the three appearances of the models; on the boardwalk, in tableau and in a fashion revue. Any one of these three would save a poor picture. Here they unite to make a good story even better. Nothing finer has been shown upon the screen.

But this is merely incidental to the well developed story. The plot catches the interest from the start and holds it in increasing degree to the close. The really big scenes are the auto race with Niles trying to head them off. They build this to a big climax that will thrill even the blase. Even the auto run in "Paths to Paradise" must go into second place.

Part of the interest in the story comes from the players. Esther Ralston is beautiful to look at and in the intimate scenes she takes no dust from the professional beauties. Lawrence Grey is the snappy press agent and Ford Sterling is genuinely good as Niles. At times he plays the villain, but he is always the comedian and plays with a sureness and lack of exaggeration that causes us to forget his old chinwhiskered Sennett days. Kenneth MacKenna is good as Niles' snappy son and William B. Mack is appealing as the shiftless father of Mary. A number of the actual contestants in the Atlantic City event are in the cast and help to make this the screen rival of the Ziegfeld glorification of the American Girl.

"The First Year"—Fox

Kathryn Perry and Matt Moore in Amusing Story of Married Life, Adapted from Play

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

ONE of the series of William Fox productions based on John Golden's successful stage plays, "The First Year," is a highly amusing comedy dealing with that eventful period of married life that looks like pleasing entertainment for the majority of patrons.

Grace is courted by Tom Tucker an easy-going, bashful chap, also by Dick, a go-getter. Through the aid of Uncle Myron, Tom finally gets enough courage to take Grace in his arms and wins out. They move to a small town and there follows a series of petty disagreements culminating in the apparent collapsing of a deal where Tom stood to make a lot of money out of a railroad company that wanted land for a new siding. Grace goes back home. Tom puts the deal over and takes her the check. Uncle Myron who is a doctor again lends a helping hand, by telling Tom he should be around when he becomes a father, and a reconciliation quickly follows.

This outline serves as a basis on which to build up a lot of true to life situations of newly married life that are not only decidedly funny but have a deep underlying note of human interest. The laughs arise from the situations and while they are at time given farcial twists there is no slapstick. Frank Borzage's direction of this story is excellent, the continuity is smooth and he makes his cast act just like people you meet in everyday life. The scenes of Tom's courtship are especially good, and the dinner at which the prospective buyer and his wife are guests and everything goes wrong because of the stupidity of the emergency maid, is filled with laughs and realistic touches. Incidentally, Carolynne Snowden gives a great performance as the maid and the title writer certainly knew his business for he has aided in putting over a number of the laughs in these sequences.

Matt Moore as the bashful, easy-going husband has the kind of role in which he excels and gives a thoroughly enjoyable performance. As the wife, Kathryn Perry is excellent. Her portrayal of this character is remarkably sincere, natural and realistic. Other familiar players make up the well-rounded cast.

Married people especially will find "The First Year" delightful, but you don't have to belong to this class to enjoy the comedy or appreciate the situations. We consider this picture to be one of the most entertaining and amusing comedies of married life we have ever seen and believe it will prove a popular attraction, for it has a good little story, delightful humor that anyone can appreciate and effective heart-interest touches.

"Memory Lane"

romantic story of beautiful sentiment, and so well has it been directed and acted that it holds the attention and proves distinctly pleasing throughout. There is a wealth of heart interest and Mr. Stahl has introduced a number of thoroughly human touches in the doings of the village gossips showing how they spread the story of the kidnapping and of Joe's return.

Conrad Nagel gives a very good performance as Jim, and William Haines as Joe, especially in the flashy scenes. Eleanor Boardman is ideal for the role of sweet, demure Mary and little Frankie Darrow add effective bits of childhood comedy.

Director Stahl has steered clear of the chances to introduce melodramatic situations and handled the story strictly as sentimental heart-interest romance. In doing so, he has possibly made the character of Jim a bit too idealistic but he has produced a picture that while it has no really outstanding points, is well-balanced and distinctly pleasing entertainment for the masses, especially the sentimentally inclined.

Rosenbloom, Home Theatre (350 seats), Rochester, Pennsylvania.

YANKEE CONSUL. (6,148 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A good comedy that drew many laughs and pleased the majority. It is clean, and although slow in getting started has a whirlwind finish. It is not in the class with "The Hottentot," but is a good show just the same. Paper is not especially good. Good accessories mean much in the small town. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester Vermont.

F. B. O.

ALL AROUND THE FRYING PAN. (5,519 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. This subject was for "Ridin' the Wind" and is the worst one we have played to date and we have played them all but one. Absolutely ruined by shading down night scenes to point where audience cannot tell what is going on. My patrons kick on too much night or indoor stuff and this one is nearly all night. Will not compare with others of series. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. No appeal. Farmers and laboring class town of 350. Admission 10-25. Ed. F. Cox, Princess Theatre (400 seats), Bristol, Colorado.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. This is about the best Thomson picture made and they are all good. Should be a bigger winner for the small town theatres. Special, no. Business class and farmers town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

HEADS UP. Star, Lefty Flynn. Not quite so good as some of his previous ones, but a good program picture at that. Contains comedy-action, but at times borders rather close to the foolish. Pleases, but gets the ha-ha in spots. Tone, all right. Special, yes. Fair appeal. Steady class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (450) seats, Portland Orchard, Washington.

LET'S GO GALLAGHER. (5,182 feet). Star, Tom Tyler. This star's first picture and believe me it's a wow! This is as nearly a one hundred per cent Saturday night western as we want. Action! yes, oodles of it! Comedy, it had 'em laughing all the way; the story was good; direction, with exception of a couple minor flaws, excellent; print, perfect. Tom Tyler, shake hands—and give us some more with as much action as this one. Tone, okay here. Sunday, yes here. Not a special. Very strong appeal. General class town of 1,000. Farmers and business class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

Fred Thomson Appreciates

W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre, Jamaica, Long Island, of "Our Gang" reports conscientiously and helpfully.

Fred Thomson is an F. B. O. star who has the brains to realize that when a chap like Budge—or any other of "Our Gang"—says something good about his work, it is worth a letter just as much as is the fan appreciation which every star is quick to acknowledge (but darn few think far enough ahead to see that an appreciative exhibitor is just as fully worth their attention). Here's the sort of letter a real star writes to a real report-sender:

W. C. Budge,
Comedy Theatre,
Jamaica, L. I., N. Y.

My Dear Mr. Budge:

Thanks very much for the interest displayed in your report on "The Bandit's Baby" contained in the October 10th issue of Moving Picture World, Straight From the Shoulder.

I am especially proud of your comment on Silver King, and you may be interested to know that in my present production, "The Tough Guy," Silver is doing some very clever work with a little boy, which I trust will please you.

As you know, I am trying to make pictures that are different from the stereotyped run of "westerns" and reports such as yours are mighty encouraging.

Wishing you a happy and prosperous 1926, I remain,

Cordially yours,
FRED THOMSON.

'Member Ralph? Hooray! He's Back

"Greetings, Van and 'Gang'—after two years A. W. O. L. we are back in the film game once more, and glad of it.

"Was mighty glad to see that you were still using the slogan we furnished you in one of our letters several years ago: i.e. ,'It is my utmost desire to be of some use to my fellow men.'

"I want to repeat that for NOW, for we still feel that way about it and have never let up on the principle of the thing, even though we did let up on the film exhibition game.

"It just took three days after I found out I was to handle The Pastime Theatre, here, that there was an order in the mails for Moving Picture World. I am disappointed, however, that so few of 'Our Gang' recognize the paramount importance of releasing their opinions of the pictures they run, to the trade paper.

"Kindest personal regards to yourselves and the World staff, with an additional wish for your success in 1926." Ralph K. Russell, Pastime Theatre (formerly of Legion Theatre), Cushing, Iowa.

to poor advertising put out by the company, showing it just before the holidays at which time business is always poor, and weather was too cold; however, we do not believe it will prove a drawing card at any time. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, South Dakota.

DARWIN WAS RIGHT. Star cast. This is as fuuny a comedy as you can wish to have and with the proper exploitation can be made to pay. Should play up angle of ridiculing evolution in religious districts as one hundred percenters will not attend. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

DESERT'S PRICE. (5,709 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Always play Buck as soon as released and usually all of his pictures satisfy. This one very good and also supporting cast good. Tone and appeal, good. Special, no. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

DURAND OF THE BAD LANDS. Star, Buck Jones. A real honest-to-goodness Western. Buck is giving Tom a great battle for first place here. This picture has lots of action, humor, and thrills why say more. Tone, okay. Appeal, eighty percent. Mixed class town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. A. M. Rosenbloom, Home Theatre (350 seats), Rochester, Pennsylvania.

Metro-Goldwyn

BRIGHT LIGHTS. (6,260 feet). Star, Charles Ray. Why, oh why, do they pick Miss Starke for a chorus beauty, she isn't there, give her an outdoor role like she had in "Adventure," and she will put it over. Charles Ray is very good and gaining in weight which makes him look better. This picture is good, boys, but the leading lady is miscast. Poor title for small towns. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor appeal. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

CHEAPER TO MARRY. (5,921 feet). Star, Conrad Nagel. A nice little program picture, neither good nor bad. One of those kind that you cannot boost but just let it alone, your audience will then have no kick coming. Print fair. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy percent. All classes. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

DON'T. Star, Sally O'Neil. One of the funniest pictures I have ever seen. There isn't much of a plot to it but it is one continuous scream. Don't be afraid of this one. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

NEVER THE TWAIN SHALL MEET. (8 reels). Star cast. Now you talk about stars. They got them in this one and what's more a real one. More Power. Ending was not what they all wanted yet it satisfied, and that's enough said. G. A. Peterson, Cozy Theatre, Hollis, Oklahoma.

OLD CLOTHES. (5,915 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. A sequel to the "Rag Man" and hard to put over on account of paper. But picture is great. It's funny that Metro-Goldwyn don't get wise to themselves and put out paper that's not almost another "Rag Man." Our patrons thought they had seen it. Get them in and they will know it's Jackie's latest and advertise it as a sequel to "The Rag Man." R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

ONLY THING. Star, Conrad Nagel. Very good production, wonderful acting by Conrad Nagel and Eleanor Boardman. Impressive settings and great photography. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Neighborhood class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. High appeal. All classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

PRETTY LADIES. (6 reels). Star cast. Awful vulgar for a small town. For instance, some of the reading matter in the picture, is—I'm awful cold in the regions where I sit. And I'm wearing fur-lined B. V. D.'s lest my terminal gets frost bit. One more like this and I'll be tarred and feathered. Yet they talk about booking the whole works or nothing, and when an exhibitor runs a picture like this in a small town, he is out of luck. Goodbye big boys, hereafter, you'll have to let me pick around a bit or I'll close up and go to some regions where I can sit. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

Paramount

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. One fine picture. Lots of good comedy. One of the most pleasing pictures I have run. Small class and farmers town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre (250 seats), La Belle, Missouri.

COAST OF FOLLY. (7,000 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Very poor acting. Gloria's duo role as the mother is painful, almost a burlesque. Absolutely ridiculous. Worst picture of hers ever made. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

COBRA. (6,895 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. Forced to raise admission to get in enough to pay rental, which was twice too much. Lost money at that after the first night. The broadcasting done killed it the second night. Picture is dragged and poor story. Very poor photography, patrons thought they were stung. Try to see this picture before you play it and judge for yourself. "The Sainted Devil" also another box office flop. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

EAST OF SUEZ. (6,821 feet). Star, Pola Negri. A very good dramatic picture that pleased most everyone, but drew lightly. Satisfactory offering, but Miss Negri has no pulling power here, due to many poor pictures she has made. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Better class city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

GARDEN OF WEEDS. (6,250 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Nice picture. Wonderful photography, but Compson does not please in the small town. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. LAWFUL LARCENY. Star cast. Good program picture. Everything fine but the title. Good tone. Sunday, yes. Special, no. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre, La Belle, Missouri.

LIGHT OF THE WESTERN STARS. Star, Jack Holt. This is a very interesting production from Zane Grey's story and the acting is good. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30, regular. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Very good picture. Gloria draws good here. Picture satisfied. Small town class and farmers town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre (250 seats), La Belle, Missouri.

MANNEQUIN. Star cast. The $50,000 Fannie Hurst prize story that was put out by the Liberty Magazine. Paramount has given you a real picture in this one. It's another "Over the Hill" box office attraction, with the proper publicity this show ought to break some house records. Get behind it. It will stand up and should appeal to the better class trade. Small town patronage. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

MAN WHO FOUND HIMSELF. (7,298 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This was up to the standard of Meighan pictures and pleased all, and made more Meighan friends; prison scenes good. Picture slow in getting started. Better than "Irish Luck." Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,928 feet). Star, Betty Compson. An extra good western of the better class. I advertised it as heavily as I did the "Covered Wagon." Played it in better times and it did one-quarter the business done by "The Wagon." The paper is good. The heralds are bad and too high in price. I suppose the real cause of the picture's flop here is that Paramount did not advertise it like they did the "Wagon." Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Appeal, good. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30, 40-50. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

THAT ROYLE GIRL. (10,253 feet). Star, Carol Dempster. A D. W. Griffith production on the lines of "One Exciting Night," but has more sympathy and elaborate settings. Carol Dempster looks so slender the storm almost blows her away, but she is pretty and does her bit well. The situations are typical Griffith and the cyclone at the finish looks real. General class city of 15,000. Admission forty cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre (1,00 seats), Bellaire, Ohio.

THAT ROYLE GIRL. (10,253 feet). Star, Carol Dempster. If possible see this before you book it. I had been advised it was a great masterpiece. The rental I paid for it was too high. I spent extra money in a lot of publicity to put it over. Also placed it on the two best days, one being a holiday. After I saw it the first night I knew what to expect on the second—a complete flop. It is far from being a masterpiece; however, it is worth seeing if you pay the price for an ordinary feature. I lost money on it. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star cast. This is hardly a fair western. The action is all right but is lacking in story. Will get by if you don't raise your admission. Should be bought as a program picture. Tone, good. Sunday, optional. Appeal, eighty per cent. All classes town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Onida Theatre (225 seats), Onida, South Dakota.

VANISHING AMERICAN. (10,063 feet). Star, Richard Dix. A great picture; every patron well pleased and certainly boosted the picture. I believe that it equalled "The Pony Express." Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Admission 20-25-40. Jas D. Kennedy, Apollo Theatre (1,100 seats), Indianapolis, Indiana.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. Star, Jack Holt. An extra good attendance. The audience was interested, in fact, absorbed in the picture. A fine feature. Excellent tone. Mill and farming class town of 1,000. Admission twenty-five cents. L. E. Parsons, Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

WILD HORSE MESA. (7,164 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Played two days to good business and pleased everybody. Did much better on this than I expected from some of the other exhibitor's reports I have seen. Tone and appeal, good. Not a special. Better class town of 4,500. Admisison 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WOMANHANDLED. Star, Richard Dix. Good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. City of 10,000. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre 600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

WOMANHANDLED. Star, Richard Dix. We failed to see how this was the answer to "Manhandled" as was mentioned in the advertising, but the picture went over with a bang, as do most of Richard's; in fact, a good comedy drama, mostly comedy. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admisison 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

WOMANHANDLED. (7 reels). Star, Richard Dix. A clean, keen comedy drama of modern western ranch life. Advertising paper not so good for my town. Ran this during the holidays when business was dull. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Not a special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

48 Brings Him Up To Date

NYMAN KESSLER, Atlantic Theatre, Atlantic, Massachusetts, is one of "Our Gang" who has been pretty busy during the late few weeks—but just as soon as he could he got busy and his forty-eight reports in a bunch get him back to today's run.

"I have given each report my individual attention," Nyman writes, "and send my best wishes to your publication for its continued success." HE HELPS MAKE IT A SUCCESS, TOO!

Pathe

BLACK CYCLONE. (5,038 feet). Star, Rex, the horse. A wonderful picture that did big business and was liked by all our patrons. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

FRESHMAN. (6,683 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Best Lloyd has made yet. Pleased one hundred per cent if possible. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Farmers and business class town of 530. Goodrich Brothers, Strand Theatre (175 seats), Callao, Missouri.

FRESHMAN. (6,683 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. 'Twould' be gilding the lily to praise this. It's his best in years and a box office knockout. Play and boost it, but they'll nick you on it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Decidedly a special. Appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

CAFE IN CAIRO. (5,626 ft.). Star cast. Nothing much to this. Some of my people did not wait to see it all. Too much cafe stuff. No tone. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, 40 per cent. Town and county class, town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 ft.). Star, Syd Chaplin. The best comedy drama I have ever shown, and it will sure draw them in. W. J. Lavin, Orpheum Theatre, Conrad, Montana.

CHORUS LADY. (6,000 ft.). Star cast. This is a very good program picture. Pleased my audience very much. Tone, fine. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, 90 per cent. Town and country class, town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphia Theatre, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

FRIENDLY ENEMIES. (6,258 ft.). Stars, Weber and Fields. Good comedy drama. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, 95 per cent. Farm class, town of 1,500. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (250 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

HELL'S HIGHROAD. Star, Leatrice Joy. Leatrice Joy just made them like it. She sure does great work in "Hell's Highroad" and here is another real one. Cecil B. DeMille is sure knocking them over. Keep it up old man, I am for you. Pleased them and all went out satisfied. G. A. Peterson, Cozy Theatre, Hollis, Oklahoma.

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER. (5,326 ft.). Star cast. A good production of this classic of early rural life in Indiana, but film was in bad shape. Jane Thomas and Henry Hull do excellent work. Hannah & Martin, World Theatre, Mineral Point, Wisconsin.

SOFT SHOES. Star cast. Not as good as former Carey's,. A crook melodrama with western background. Drew good crowd, as do most all Carey's. No kicks. B. B. Benfield, Everybody's Theatre, Dillon, South Carolina.

SOFT SHOES. Star, Harry Carey. Patrons are disappointed every time I show them a Carey that isn't a western. Not much to this one. No tone. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, 40 per cent. Farmers and laboring class, town of 350. Admission 10-25. Ed. F. Cox, Princess Theatre (400 seats), Bristol, Colorado.

United Artists

POLLYANNA. Star, Mary Pickford. Very old, but so well produced that it doesn't matter. All small towns which have not played this should do so. Drew excellent business on Christmas Day. Tone and appeal, excellent. Sunday and special, yes. Farmers, town of 110. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Community House (120 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

SALLY OF THE SAWDUST. Star cast. This one is a real comedy drama and Fields sure makes good. Boys, don't pass this one by, and you can step on it as hard as you wish. It will stand all you can give it. G. A. Peterson, Cozy Theatre, Hollis, Oklahoma.

SALLY OF THE SAWDUST. Star cast. Dempster. Played two days to advanced prices and only fair attendance. It was enjoyed by those that saw it. Don't be oversold when you buy it. Special, yes. Good appeal. Better class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WILD JUSTICE. (6,000 ft.) Star, Peter the Great (dog). Good dog picture. It will please 100 per cent, as all dog pictures do. Would recommend it to all exhibitors in a small town, as it will go across for them and send them home satisfied. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, no. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission, 25 cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

Universal

MAN IN BLUE. (5,624 ft.). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. A good program offering. Rawlinson very acceptable as the Irish cop and Madge Bellamy is very good to look at. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MEDDLER. Star, William Desmond. Bill tries to imitate Mix in "The Best Bad Man" and makes an awful flop of it. He is not the character to go rip snortin' around in serape and fandangles monkey-businessing with sixteen-year-olds. He ought to follow William Farnum's example and give the tired moviegoer a rest. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, 85 per cent. All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SADDLE HAWK. Star, Hoot Gibson. Here is a good, bang-up western, and where Gibson is liked will get you money. It did here, and even where he is not known a picture like this will put him on the map for you. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Might be suitable for a special. Appeal, 100 per cent. town and country class, town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphia Theatre, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

SPOOK RANCH. Star, Hoot Gibson. Another real Gibson, good enough for anybody. King of western stars. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Working class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

Twenty-Nine

Exhibitors are busy boys, and once in a while one of "Our Gang" gets too busy to report for a while.

But not for keeps!

In they come, when there's a spare minute.

Out for a while—then IN—and emphatically i n !—with all the in-between pictures reported.

Twenty-nine dependable tips!

"Our Gang" says thank you, Henry.

SPORTING YOUTH. (6,712 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Played this on Christmas night and am sure they are talking about it yet. A picture you cannot go wrong on. Tone, fine. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, 100 per cent. Town and country class, town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

STRAIGHT THROUGH. Star, William Desmond. Just an ordinary western with nothing to recommend or absolutely pan. Will get by with don't-give-a-damn audiences. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, 70 per cent. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

TORNADO. (6,576 feet). Star, House Peters. I used one thousand circus heralds and packed the house all day. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, 100 per cent. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission 10-20. A. J. Masters, Columbus Theatre (200 seats), Lowellville, Ohio.

WHITE OUTLAW. Star, Jack Hoxie. Did not do so good at the box office, as I did not advertise it because it was a switch. If you have this picture booked get behind it and advertise. Some picture. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, 100 per cent. A. J. Masters, Columbus Theatre (200 seats), Lowellville, Ohio.

Vitagraph

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (7,000 feet). Star, John Bowers. Pleased western fans, who like good type of picture, but was not quite fast enough for those who demand "blood and thunder." Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, 75 per cent. Farmers and laboring class, town of 350. Admission 10-25. Ed. F. Cox, Princess Theatre (400 seats), Bristol, Colorado.

MAN FROM BRODNEYS. Star cast. Good program picture that is no longer new, but is, nevertheless, a good program picture. The author's name serves to bring them in, and the picture pleases. Special, no. Sunday, yes. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

Warner Bros.

AGE OF INNOCENCE. Star, Beverly Bayne. Good comments on this, and not all from the so-called highbrows, either. A good evening's entertainment, and that's all we are looking for. Tone, fair. LIMITED MAIL. Star, Monte Blue. Wonderful. The wreck was the best I ever saw. Best Monte Blue production he has ever played in. Boys, you can't go wrong on "Limited Mail." It's a knockout. Pleased them all. G. A. Peterson, Cozy Theatre, Hollis, Oklahoma.

LIMITED MAIL. Star, Monte Blue. Excellent railroad story that has a little of everything. Vera Reynolds is most appealing and other characters are in keeping. Picture leads up to about the most realistic wreck scene that has been done for the movies. Picture pleased all. General class, city of 15,000. Admission 40 cents. Ben L. Morris Temple Theatre (1,000 seats), Bellaire, Ohio.

LITTLE JOHNNY JONES. Star, Johnny Hines. A dandy. Full of pep. It kept the house in a roar of laughter. Played to a full house. Fine program. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Oil field class, town of 500. Admission 10-15. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

TIGER ROSE. Star, Leonora Ulric. Very good. A fine picture. The best ever played here since I've been here. I'd made much but weather bad. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Oil class, town of 250. Admission 10-15. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (350 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

Independents

BATTLER. (State Right). Star cast. Pretty good of its class. Will fill in nicely, as it is an action story of the lumber country. Photography very good. Tone, okay. Appeal, 80 per cent. Working class, town of 7,000. Admission 10-25. A. M. Rosenbloom, Home Theatre, Rochester, Pennsylvania.

DANGER SIGNAL. (State Rights). Star, Jane Novak. Fine picture with an excellent story, cleverly acted, with numerous comedy relief touches. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (450 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

FIGHTING COURAGE. (Elfelt). Star, Ken Maynard. A very good western with a new star who shows lots of promise and looks like Ralph Graves. Buy these right, as they are fast-moving yesterns. Tone, snappy. Appeal, 75 per cent. Mixed class, town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. A. M. Rosenbloom, Home Theatre (350 seats), Rochester, Pennsylvania.

LOVER'S OATH. (Principal Pictures). Star, Kathleen Key. A very good program picture and prints in first class shape. A good many did not like it, but some thought it a great picture. A Dollar for Your Time

In an effort to make this Quick Reference Picture Chart just as accurate as human carefulness can make it, we offer to the reader who finds MAJOR ERRORS, such as a wide discrepancy between printed footage on a feature or features and that which is a fact, One Dollar for your trouble in writing us a letter stating the correct facts.

Please do not consider errors that do not actually work a hardship on the user of this Chart—such as a misplaced parenthesis, or a minor typographical error.

What we want you to point out is the often unavoidable discrepancy between the footage that comes to us at time of reviewing a picture and the time you play it, caused by cutting down of a picture and failure of producer to give us correct facts regarding the changed footage.

We cannot secure exact footage on all Short Subjects and so the general term "1,000" or "2,000" feet is applied, broadly, one or two-reel subjects. We've tried to get exact Short Subject footage, and as soon as we can get it will print it exactly. Till then, consider the broader designation as the best we can do.

When you write us about a major error, realize, please, that it will take a little time to check up, and be patient—we will not delay sending you the dollar for your trouble any longer than is absolutely compulsory.

Play Up Your Dark Horses to Win!

EXHIBITORS ARE A darn modest crowd. They throw on two thousand watts to broadcast the names of stars and pictures coming into their theatres—but when it comes to letting the world know what they have and what they do—unhearable silence.

Yet there isn't an exhibitor worth the name who needs to hide his face in shame when they're talking about what the butcher does to hand out the best meats, what the progressive merchants are doing to bring to their community the finest in style, workmanship and material in their various lines.

Ever hear of a department store failing to sing out when they put in a new system that will make change quicker and expedite things for the customer?

Ever find an automobile agency soft-pedaling about an improvement in the cars they handle?

Ever know a clothing store forgetting to mention the new styles in clothes for the fall showing?

But the exhibitor puts in a new automatic ticket machine, or a change maker—and when a patron says, "What's this, a new stunt?" the cashier smiles sweetly, nods vaguely and lets it go at that—and the exhibitor—his public doesn't hear about it from him.

Or he instals a third projector—and the audience never knows that it's up there, waiting to replace a brother machine if there is a breakdown, ready to keep the audience entertained.

Or he outfits his ushers in snappy duds—and one tenth of one per cent. of his audience may notice it in the dark—that's all the exhibitor values his expenditure.

Sometimes Somebody Stops Snoozing

One in a blue moon a theatre remembers that there is an organ around the place somewhere and that somebody pushes some thingumbobs and pedals like a six-day bike racer—and that there's a projector cooped up somewhere (even when it's in a Projection Room) and that some fellow has to be on the job to see that the picture gets on the screen.

You've got to hand it to the Virginia Theatre management, conducting a real theatre out in Champaign, Illinois. They got out a program for the recent Fourth Anniversary—and they not only MENTIONED the equipment and personnel—but they published pictures of projectionist Elmer Sanor, of Service Department Head (ever hear an usher thus dignified before?) Delbert S. Sutton, as well as Musical Director Raymond Cook and Organist Harry Husbands, among many.

Yes, and they take the trouble to say something about the projection—the man is pictured and described as "high up above you, in a room of steel and concrete. Lined up in this room is a battery of the most modern projection machines, spotlights and stereopticon and in an adjoining room may be heard the hum of huge electric generators and motors. The walls are a maze of switches which control the flood of light upon the screen and stage."

Edward A. Snyder, who is in charge of Virginia Theatre's publicity, is evidently a man who realizes that people like to know "inside stuff." Manager A. N. Gonsior clearly backs him up and so the whole souvenier program abounds with "inside stuff" that the people will read and keep in mind—and when the respective recipients of those programs attend that theatre—they'll think the picture is good, they'll appreciate the politeness of the ushers, they'll realize what the theatre is doing—beside its efforts to procure good entertainment!—to make the patron comfortable, contented, satisfied. The next time they think of entertainment, they're sold on that house!

You've Got Some Dark Horses

Every house in the country has its projectors, its projectionist.

Some may not have an organ of the scope and capacity of the Virginia's (mentioned) Hope-Jones Wurlitzer—but there's some attempt at good music.

If you are failing to tell of the renewal of projector parts, and of the work the projectionist is accomplishing in adding value to your entertainment perfection—you're overlooking a bet.

If you neglect to mention any new installation of equipment that contributes to the betterment of the presentation, the comfort of the patron—you're overlooking a bet!

Play up your dark horses to win!

Stars may come and stars may go—but equipment and staff are always THERE!

Capitalize them!

Tune In For "Roxy's" Own Broadcast!

Man Who Makes Theatre Management a Creative Art, Talks Informally About His Crown Achievement—"The Roxy"

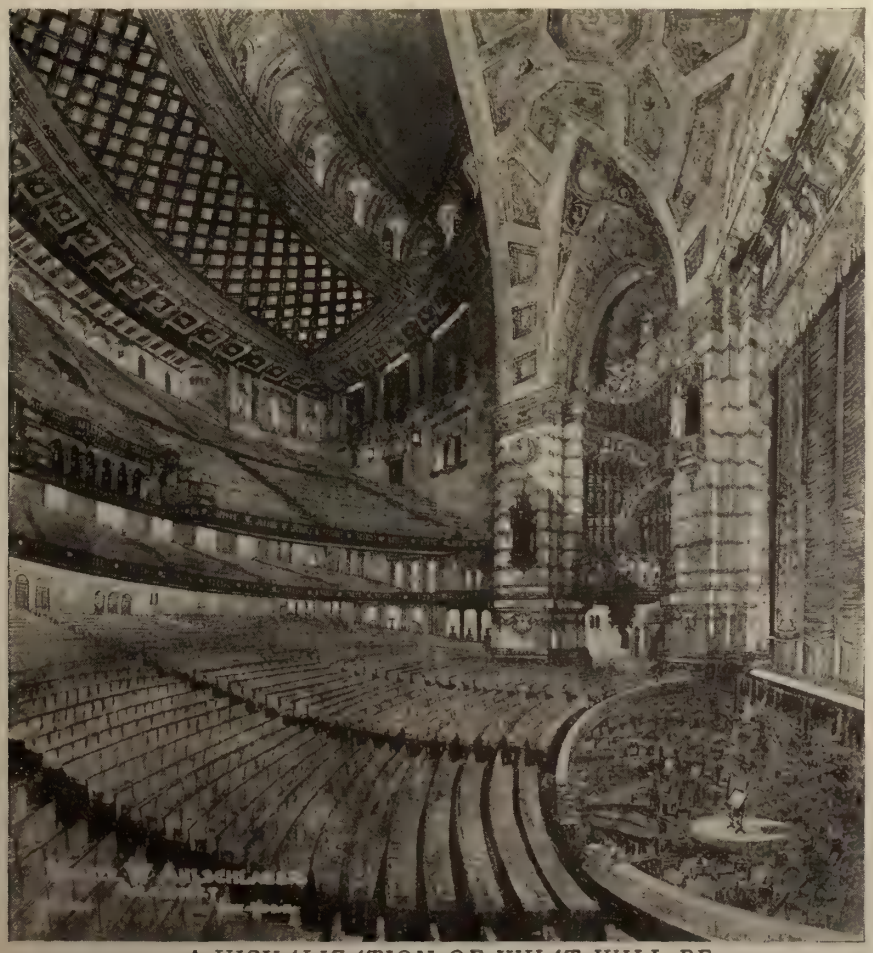
IF you've been in the picture industry over three minutes you know "Roxy"—an introduction is simply an insult to your intelligence—so there isn't any.

You probably know quite as well as you know the popular theatre creator that S. L. Rothafel is going ahead right now with the building of the world's most magnificent and lavishly planned motion picture theatre. Better let "Roxy" do the broadcasting though—everybody tunes in when he's "on the air."

The year 1926 will mark a milestone in my life, for that period will see the culmination of my life's ambition—the erection of the new Roxy Theatre, the largest in the world to be built at 50th street and Seventh avenue, New York City, with every device humanly possible for the enhancement and artistic presentation of motion pictures. With the co-operation of my associates, Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, I promise that the new Roxy Theatre will contain every innovation, every comfort, and luxury in keeping with the dignity and prestige of so ambitious an undertaking. At this time I shall not divulge any of the novelties, original lighting effects or musical offerings we plan for our new theatre. I want to show you what they will be, not talk about them, but I predict that the opening of the new Roxy Theatre in November, 1926, will strike a new note in the presentation of motion pictures and which will bring radical changes in our motion picture houses of today.

Since my resignation from the Capitol Theatre some months ago, except for the brief interim of a trip abroad, I have been devoting all my energies to this project which has been my dream for many years. Not only will the theatre itself be built on a lavish and artistic scale, but here for the first time I will have free scope for the development of my own ideas. Not only will the Roxy Theatre be notable for the individuality of the presentation of pictures but the theatre itself as planned by Walter W. Ahlschlager, the Chicago architect, will be unique among film edifices.

Built of Bedford stone terra cotta and pressed brick with elaborately stained glass windows, it will occupy a plot which fronts 290′ on north side of West 50th street and 190′ feet on south side of West 51st street and has an irregular depth of approximately 200′. The theatre itself will cover an area of 52,250 square feet rising to a height of 113′ making the Roxy Theatre the largest in the world.



A VISUALIZATION OF WHAT WILL BE

ROXY "TAKES THE AIR"

There will be a seating capacity of over 6,000 seats, 1,034 of which on the mezzanine floor will be de luxe divan reserved seats. There will be 2,850 on the lower floor and 2,110 on the balcony. The proscenium arch will be 70′ wide and 50′ high.

Back stage will be a six story building served by electric power to be used for private projection rooms, dressing rooms, club rooms, kitchen, tailoring establishment, in fact, every convenience for this "city within itself."

Consoles for a duo-organ will be installed. They will be placed high above the stage on either side of the proscenium. The organ units will be concealed from view and in back of the organs there will be chambers to contain a choir of 100 voices.

There will be another organ in the grand foyer and a third in the broadcasting studio. Two high speed elevators with combined capacity of 70 people will carry patrons to the balcony, and a marquee 440′ long will take care of people in inclement weather.

Radio broadcasting studio will contain the last word in modern equipment and will be one of the features of the Roxy Theatre. Here with my gang I will broadcast regularly.

The orchestra pit will accommodate 110 or more musicians. This will be raised and lowered by electric mechanism.

A 550′ ton mechanical ice cooling plant will be installed for the summer.

General business management of the Roxy Theatre will be in charge of W. E. Atkinson, widely known in the film business, who severed his connection with the Metro-Goldwyn Pictures organization to join us in the management of the new theatre and to become vice-president of the company. E. G. Kosch is secretary, and Irwin S. Chanin, treasurer and director.

Wallace Beery "Shooting" His Own "Productions" With Popular Eyemo

WALLACE Beery, popular star of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, is now producer, director and cameraman as well as actor. The illustration shows Wally using his newly acquired Eyemo standard automatic, a new type of portable professional camera, just recently placed on the market by the Bell & Howell Company, Chicago, pioneer manufacturers of motion picture cameras and equipment.

Mr. Beery was one of the first to put this new camera, designed to be operated without a tripod, into use; and he is enthusiastically shooting up a lot of film with it not only on location but in his travels.

Wallace and Eyemo.

The Eyemo Camera seen in the picture, equipped with a 6" Telephonto lens replacing the regular 47 m/m F 2.5 lens to assist Wally in photographing a distant object, will be his companion on his trip to Africa where he plans to go on location for his next picture shortly.

Roxy "Radios"

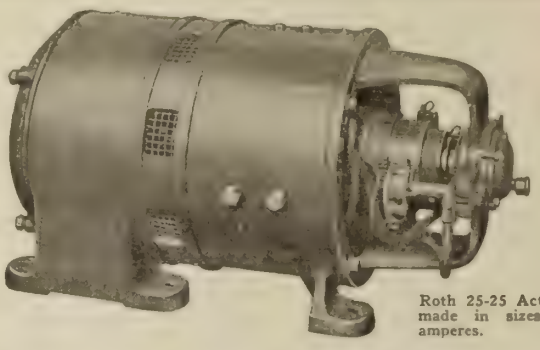
The demolition of the old carbarns on the site of the new theatre started some weeks ago and is in charge of the Chanin Construction Company, the builders of the new Roxy Theatre.

While at this writing, it seems almost impossible, I predict that the box office receipts of this new enterprise will average $400,000 gross exclusive of the war tax. The scale of prices of the theatre will be: Evenings, $1 orchestra; 60c balcony; $2 divans. Matinee prices will be 60c for orchestra, 40c for balcony and $1 for divans. We plan that the divans shall be open to yearly subscription on the plan employed by the Metropolitan Opera House.

An interesting fact of the new theatre will be the staircase from top to bottom on each side of the proscenium arch, after the style of ancient Greek theatres, making possible a series of tableaux and ballet presentations of an unusual nature.

In making plans for operating the new theatre, I am trying to do something that has never been done before. I have studied equipment both here and abroad and have combed the world for novel effects. I plan to give entertainments that will rival even grand opera. It can be done and I have no fear that "it will be over the heads of the public." Nothing is over the heads of the public. The public is always right. They're the first to recognize and appreciate what is really good and I always feel that if a number does not appeal to the public it is my fault, not the public's.



Roth 25-25 Actodector. Also made in sizes up to 300 amperes.

Why not get it?

REMARKABLY high over-all efficiency and the features of Roth design for this one class of service make possible better operating conditions with a distinct saving in the costs for power.

The Roth Actodector meets all the requirements of modern projection with smooth, flawless performance. The unit has ample capacity for any normal operating conditions and yet takes less power than other types of motor-generator sets.

The standard 25-25 Actodector supplies power for the reflector type arcs, giving a steady, uniform light on the screen, and the second arc can be started up without any other attention than closing the switch. The Actodector has ample overload capacity to carry both arcs during the change-over period.

Grauman's "Chinese" Will Have Oriental Garden for Forecourt

Oriental Atmosphere Begins with Break of Ground for Long-Heralded Hollywood Palace as Anna May Wong Wields Shovel

GIANT steam shovels are excavating for Grauman's Chinese Theatre, the long heralded entertainment place Sid Gauman is to erect in Hollywood, on the site at Hollywood Boulevard and Orchid Avenue.

Stars of the silver sheet, studio executives and distinguished citizens in all walks of life stood by with high Chinese dignitaries, while Sid Grauman introduced Miss Norma Talmadge, the star, assisted by Miss Anna May Wong, Chinese cinema celebrity, in turning the first spadeful of earth on the site, which was transformed into an Oriental garden with brilliant Chinese lanterns and banners.

Chinese actors and musicians and pretty girls of Sid Grauman's prologue to "The Big Parade" in Grauman's Egyptian theater entertained and Chinese cakes, tea and candy were served. Gigantic Chinese gongs announced the inception of the ceremonies, and when Miss Talmadge pulled the lever of a huge steam shovel starting the actual work, at the conclusion of the exercises, the event was proclaimed throughout Hollywood by thousands of popping firecrackers.

The plans, which are to be rushed to completion within a year, call for an entertainment palace presenting an Oriental garden with 40 foot walls as a forecourt, an auditorium of unique design seating 2,500, and a stage 40 by 140 feet, with a proscenium arch 65 feet high, designed to permit the staging of the largest operatic, dramatic and screen productions.

All details will be executed in the architecture of the classical Chinese dynasties.

Publix Theatres Giving Denver Another Real Cinemasterpalace

DENVER is to have a new de luxe theatre with an approximate capacity of 2,500, according to an announcement from the office of the Publix Theatres Corporation. The theatre will be erected by a building corporation which is to be formed by Claude K. Boettcher, investment banker of Denver, and which will be leased to the Mountain States Theatre Corporation and operated as one of the Publix theatres. The house will be located at 16th Street and Glenarm Place, and the contract calls for its completion on or before January 1, 1927.

The theatre will have an entrance on 16th Street, 23 feet wide and 90 feet deep. The auditorium will be 100x160 feet. Adjoining the theatre on the Glenarm Place side a six-story office building will be erected on a plot 25x160 feet. There will also be an entrance to the theatre on this street.

The entire project will represent an investment of about $1,250,000. The William N. Bowman Company, of Denver, will be the architects and Messrs. Rapp & Rapp, of Chicago, will represent the Publix Theatres Corporation as advisory architects.

New One In Boro Park

KLEINERMAN, of Exhibitors' Film Exchange, has purchased the entire block fronting on Fort Hamilton Parkway, between Fiftieth and Fifty-first streets. He plans to cover it with a 2,500 seat motion picture theatre and intimates that the equipment that goes into the new building will keep patrons doing the same.

Snappy Buying

Statuary—$20,000—Gosh!

TWENTY thousand dollars worth of art statuary for the A. H. Blank moving picture theatre being built at Twentieth and Farnam Street is already stored in the basement of the Strand Theatre. The statuary is all in Italian Renaissance design. This statuary was among the first articles bought for the proposed new theatre, even about the time the excavation was started for the foundation. John Eberson, Chicago architect, purchased the statuary for Mr. Blank. Part of it was imported from France and part from Russia.

Presentations ~ Prologues ~ Music

Edited by Colby Harriman

The Note Book

IT is really remarkable the interest which the presentation idea has created in the motion picture business. The development of the form in which a presentation and prologue has been presented is quite as phenomenal as the intense interest manifested in this particular type of program feature by leading managers and producers in every branch of the show world. To the manager who has been using such stage novelties in connection with his program the situation is not beyond his control as it is comparatively easy to adjust one's program to meet patron demands, that is, where the organization is in good working order and the rough spots in production have been levelled. To the man whose patronage demands presentations the new phase of production work may be a stumbling block, and he will prove himself cautious indeed if he gives proper attention to the necessary details in formulating a presentation program for his theatre.

Booking agencies are practically running wild with "available attractions" suitable for picture houses. There are a few agents and artists' representatives who know the limitations of the motion picture theatres, and also what constitutes a proper attraction. It is my suggestion that information be secured either from a successful producer or from an exhibitor who is consistently offering presentations and prologues, and even a reliable artist's representative may be able to act as guide and mark the danger points, which are bound to be generated if one acts hastily. Stage features can do much in building up your business but like anything else it is what you buy and how you buy it that counts, but what matters most is how you display it and how you sell it. Your stage is merely the showroom or sales counter of your attraction and there are tricks in the production of these attractions and then again, other tricks in the offering of these attractions which the manager and exhibitor must be cognizant of. Why stumble ahead blindly and then wonder why you don't make money when a brother exhibitor can take the same attraction and produce it and exploit it in a manner to make itself shown in goodly sums on the profit side. There is so much information borne out of the experience of those who have lived through the harder periods in the development of these features which is available for the asking.

RASCH BALLETS WITH STANLEYS

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that Mme. Albertina Rasch, who has produced a number of high class ballet offerings for vaudeville and picture theatres during the past two years, has contracted with the Stanley Company of America to produce one ballet a month for the motion picture theatres of the Stanley Company. The first opens at the Stanley, Philadelphia, this week and is entitled "Pompadour Ballet," including a cast of twenty-two people.

The News Galley

FELD JOINS PUBLIX HEADQUARTERS

MILTON H. FELD, who has been working with Frank L. Newman, managing director of the Metropolitan, Million Dollar and Rialto Theatres, the Los Angeles Publix houses, in the staging of elaborate presentations, is soon to be transferred to New York, to be associated with Sam Katz, head of the Publix chain. This step is a promotion for Mr. Feld whose efforts in various capacities of theatre operation have earned for him the praise of his associates and firm.

RIESENFELD'S SPECIAL PRESENTATION

DR. HUGO RIESENFELD has been engaged to stage the presentation, compile the score, and personally conduct the orchestra at the auspicious five dollar admission premiere of "Three Faces East," which will be shown in the ballroom of the Hotel Plaza, New York City, on the evening of February 3rd. The special showing of the feature under Dr. Riesenfeld's direction will be under the auspices of the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau, New York's ultra-fashionable society organization, at its Annual Carnival. Following the presentation of the picture there will be dancing and entertainment furnished by this season's society debutantes.

NEW PRESENTATION CIRCUITS

RUMORS authorized and unauthorized are flying thick and fast around New York relative to the inauguration of theatre chains or presentation circuits by some of the larger producing companies to offset and combat the competition which Publix is bound to give them throughout the United States. Fox have made a few statements as to their plans although there is a degree of mystery surrounding their operations. Universal is out to get its quota of one thousand theatres, a part of these to specialize in the better type of program and now Loew through Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is credited with an effort to organize a circuit giving a route of at least twenty weeks to attractions of established "names" and professional standing. This of course will be one of the biggest competitive angles Publix will be confronted with owing to the distribution of the Loew houses in the important centers. Fortunately for Publix it is possible to reach anamicable agreement with the Loew organization so it appears that there will be no serious conflict of attractions. An extensive building and remodelling program is being indulged in by the Loew-Metro people and the activities of moving various musical directors and other important changes foretell coming events. The Loew circuit would undoubtedly prove a healthy concern owing to its vaudeville contacts.

The Mail Bag

JOSEPH PLUNKETT, through Fred Hamlin, his director of publicity at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, has made an announcement that the "Mark Strand Frolics" will be a regular feature of the theatre's programs for the balance of the season.

Three editions of the "Frolics" have been produced this year by Mr. Plunkett, and their success, judging by the box office and the enthusiasm of the audiences, have convinced the theatre executives that the public is anxious to have such features with their film fare.

"The public doesn't realize the enormous job and the huge detail involved in staging such productions.

"First of all, it is possible to stage the 'Frolics' only because we have such a large stage. It is big enough to handle any musical comedy or other show now playing in New York, and it is truly the largest stage of any motion picture theatre in the world.

"A $25,000 addition has just been made to the lighting equipment. Along the balcony, concealed from the audience, is a battery of thirty-six spotlights. Over the orchestra is a battery of twelve. They are operated from a new control board on stage, and it is possible to get the maximum in lighting effects, artistically and otherwise.

"With the big stage and the improved lighting system, and highly trained staff it is still a huge job to put on such shows as the 'Frolics.' Why, it is like putting on a musical comedy each week. Can you imagine the job putting on a new 'Follie' every week?

"The public is expecting, and, I believe, getting entertainment of as high a standard as is provided in musical comedies and revues of Broadway today. On this week's 'Frolics' for example, there is Amelia Allen, remembered as the star dancer of a recent 'Music Box Revue.' Borah Minnevitch, the harmonica virtuoso, still playing in 'Sunny' is featured in one number. Jack Smith, the radio and record artist, who has been the sensation 'on the air' is presented in popular songs. The Six Empire Girls are featured with our ballet corps of sixteen. Mlle. Klemova, the premiere danseuse, and George Raft, the Charleston whirlwind, are featured in dance numbers.

"As to talent, we haven't touched the surface of Broadway. True, we are drawing on musical comedy, revues and the concert stage for some of the features. But in the 'Frolics' they are provided with an entirely new background. They do something different; in fact, they are fitted into various scenes or numbers of the 'Frolics.'"

Big stage productions, backed by the music of the symphony orchestra of fifty, are now recognized as a definite part of Broadway motion picture theatre entertainment, and, in Mr. Plunkett's opinion, the limit has been about reached.

A Presentation to "What Happened to Jones"

Specially Devised for Universal Pictures Corporation by Colby Harriman

(A Prologue or Presentation for a Specific Picture Published Each Week)

THIS week we are offering a presentation novelty instead of a prologue to the above named picture. Atmospheric prologues for comedies are as a rule not as advantageous to the exhibitor as a presentation which has for its theme some salient feature of the picture. This picture has prologue material but the producer will find himself confronted with the obstacle of comparison if he attempts to stage a strict prologue to this picture. The scenes which could be prologued are so complete in their detail that the limitations of a stage would suffer in comparison to the photographed scenes. This would not be the rule for all farcical comedies as there are few pictures that have the episodes so definitely worked out as we find in this comedy feature of Universal's. The presentation idea which we are suggesting is not only general in its treatment but it retains a theme which has an application to the general motive of the picture. For the program's sake we will call this presentation "The Rollicking Riddle," a Revuette in two scenes. We are not including any Ground Plot or Construction Diagrams as we believe that the descriptions of the scenes will be sufficient owing to their simplicity of construction and subsequent staging.

SCENE 1.—"The Triangular Riddle"

This scene is performed in one. The setting consists of a light colored fabric drop preferably of silver cloth with a checkered triangle cut out of felt or painted on canvass and cut out, sewn or pinned to the drop. A large interrogation point should be cut out of similar material and placed in the center of the triangle.

The drop may be flooded orange amber. The characters should be dressed in costumes which may be of crepe paper of the design and style as indicated in the costume plate below the sketch of Scene 1 hereto. The characters may do an eccentric dance number, the women introducing the action with a song. The dance routine should emulate a bit of pantomimic story to put over the idea of the conflict of hearts. Towards the finale of the dance a man dressed in evening clothes a la Denny enters, seeks the answer to the question that is puzzling him with the theme of "What will I do?" (not the song of same title). The characters point to the question point and as they exit leaving the man at center the curtain is drawn revealing Scene 2.

SCENE 2.—"The Riddler's Angle"

This scene will occupy full stage. A metallic drop hung back and if possible it should be an all-over spangle on net. A large constructed question mark covered with crumpled tinfoil is hung over a large ball placed on a raised dais, the ball forming the lower part of the interrogation mark. Balloons of various colors and size suspended above and streamers form a drape border at right and left of the stage. The scene should be highlighted with canary, orange, amber and pink overhead spots and side olivettes with a variegated color employing the "rainbow tones" on the back drop. The singer in a song which we will be very glad to secure for producers using the number carries the theme of the young man in a quandary. He is about to become married and debates on whether he will give up his sweethearts and other interests for the more complacent existence of a married man. Various characters appear out of the large ball which is part of the question mark. These characters may express the type, which their costumes indicate, in a brief dance. First comes "Games" in a costume trimmed with playing cards, poker chips, etc.; the next is "Jazz," a girl dressed in a Charleston costume; then comes "Nicotine," with large tobacco leaves forming a dress, a hat formed to appear as a cigarette and right after her entrance another character dressed to represent "Wine," wearing boots appears, and the two girls do a number. This may be carried on to the extent desired by the producer but the girl of his heart appears and finally wins him. The finale should be worked up to be a fast moving dance number with the special song of "What Will He Do?" being brought in for the finale.

"SKYLARKS"

Produced by John Murray Anderson
Rivoli Theatre
New York City.

THE fourth production offered at the Rivoli Theatre in the new Publix policy is entitled "Skylarks" a Moonlight Fantasy. It is not so much a Fantasy as it is an Extravaganza or we might say, an astral revel. Ruth Urban, and William Stamm, in the characters of Pierrot and Pierrette appear before a painted scrim bearing the futuristic design of clouds. Towards the finale of their song the lights back of the scrim are slowly brought up revealing a quartette of male singers. The scrim was taken away and the full stage set was introduced which consisted of a background painted in a vivid futuristic style to represent houses of a "topsy-turvy town."

At center was a platform with a high gabled house. The back drop was painted with futuristic clouds and a moon. Down right and left was a large cut out figure resembling "Punch" character with movable hands. These hands work up and down during the first part of the action.

The action introduced "Leonora's Jewels" the Ballet Corps, several unprogrammed principals who did dance specialties, and three clever girls who perform some dancing feats which were very good. For the finale "The Six Pashas" tumblers and acrobats were introduced. The center house was drawn apart revealing the six men in a "mount." The men were garbed in dark blue metallic cloth costumes. They did a whirlwind acrobatic turn which, coupled with the noisy plugging of the ensemble brought the act to a loudly applauded finale. The costumes of all characters with the exception of the male dancer were very attractive and made up for the lack of proper scenic investiture.

It is to be regretted that the operation of the various scenic units has not been given the same careful attention that was accorded the costuming and the routine. In all of the productions so far there has been an apparent laxity either in operation or construction, and in many instances the carelessness has been so apparent as to cause audience comment and detract from the action. With the opportunities afforded the Production Department to have everything correct in the presentation of the number, it is rather difficult to overlook these irregularities. However, Mr. Anderson is to be congratulated on his selection of artists as the routine is good.

"PALM BEACH FROLICS"

Produced by Shaw and DeRosa
Colony Theatre, New York City

SYNCOPATION is still carrying on at this theatre. The stage attraction in connection with the showing of "The Skyrocket" (Associated Exhibitors, Inc.) is of the revue-club type ensconced in a setting typical of the w. k. southern resort.

Two large Spanish gate posts with a low connecting stucco wall, painted buff, are up center occupying one-third of the lineal stage space. At right is a set house, Spanish style, a flat with door placed on an oblique, the return extending off. At left is another Spanish house unit. A flat with an archway, backing and return. Canopy awnings of white material with wide blue stripes are attached over doorways of both houses. A painted cutout drop of Sago palms with sapling trunks is hung back of the houses and stone set piece center. This drop extends across stage. A blue sky drop is used to back. Set palm trees of proper height are used to dress the spaces up right and left center between the stone piece and the set houses. Vines, small potted palms and foliage are artistically used about the set. Postern lamps surmount the stone gate posts. Bracket art lanterns are hung on the casings of the doorway left with two torchieres right and left of the doorway at right. A painted foliage border bearing small flowers are hung in the foreground to mast. Wicker furniture is used. A typical "club" routine is followed. Jimmy Carr and his orchestra furnish the major part of the program. The Locust Sisters, quartette, sing two songs. Norman Gallo, a clever dancer, does two specialties well. The programme routine has been changed, eliminating the "The Dancing Skyrockets" and a singer. The present routine is well-balanced.

CAPITOL THEATRE PRESENTATIONS

Produced by Maj. Bowes
Capitol Theatre
New York City

FOUR presentation units are offered on the program with "Dance Madness" (M-G-M) as the feature picture. Three of the four subjects are exquisite in setting and treatment. The first presnts Erik Bye, Norwegian baritone, singing "Evening Star" from "Tannhauser" (Wagner) Singer dressed in a costume typical of the character in the opera is discovered seated on a tree stump thrumming a small harp. Back of him is a large tree trunk apparently three feet in diameter, the top being masked with a tree top border, cutout branches in silhouette. A low ground row extends from the tree trunk across stage towards left. The background is a gray blue-green sky in which a steel blue star is hung at center. Great depth was secured with the lighting treatment and at times one could almost decipher distant mountainous peaks. The entire stage setting which was subdued in tone of a chill night on a mountainous prominence. Singer was highlighted by side spots with blue medium.

The second number of our selection was a charming tropic silhouette background for Doris Niles' interpretation of "Anitra's Dance" from the Peer Gynt suite (Grieg.) A cut drop of palm trees narrow trunks fern-like fronds in graceful curves is hung in two against an orange toned sky punctured with a huge red setting sun. The setting was ideal for the exotic interpretation Miss Niles gave this delightful bit of the famed Suite. Miss Niles consistently proves that an interpretive dancer is of more value to a theatre than a straight ballerina, the reason being that her character dances mean something.

The third unit entitled "Ballet of the Snow" is perhaps one of the most charming presentations we have ever seen at this theatre. It is different and again proves as audience plaudits were heeded that the right type of subject matter gets over in a strict presentation program. The setting depicts a section of a forest in the winter time. A massive tree trunk is placed center with a fork of two huge limbs extending upwards. The tree is painted a dull gray with snow painted in the crotch and caught in a line down its windward side. The background is a cut drop of winter trees in silhouette against a blue green sky. A snow effect is worked on the background. The Capitol Ballet is augmented to include twelve dancers who are clad in white ballet costumes of shimmering material fur-trimmed, presenting a good winter ballet effect. After the introductory routine Hilda Butsova appears from inside the huge tree at center and does an artistic solo dance blending with the ballet finale. The dances in white are highlighted from the sides with light green, canary green and steel blue spots. The effect of a cold winter landscape is achieved by the artistic lighting of the set.

The fourth number is a unit entitled "Neapolitan Nights" introducing Celia Turrill and William Robyn in a group of Venetian songs. A typical Venetian setting and costumes.

Better Projection Pays

Bluebook School Answers No. 422 and 423

Question No. 422:

"Conditions are, a screen area of 18x13½ feet, even distribution of light thereon and level projection. Photometer test shows a total of 4,860 lumens of light on the screen surface as a whole. Test plate of photometer same kind of surface as screen No. 1, table 12, page 260 of Bluebook. Assume floor to be level. Ignore difference between height of eyes of different persons and center of screen.

"What would be the brilliancy of center of screen, in candle power, to the persons walking down a side aisle which runs parallel to the center line of the screen, and is forty feet from it, as the following angles to the center of the screen: 20, 30, 40, 50, 60 and 70 degrees, provided a 27 screen surface be used for the experiment?"

For your information I will say that a No. 27 surface is an Idealite, Grade 2, screen, the data concerning which may be had from tables 12 and 14, pages 260 and 263 of the Bluebook.

Question No. 423—What is a lumen." What is the meaning of the term? What does it represent?

THIS is the "answer" to question No. 422, submitted by John Griffith, Ansonia, Connecticut, and for the first time in the almost sixteen years I have edited this department I must admit that I am just plain stuck. I thought this was a fairly simple matter until I sent the answer of Brother Griffith to Mr. L. A. Jones, of the Eastman Research Laboratories—a man whose knowledge of light action stands second to very few men—and received his answer. Then I started scratching gravel, but the more I dug the more complicated things seemed to become.

Finally I wrote Mr. Jones again, asking, in effect, this question: "You say that brightness is in nowise affected by distance. If that is true, then please tell us WHY it is true?"

Jones Gives Explanation In Second Letter

Mr. Jones offers explanation of this point in his second letter. Meanwhile while while waiting receipt of Mr. Jones' second letter I went over to Harrison, New Jersey (Oh I assure you this infernal question has had the Editor earning his salary—and then some), and had a long conference with John A. Summers and Rovert S. Burnap, both men well versed in matters of this sort. I showed them Mr. Jones' first letter, which they both declared to be a masterly handling of a very difficult matter—difficult of explanation—and that it could hardly have been better dealt with.

Mr. Summers offered a simple example which did more than anything else to convince me that Mr. Jones was right and Griffith (and myself) wrong—for I had up to that time sided with John, believing that it was impossible that the inverse square law, perhaps in modified form, due to screen area, did not apply—than anything else. Mr. Summers said: "Did you ever consider the example of a star. Applying the inverse square law, you will realize that an almost inconceivably minute amount of light from even the merest star enters the eye, but for all that, on clear nights, or at high altitudes where the air is thin it appears as brilliant and sparkling."

Gentlemen, there seemed no getting past that fact! It was true, and I knew it was true. The actual light which enters the eye from a star is understandably small, yet, as I have often seen in desert countries, where the air usually is very clear, they appear amazingly bright.

Arrived at What Was Thought a Solution

Prior to the Harrison conference I had, all by my lonesome, arrived at what I thought was a solution of the whole matter. I was patting myself on the back for my cleverness, and then along comes Harrison, the star example and Jones' second letter and upset all my individually conducted arguments and conclusions. My idea was that the effect of distance was greatly modified by the fact that, whereas Griffith had only considered one unit of screen area in his question and answer, there were innumerable other units of screen area, each of which was reflecting additional light into the eye. My process of argument arrived at the answer that while the inverse square law would not apply as to one point of a screen having area, it would apply to the screen as a whole, using the total of its illumination (20 lumens in this case) as a basis for calculation.

I merely set this forth to show that, however much in error I may have been, I have not been idle in the matter. Mr. Jones suggests that the difficulty may be partly one of a misunderstanding of terms, but I can hardly agree, because it seems to me it is plain enough that what John has in mind is the actual effect upon the human eye of certain screen brightness at the points named.

Griffith Not to Be Blamed or Censured

Nor is Brother Griffith to be in any degree blamed or censured if he is in error in this particular matter—and I now am convinced he is. So far as I can see and understand, he picked out the one most difficult possible thing in all projection optics. But IT IS PROJECTION OPTICS, nevertheless, and John has made a start which may eventually bring us all to a better understanding of the entire matter—which certainly is one which projectionists MUST understand, in order to talk intelligently on so important a thing.

Also this illustrates the utter absurdity of those who argue that there is nothing to motion picture projection except "operating a mechanism." Let those who hold such ideas try to take a fall out of this Projection optics problem.

I have absolutely no apology for the space this matter is taking. I want to compliment Brother Griffith for having really "started something," though he has made this editor work like a galley slave, only to run into the conclusion that we were all wrong, but the further conclusion that before this matter is finally settled for good, we shall all have a far better understanding of some things we ought all to understand.

Again I say: Don't blame Griffith, or make yourself absurd by trying to sneer at him for having been wrong. The reason men who do such a thing as that are themselves wrong so few times, is that they seldom or never tackle anything but the most simple, A B C problems.

Hard Matter to Either Explain or Understand

This is an exceedingly hard matter to either explain or understand. Even the technical terms involved are difficult to grasp and apply by any other than the trained mind. Take "Brightness" for example. The definition as set forth in "Nomenclature and Photometric Standards of the Illumination Engineering Society," reads: "Brightness in a given direction of a surface emitting light is the quotient of the luminous intensity measured in that direction by the area of this surface projected on a plane perpendicular to the direction considered."

one of the very simple, easily understood definitions contained in the I. E. S. list.

And now, gentlemen, I am going to dispose of this matter, for this issue anyhow, by publishing both Mr. Jones' letters and a reply to the question by Brother R. Kuester, Brooklyn, whose reply is to all intents and purposes indentical with that of Brother Griffith, only he has put it in somewhat better form.

I am convinced that Griffith is in error, and with him all of us who have reasoned as he has reasoned in this matter. I might perhaps better add that the mere fact that one cannot see the picture so well at one hundred or more feet as one can at a less distance in nowise affects the argument, since the eye at that distance is unable to see the smaller details of the image with ease. I have personally made the experiment of standing within fifty feet of the Capitol screen, and then going back as far as I could get, which is a very great viewing distance as theatres go, and was obliged to admit to myself that I saw little or no affect, insofar as had to do with screen brightness, by the two positions, though much of the finer details of the screen image was lost at the longer viewing distance. Small things were too small to be visible at that distance.

Can Method Be Applied to Distant Object?

In closing my own remarks I direct your attention to Mr. Jones' explanation of the reason for unchanged brightness in his second letter, but can we apply that to an object so tremendously distant as a star? Certainly the image would only "cover" a point on the retina of the eye of inconceivable smallness.

Well, anyhow, I again say that I don't care if this matter occupies the entire department for this week. No apologies whatsoever are offered for its length. Also I might add that only three men on the entire West Coast had the nerve to tackle the question, and only two on the East Coast. Here is the list: John Griffith, Ansonia, Conn.; R. Keuster, Brooklyn, N. Y.; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Messrs. Thoreau, Clark and Richards, Vancouver, B. C.; Walter Munn, Iron Mountain, Michigan; W. J. Neff, Hollywood, California; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota, and Allan Gengenbeck, New Orleans, Louisiana. That is the list. All followed the general lines laid down by Brother Keuster, though differing somewhat in details and results.

Here is what Brother Keuster has to say:

Friend Richardson: I note that you challenge the projectionists of the country to answer questions 422 and 423. I submit my own answer in order to find out just how far my views coincide with those of others, wishing to have it understood that I know very little about such matters, and only set forth things as they appear to me.

First, I shall place my answer to question 423 ahead of my answer to question 422, which seems right and proper, since the answer to the first depends somewhat upon the answer to the latter.

In order to know just what a lumen is we must first know the exact meaning of the term candle power, because around this term the other definitions are built.

Note—I shall omit Brother Keuster's definition, and substitute the definition of "Lumen" taken direct from the Illuminating Engineering Standards and Photometric Standards.—Ed.

"Lumen: The unit of luminous flux is the lumen. It is equal to the flux emitted in a unit solid angle by a uniform point source of one international candle.

"International Candle: The unit of luminous intensity is the international candle, such as resulted from agreements effected between the three National Standardizing Laboratories (The Laboratoire Central d'-Electricite in Paris, the National Physical Laboratory in Teddington and the Bureau of Standards, in Washington) of France, Great Britain and the United States of America in 1909. This unit has since then been maintained by means of incandescent electric lamps in these laboratories which continue to be entrusted with its maintenance."

Presumably, though I have been unable to find data in substantiation of this, the international candle is based on the standard sperm candle 7/8 of an inch in diameter, consuming 120 grains per hour. Also presumably the "unit solid angle" is one whose base area is one square foot at one foot of distance from its apex, though it does not say so.

Having an understanding of just what the term "candle power" means, let us establish an imaginary circle one foot in diameter, or better yet, cut a disc from paper of that size, placing this disc or imaginary circle exactly one foot from our standard candle light source, with its center on a horizontal plane with same, also locating it perpendicular to the horizontal plane.

If this were drawn out on paper it would represent a cone, its apex at the center of the candle flame and the area of the paper disc would be the base of the cone.

If such a cone be filled with water, then the quantity would be measureable as so many pints, quarts or gallons. In the case of light, the cone is filled with it, and the quantity of light flux contained in an imaginary cone of the dimensions set forth, viz., one foot from base to apex, with a base one foot in diameter, would be one lumen, or as the definition puts it: "a lumen is the standard of luminous flux, being the light sent out from a unit source through a unit solid angle."

In the above, the amount of illumination incident upon the entire surface of the disc representing the base of the cone would be one candle foot, or one "foot candle."

Note: This is apparently incorrect, because the foot candle is the illumination incident upon one square foot of surface under the condition described by Brother Keuster, and a circle one foot in diameter lacks considerable of having one square foot area. The definition taken from Illuminating Engineering Nomenclature and Photometric Standards. Approved April 29, 1925, page 6, reads: Foot-candle: Taking the foot, as a unit of length, the unit of illumination is the lumen per square foot; it is known as the Foot-candle."—Editor.

From this we may see that the intensity of any light source would be measured in candle power, while the amount of light flux would be measured in lumens, and the illumination produced upon any given surface at a given distance would be measured in foot candles, or candle feet.

From this definition I am led to believe that Brother Griffith has not used correct terms in his question, though I hope he is right and I am wrong.

And now to answer question 422. The catch in it occurs in the first few words. "What would be the brilliancy of the center of the screen in candle power to a person, etc."

It seems to me that to the human eye brightness is independent of viewing distance when using such a small distance as say 150 feet and a fair size of illuminated screen area, provided the person remain at a fixed angle to the center of the screen, though by this I do not mean that light reflected from a screen surface does not decrease with distance, because as we all know, light intensity does decrease inversely with the square of the distance.

If this inverse square law were true as to the human eye, the viewing distance would have to be very short, because if a person sat 175 feet from the screen, the picture would be very dim. Yet I believe the best seats in any ordinary dimensioned theatre are those near the rear of the auditorium, always provided they be at the proper angle to the screen center.

If, however, Brother Griffith means to calculate the reflected light from the screen by an instrument such as a photometer, at various angles, we could readily figure this out by consulting tables 12, 13 and 14, pages 260, 261 and 262 of the Bluebook, and then applying the inverse square law.

The size of the screen is 18x13½ feet, or a total of 243 square feet, and if the total illumination of this surface be 4,860 lumens, then we would have 4,860 divided by 243 equals 20 lumens, reflected from every square foot. Since the question refers to the center of the screen only, we take the amount reflicted from one square foot at the screen center for the purpose of calculation.

Consulting table 13, page 161 of Bluebook, we find that the No. 1 screen surface used for photometric test is used as 100 per cent. reflecting power when standing directly in front of it, with negligible difference for angles. Using this as 100 per cent., we can figure the amount of light reflected in different angles from the screen surfaces in table 12, page 260 of Bluebook, by consulting tables 13 and 14 further along.

Consulting table 14 we find what percentage of light is reflected from screen No. 27 at different angles as compared to screen No. 1. At an angle of 20 degrees 96.3 per cent. of the light is reflected, or .936x20=18.72 lumens.

However, we must also consider the inverse square law. If we were to make a working drawings, to scale, with the side aisles 40 feet from the center of the screen, as per Griffith's question, and the photometer were placed in the aisle at a 20 degree angle, it would be 117 feet from the center of the screen. At a 30 degree angle it would be 81 feet from the screen center, at 40 degrees only 63 feet, at 50 degree angle 53 feet, at a 60 degree angle 46 feet and at a 70 degree angle it would be only 43 feet from the screen center.

To measure the amount of light in the aisle at a 20 degree angle we would have an example like this: 20 lumens x .936 (percentage of light reflected at that angle) ÷ 117 squared (square of the distance) = .0013 + foot candles falling upon a surface at 20 degrees.

Note: Brother Keuster then proceeds to work out all the values at the various points, which he finds to be as follows: 30 degrees, .0023, at 40 degrees, .0032 at 50 degrees, .0045, at 60 degrees, .0048 and at 70 degrees, .0050, all values in foot candles and all followed by a plus sign, meaning that the actual value is a fraction more than the exact figure given.

He then proceeds:

Of course, these figures only apply to a screen having one square foot and upon which the flux of 20 lumens of light is incident. If entire screen be considered, and each square foot be equally illuminated, then the readings would be greater than if we multiplied the number of square feet of screen by the number of foot candles per square foot, because light from all parts of the screen would reach the photometer, and thus make the reading higher.

The part of the answer which may seem queer is that the amount of reflected illumination is higher at 70 degrees than at 20 degrees, while to the human eyes the picture is more dim at 70 than at 20 degrees angle.

This is for the reason that the photometer is moved nearer the screen as the angle increases.

There, friend Richardson, is my reply to the most interesting question I have attempted to answer in a long, long while.

Before passing on to the letters of Mr. Jones let me call your attention to the fact that the foregoing is the product of a motion picture projectionist, and even though the reasoning be based in error, still I think we may all feel a bit gratified that the profession contains men able to reason thus clearly and to handle such a matter in such a manner. Brother Keuster has dealt with the thing exactly as I would have done had I answered the question immediately after its receipt. If Griffith still stands by his guns, and insists that he is right, then he shall have ample opportunity to prove his contention, but I now think he is in error. Be that as it may, however, he has done a very real service in bringing this phase of motion picture projection optics before us all in this way.

Knowing of no man better versed in things of this kind than L. A. Jones, I sent Mr. Griffith's reply, when received, to him, together with the question as printed, asking from him an opinion, which he was good enough to send me, as follows:

Dear Mr. Richardson: I received your letter yesterday containing Mr. Griffith's answer to his own question. If my interpretation of Mr. Griffith's question is correct his own answer is not right. Apparently he is under the impression that the brightness, or brilliance as it is termed by him, of a surface is dependent upon the distance between the observer and the suface in question. This is not the case. The brightness of any surface is independent of the distance between the surface and the observer. In the first paragraph of his question the statement that "test plate of photometer same kind of surface as screen No. 1, table 12, page 260 of Bluebook" is irrelevant to the matter. The readings of a properly calibrated illuminometer to measure illumination, lumens, are in no way dependent upon the reflecting power of the test plate.

Brilliancy Expressed in Candle Power

In the second paragraph of his question he refers to the brilliancy expressed in candle power. I can only assume that by the word "brilliancy" he means brightness. Brightness can not be expressed in candle power, since candle power is a unit of luminous intensity. Brightness of a surface is defined as the luminous intensity per unit of projected area. It may be expressed in several different units, such as candles per square centimeter of projected area, candles per square inch of projected area, or in lamberts, the lambert being defined as the average brightness of a surface emitting or reflecting one lumen per sq. cm. Brightness may also be expressed in terms of apparent foot candles and I believe this method of expressing it is perhaps the most easily visualized and understood by the practical man familiar with illumination units and the significance of the foot candle. The apparent foot candle is defined as the brightness of a perfectly reflecting and diffusing surface on which the illumination is one foot candle. A perfectly diffusing surface having a reflection factor of .5 (50%) on which the illumination is one foot candle, would have a brightness of .5 apparent foot candles.

The values of reflection factors at various angles of observation for screen No. 27 (table 14, page 263, Handbook of Projection) are only relative. They are expressed in terms of the reflection factor of magnesium carbonate (angles of illumination and observation normal to the surface) taken as 1.00 (100%).

Now to compute from a known value of illumination incident on a surface the resulting surface brightness it is necessary to know the absolute reflection factor of that surface. The commonly accepted value of absolute reflection factor for magnesium carbonate is .98 (98 per cent.). The reflection factor of magnesium carbonate varies somewhat with the angle of observation, but for all practical purposes it may be assumed to be independent of the angle of observation. Hence, the reflection factor of our reference standard as used may be taken as .98. On the basis of these definitions the solution of the problem is as follows:

Total lumens incident on the screen=4860
Area of screen (18x13.5)=243
Lumens per square foot (4860/243)=20
Screen illumination=20 foot candles.

If now our reference standard surface (magnesium carbonate) be placed in the screen plane on the axis of projection, the illumination incident thereon will be 20 foot candles. This surface having an absolute reflection factor of .98 will therefore have a brightness of 20x.98=19.6 apparent foot candles.

Now referring to table 14, the values of reflection factor for screen No. 27 at the various angles are found to be as tabulated in the following table in the column designated as R_s.

		Brightness
		B_r	B_s	L_s
		Apparent Foot Candles	Apparent Foot Candles	Milli Lamberts
Angle	R_s
0 ...	1.42	19.6	27.8	29.9
20 ...	.936	19.6	18.3	19.7
30 ...	.764	19.6	14.9	16.0
40 ...	.639	19.6	12.5	13.5
50 ...	.556	19.6	10.9	11.7
60 ...	.508	19.6	9.9	10.6
70 ...	.468	19.6	9.2	9.9

Multiplying each of these by the brightness of the reference standard (B_r) the values shown in the column B_s (brightness of screen) are obtained. These values are apparent foot candles, which is our chosen brightness unit. If it be desired to convert these values into terms of milli lamberts this can be done by multiplying each value by the conversion factor 1.076 and we have the values shown in the column L_s.

Griffith Continually Introduces Square of Distance

The points in the aisle specified in the question at which the angles are as stated are shown by the points marked A, B, C, etc. on the enclosed sketch. The distance of these points from the screen plane are as indicated by the numbers 15 ft., 24 ft., 34 ft., etc.

Mr. Griffith in his solution has continually introduced the square of the distance of the observer from the screen. I wish to again emphasize that this has nothing whatever to do with screen brightness. The form of computation used by Mr. Griffith would indicate that he is attempting to compute the illumination incident upon a surface when placed at various distances, and at various angles from the screen. But his computation for this is not correct, because he is considering only one square foot of the screen rather than the entire screen area. His comment at the bottom of the sheet on which he has tabulated his values is incorrect. Moreover his comment at the side of this sheet "Note that the screen is brighter from the front side seats than the back center seats" is absolutely incorrect. Screen brightness is a function of the angle of observation, and not of the distance.

I have tried to make this answer as clear as possible. Illumination and brightness computation are unavoidably complicated and confusing.

Yours very truly,
LOYD A. JONES,
Physics Department Research Laboratory.

From the foregoing you will see the necessity for the use of exactly correct terms when dealing with matters of this kind, and as I have already intimated, and partially shown, this is in itself no easy matter.

Inverse Square Law Worked in Modified Form

I studied Mr. Jones' letter very carefully with faith in the proposition that the inverse square law MUST and did apply, at least in modified form. I then wrote Mr. Jones again asking him, in effect, this question: If the inverse law does not apply, and viewing distance does not affect brightness, then WHY is this so?

To this Mr. Jones was kind enough to take time to prepare the following explanation. I commend it to your very careful study and consideration.

Jones' second letter follows:

Dear Mr. Richardson: It is somewhat difficult to answer your letter of Jan. 1. Again it is a question of whether or not we are talking about the same thing. As I stated in my last letter, I interpreted Mr. Griffith's letter to refer to the brightness of the screen as seen by an observer from various positions. In my last letter I attempted to define clearly and to distinguish between illumination (which is expressed in foot candles), luminous intensity (which is expressed in candle power), brightness (which is expressed in candles per unit area or apparent foot candles) and brilliance, which is the subjective impression resulting from the action of radiant energy on the retina. Of these quantities, illumination, luminous intensity, and brightness are purely physical and can be measured and specified by purely physical and objective methods, and are entirely independent of the visual mechanism.

Referring to the enclosed Fig 1, let S be a source of radiation and O a surface illuminated by the source S, the distance between the source and surface being designated as d. Now the illumination on the surface O resulting from the source S can be computed by the formula, illumination (E) is equal to the candle power (luminous intensity) of the source, I, divided by the square of the distance, d.

If d be expressed in feet then the illumination is given to foot candles. The brightness of the surface O depends upon its reflection characteristics and is defined as the luminous intensity reflected (or emitted) per unit of projected area. It is obvious that this brightness according to the above definition, which is the universally accepted definition, is absolutely independent of the distance between the screen and the observer, and as a matter of fact does not depend in any way upon the visual mechanism of the observer, being a purely physical or objective quantity.

SITUATIONS WANTED

PROJECTIONIST of wide city experience seeks position in small town at once. Prefer states of New Jersey, New York or Pennsylvania. Willing to accept moderate salary. Highest kind of references; eight years with present employer. Write me and I will give you more details about myself. Address CHIEF, Moving Picture World, New York City.

I assume that your misunderstanding of my previous letter hinges largely on the question of brilliance. Apparently Mr. Griffith thinks that the brilliance of the screen as observed depends upon the distance separating the screen and the observer, and you agree with him. I can assure you you are both wrong in this, since it is one of the fundamental laws of physical optics that the brilliance of the surface is independent of the distance at which it is seen.

I shall try to demonstrate the reason for this by reference to Fig. 2. Let O represent a surface of unit area, its brightness being such that the iris diaphragm D of the eye collects one lumen of the luminous flux. This flux is concentrated on the retina in the image 1^1 which with the dimension as shown (magnification 1/4) has an area of 1/16 that of the object, hence the luminous flux density in the image is 16 lumens per unit area.

Now in case B the distance between the eye and the object is twice as great as in case A. The object again is of unit area and has the same brightness as the object in case A. The iris diaphragm of the eye has the same diameter, and hence the same area as in case A, but being twice as far away from the object it collects only 1/4 ($1/2^2$) as much luminous that one lumen passed into the eye and hence in this case 1/4 lumen will enter. The magnification in case B is 1/8, hence the image in case B is smaller than the image I^1 in case flux as in case A. We assumed in case A A. The magnification being one-half as great, the linear dimensions of I^1 (case B) are one-half the linear dimensions of I^1 in case A, or its area is 1/4. The total luminous flux entering the eye is also one-quarter as much as in case A, hence the luminous flux density incident on the retina is identical in the two cases, and therefore the brilliance is identical.

I do not know whether this will make the matter clear to you or not, but I really do not know how to explain more completely.

Yours very truly,
LOYD A. JONES.

Who Would Say Statements Are in Error

There, gentlemen, go to it! If Brother Griffith or any one else can show that Mr. Jones' statements and conclusions are in error he is welcome to the job, but that star example sticks in my mind; also whereas I have great confidence in Brother Griffith, because up to now he has invariably come out on top, proving his contentions to be right without exception, so far as I can remember, still any man can be in error sometimes, and that he is is no cloud upon his record either, because those who wander out into new fields will occasionally get temporarily lost. It is the self-satisfied BOOB who wanders not one inch from the beaten track—the old, rutty road—who never is wrong, except all the time. It is he who sneers at the pioneers who blaze the path which eventually become the new and better one which Mr. Lazy Nincompoop may travel in with ease.

And to the projectionist this most emphatically is a new road, and a most difficult one to travel while it is new. All honor to John Griffith and to those others who at least did the best they knew—which was as good as I knew anyhow—and tried to answer the question. And by the way, this small list did NOT include a single one of the various men who hold positions of authority in projection—not one! Can it be that they were like the rest of us, and did not know how—and were AFRAID to expose their—lack of knowledge?

Richardson's Bluebook on Projection will Help in Protecting the Print

To Set Him Straight

I FIND it necessary about every so often (and that is pretty often, too) to AGAIN set forth certain matters. This is because of the new men who constantly are entering the field, who of course start right smack where you and I and all the rest of us started just a few years ago.

Here is a letter from a small town in that grand old state of Missouri—the state where General Pershing and this editor went to school together in that red brick house in Laclede, Missouri, where I lived some several years in the days when moustaches were to me merely a thing to envy. This good man wants-to-be-a-brother-and-probably-will-some-day-too, says:

I take the liberty of asking you where I can go to school to learn the art of motion picture projection. I operate a picture show here in this small town. Want to leave and go to school somewhere where I can learn to be an operator and projectionist. How long would or should it take, under normal conditions? I have operated a Powers projector more than two years and understand the mechanism perfectly.

However, I want to get me a position in some city theatre as an operator or projectionist, and to join the union. What sort of examination will I have to pass to join the union? Is there a school in St. Louis, Missouri? If there is will you send me its address?

I know of no such school in St. Louis. If I did, I most emphatically would NOT send you its address. Up to this time I know of no "school" of the kind you seek which does anything more than teach you the answers to a lot of supposed-to-be examination questions, teach you how to thread up a projector, get it going and maintain some sort of light on the screen and a few other things. Some of them guarantee you a position when you have graduated. They make good, too, but the "student" invariably gets fired before the first day is over—and the regular theatre projectionist, who has read the paper while waiting to resume his duties, goes back on the job until the next student "graduates" and comes to take the "job." The school, you see, guarantees the JOB, but not that the graduate will be able to hold it for even so much as an hour.

Mixture of Terms Bit Amusing

Your mixture of terms is a bit amusing. You are "operating a picture show." Am I to assume by that that you own or run the theatre? You want to learn to be an "operator or projectionist." You cannot possibly be a projectionist without also being an operator. You are an "operator" now because you operate a Powers mechanism. A projectionist is an operator because he operates projectors, BUT he is something very much more than that, because he is not only a machine operator, but also he is a MOTION PICTURE PROJECTIONIST, which takes in very, very much more than merely "operating a machine."

My friend, the road to excellence is hard. There is no excellence in anything without great labor. You want to get a position as projectionist in a city theatre and to join the union. Do you think a "school" would enable you to do that? Every city of any considerable size in all this broad land is organized—the motion picture projectionists therein are organized, I mean—and the union would have something to say about you taking a position in one of the theatres and joining the union.

First of all, you must work within the jurisdiction of a union for a term of six months before you are eligible to join it, and at the end of that period the union may or may not admit you. What examination you would be required to pass depends entirely upon the intelligence and ability of the local examining committee. There are committees which give a really creditable examination, covering all branches of projection, while other committees seem to think that if a man can assemble and adjust a partially disassembled projector mechanism he is, perforce, competent, which is, of course, rank nonsense.

Here is the only real advice I could give you. It will be eminently unwelcome but it is real advice nevertheless. Go to the city you wish to work in. Get a job at something—in a theatre if you can, but that won't matter much. Then make it your business to get acquainted with operators and motion picture projectionists. Don't try to "crash the gate." Take your time but get acquainted unobtrusively.

Beyond that point I could not possibly advise you. It all depends upon circumstances. Is there no fair sized town, having two or three theatres, somewhere near you? If there is I would visit it, hunt up the theatre managers and make application for a job. Possibly the place is unorganized. Get a job there and MAKE GOOD—better than the others in the town. Get a Bluebook and study as you work. NEVER BE SATISFIED. The moment you think your work is good enough, right there you settle back and STOP.

Winning Out Here and There

IT is still so seldom that an exhibitor or theatre manager plays up projection to the public, or seems to appreciate the fact that high grade projection really is an asset of value, that when one does, it deserves comment.

In the city of Hull, Province of Quebec, just across the Hull river from Ottawa, the capital city of Canada, is a large, beautiful theatre, the Laurier. It is owned and operated by Donat Paquin, who, in his recent newspaper advertising, has set forth the statement: "We have the best projection in Canada."

He has made this statement as an inducement to the public of Hull to patronize the Laurier. Mr. Paquin has overhauled, remodeled and re-equipped the Laurier during the past summer. The re-equipment included quite a bit of projection equipment, which enables the projectionist to give the results Mr. Panquin boasts of.

When the time comes that more exhibitors recognize the inexpediency of reducing the amusement value of the features they pay big money for by poor projection, or projection which is not high grade, it will be a day for rejoicing, because then the production which has in itself one hundred per cent. in amusement value possibilities, will be placed before the audiences at its full worth. My compliments to exhibitor Donat Paquin.

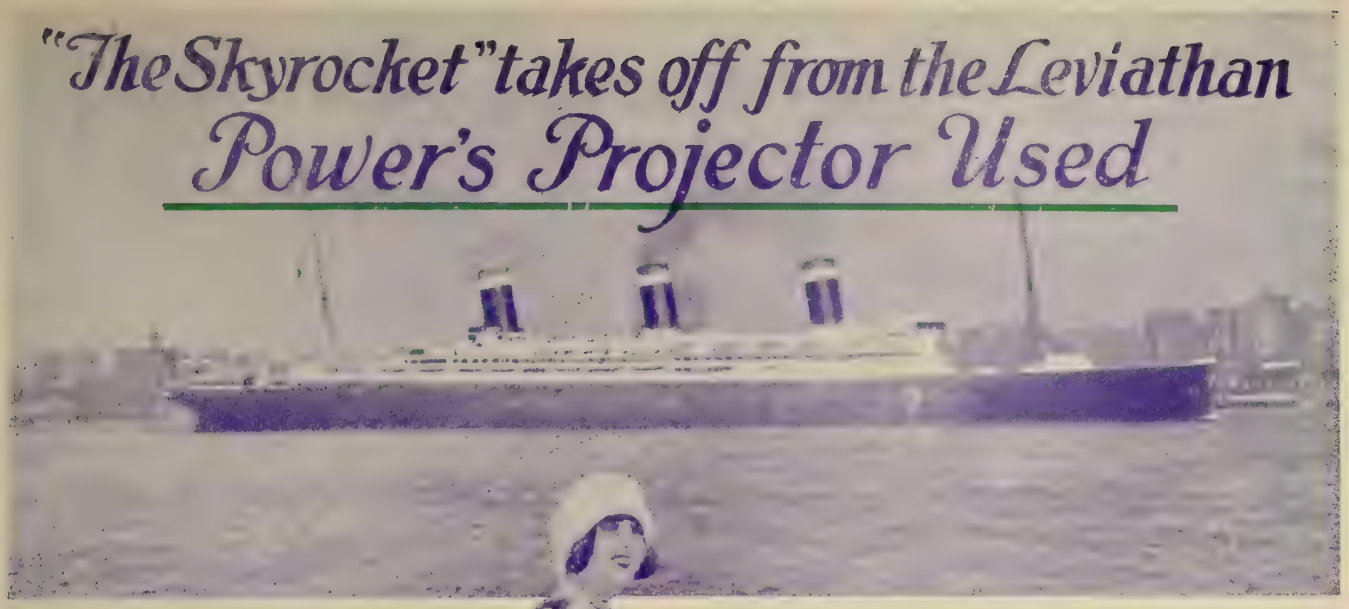
"The Skyrocket" takes off from the Leviathan
Power's Projector Used



ONE of the most novel, notable and brilliant affairs in the annals of filmdom was the premiere showing of Peggy Hopkins Joyce's big Associated Exhibitors' special, "The Skyrocket," in the Grand Ball Room of the S. S. Leviathan on the evening of Thursday, January 7. Through the courtesy of the United States Lines, Miss Joyce was hostess to upwards of a thousand of the most representative folk in picture circles, society and newspaperdom.

Reception To The Star

Miss Joyce, who had traveled to New York from Hollywood especially for the showing, held forth in the beautiful Palm Garden of the giant liner. Receiving with her in a blaze of glitter were Captain Hartley, Staff Commander Moore and Purser Summit, of the Leviathan. The entire period previous to the screening of the picture was a general get-together of everybody present. Beautifully gowned women and handsomely garbed men moved about the fully-manned, blazingly lighted floating palace in a never-to-be-forgotten picture.

When the crowd had assembled in the spacious ballroom of the liner, which had been made over into a rich picture auditorium by the ship's staff, and the picture was about to begin, Miss Joyce's arrival in the auditorium created a furore, which did not settle down until the picture had started. Music for the picture was compiled and the known radio talent was on hand, among the artists being Mae Singhi Breen and orchestra directed by Joseph Hollander. Many comments were heard on the excellence of the musical settings arranged for the film.

During the showing of the picture and after it had been projected, a radio program was being broadcast from the Palm Garden through station WMCA, the high-powered broadcasting unit of the Hotel McAlpin. For the broadcasting Harry Hershfield was master of ceremonies, and some of the best known radio talent was on hand.

PEGGY HOPKINS JOYCE, Star of Associated Exhibitor's Special, "The Skyrocket," Silhouetted Against the Leviathan.

After the picture was projected in the Ball Room, a supper was served in the immense dining room of the big ship. Any one who saw the picture of almost a thousand evening-clothed men and women seated in that dining room will never forget it. The extreme success of the supper was due to the careful arrangements of Chief Steward William Linn.

U. S. Lines Supervise Projection

During the course of the post-showing festivities a reel of film presenting the affair itself was projected. The making of this reel was in the capable hands of Leonard Mitchell, chief of the United States Lines' Motion Picture Department, to whom credit is also due for the WONDERFUL PROJECTION OF THE PICTURE. It was the general consensus of the hard-boiled film men that the PROJECTION WAS PERFECT— no small matter when the handicaps were considered.

The film showing arriving guests, etc., was projected just exactly one and three-quarter hours after the last scene had been shot.

The projection installation was made by the U. S. Lines' Motion Picture Department, of which Charles Fierer is chief. The projectionist of the Leviathan is Thomas McAuley. It might be interesting to note that both projectionists worked in evening clothes. The event passes into the list of those long remembered.

'SEA BEAST' AT $24,113 LED ALL SPECIALS—BROKE WARNERS' TOP

Nothing startling along the street last week with the exception of the breaking of the house record at Warner's with "The Sea Beast." On a two-a-day policy at $1.10 and $2.20 top it played to over $24,113.

Warner's—"The Sea Beast" (Warner Bros.) (1,360; $1.10-$2.20) (2nd week). Corking business for second week of changed policy, and John Barrymore's name, together with a corking ballyhoo electric sign in front of the house, supplied by Norden, has been responsible in large measure for the pull. Picture is beginning to be talked about. Last week was $24,113, record for the house under either policy that it has been operating.

"Ladies from Hell" is what the Germans called those kiltie-clad, fightin' he-men of Scotland. And one of those "Ladies from hell" is the hero of this amazing picture. He's a demon scrapper turned loose on a Western ranch in the midst of cattle rustling and all sorts of intrigue. Boy, he can fight. And how! Gentlemen:
Knowing you to be very much interested in how all F.B.O. pictures go over at my house, believe it will interest you to know that Tom Tyler and his gang again broke my Saturday records. You will recall that I did the best Saturday business to date when I played "Lets Go Gallagher" and the kids (or grown-ups too for that matter) did not forget what a wonderful picture he made so they all came back again to see "The Wyoming Wildcat," and believe me they sure ate it up as it is sure fire and contains plenty of comedy, hard-riding and several good scraps to say nothing of the big climax where Tom and his horse plunge into the river from a high cliff to rescue the heroine. Little Frankie Darro sure pleases the kids as he is a very finished little performer and as I previously stated I hope F.B.O. keeps him in the cast.
Yours sincerely,

Queen of Roumania Will Write Stories for M-G-M

Queen Marie of Roumania, most famous of European Queens since the time of Victoria of England, has turned motion picture author.

Louis B. Mayer, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, announced yesterday that the celebrated royal author, noted as one of the world's beauties and one of the most brilliant feminine minds of Europe, is to write an original story for screen production by M.-G.-M. and has also signed contracts by which all her previously written novels, stories and plays are to be available for production by that organization.

The arrangement is considered one of the most romantic as well as one of the most important in the history of the screen.

Queen Marie is to write an original play for immediate production by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and the contract gives them an exclusive option on any additional story material by her. Queen Marie has for years been famous as a writer and as a leader in feminine thought. She is a granddaughter of Queen Victoria of England and daughter of the Duke of Brunswick. Her mother was a daughter of Czar Alexander II of Russia. She is the mother of Prince Carol who recently attracted international notice through renunciation of his rights to the throne.

Title and details of Queen Marie's first photoplay will be announced soon, Mr. Mayer said.

Rumors Follow Newman's Visit

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Kansas City, January 30.

Kansas City newspaper reporters kept Frank L. Newman, manager of three Los Angeles Paramount theatres, busy this week, affirming and denying various reports and rumors. Mr. Newman, former owner of the Newman and Royal theatres, Kansas City, had returned to his home town to resume management of the houses—Newman and Royal—which he leased to Paramount last summer, a rumor had it.

However, upon arriving Mr. Newman denied there were plans under consideration for him to again control the Kansas City theatres. Then came the report that Jack Partington, widely known San Francisco exhibitor would succeed Mr. Newman in Los Angeles. When asked if he would join forces with any other theatre, Mr. Newman's reply was that "anything might happen."

A letter to Kansas City from Louis Forbstein, former director of the Newman orchestra, but now on the West Coast with Mr. Newman, states that Mr. Forbestein has accepted a position with Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood at a salary of $325 a week.

Kansas Invites All Managers

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Kansas City, January 30.

Eligibility to managers of producer-owned theatres to membership in the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri was one important development of the recent meeting of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. K-M in Kansas City.

The date of the next convention, which probably will be in Topeka, Kas., or Wichita, Kas., in April, was left to a committee composed of A. F. Baker, Electric Theatre, Kansas City, Kas.; Jay Means, Murray and Prospect theatres, Kansas City, Mo.; R. R. Biechele, Osage Theatre, Kansas City, Kas., and C. E. Cook, business manager of the exhibitor organization.

As to voting power, producer-managers will be on the same basis as all members, virtually the only exception being that no producer-owned manager will be eligible to hold office.

The arbitration board stand is the outgrowth of long agitation. John Corcoran, Midway Theatre, Kansas City, Kas.; Frank Amos, Westport Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., and L. J. Lenhart, Roanoke Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., exhibitor members, will continue to sit in hearing cases of non-members, but that is all.

Theatre Owners Will Go To French Lick on New Contract

No Other Subject to Be Considered

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Indianapolis, January 31.

Frank J. Rembusch, president of the Indiana Theatre Owners, today wired invitations to all exhibitors and exhibitor organizations in the United States and Canada to attend a conference at the French Lick Springs Hotel, French Lick, Ind., on Wednesday and Thursday, February 24 and 25, to decide upon a uniform contract. Mr. Rembusch waives all factional "fights" aside; points out that the new buying season opens within three months; asks all groups and factions to "forget it," and attend the conference for the purpose of getting together on a new contract, voiding the old one.

"We Are Surely Seeing a New Day In Production," Says Will H. Hays

Moderator of Industry Asserts There Is a Tremendous Step Upward in Great Films

"All of us in the industry are entitled to real satisfaction at the progress the studios are making," said Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., yesterday, following his return from Hollywood.

"We are surely seeing a new day in production, with a tremendous increase in the number of really great pictures and an enormous raise in the standard of all pictures.

"I am convinced too that we have seen only the start of the movement. Production is on a new basis.

"In my trip across the United States and back I met many persons who reflect accurately the attitude of the public toward our industry.

"All thinking people are our friends.

"They know of course that we are sincere and that we are delivering, week in and week out, the kind of entertainment that is satisfying and which proves completely our ability to move to still finer things."

Barbara LaMarr Dead

Barbara LaMarr, First National star, died yesterday, following a protracted illness. Serious complications followed a nervous breakdown, and the star retired to her country home at Altadena, Cal. She was on the road to recovery, and ventured out on Thursday last for a drive. Some hours later she was taken ill, and died following the relapse. Miss LaMarr entered pictures via the scenario department, and within the last three years she appeared in "The Eternal City," "Thy Name Is Woman," "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," "The Heart of a Siren," "Sandra," "The White Monkey" and "The Girl From Montmartre" (not yet released).

DEATHS

J. R. Minhinnick, manager of the Grand Theatre, London, Ontario, and a veteran showman of that city, has just suffered a sad bereavement in the sudden death of his father, George L. Minhinnick, who dropped dead while conversing with a salesman in a downtown store. The deceased, who was in his 85th year, was born in Tavistock, Devonshire, England, and went to Canada 60 years ago.

The sympathy of the many friends of Morris Sullivan, owner of the San Souci, in Watervliet, is extended through these columns in the recent death of Mrs. Sullivan, from pneumonia.

Second Annual Report of Arbitration Boards

THE second annual report of the Boards of Arbitration of the Motion Picture Industry, was released today through the Arbitration Society of America, 115 Broadway.

In 1925 these Boards of Arbitration decided 5,450 cases involving $1,351,206.72. Only seventeen cases were taken to the courts after the Arbitration Board had made its award.

Thirty - three Arbitration Boards in leading cities throughout the United States decide business between the buyers of motion pictures (the theatre owners) and the sellers (the motion picture distributors). These boards are made up of three men chosen by the distributors and three chosen by the recognized organizations of theatre owners.

If the six men cannot come to a decision a seventh is chosen by the six.

A notable feature of motion picture arbitration in 1925 was that 99 per cent of the cases were decided within thirty days after they were filed. Nearly all the cases were decided by the unanimous vote of the Board. Only twenty-two cases, totalling $12,341.41 required the services of a seventh arbitrator.

The report was furnished by the Arbitration Society of America by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

In 1924, the first year of arbitration in this industry, 4,875 awards, involving $1,077,968.99 were made by the Arbitration Boards. Fifteen of these disputes required a seventh arbitrator and four were litigated after arbitration. In 1925, in addition to the 5,450 disputes upon which actual awards were made by Boards of Arbitration there were 4,269, involving $802,747.59, settled by concilation after having been filed but before being determined by Boards of Arbitration. Last year, therefore, a grand total of 11,887 cases involving $2,542,544.40 were disposed of without recourse to the courts.

Five hundred and fifty-four disputes involving $124,797.23 were withdrawn by complainants; 292 cases involving $87,147.86 were dismissed by Boards of Arbitration. On December 31, 1925, there were pending in the various Boards of Arbitration throughout the country 539 disputes involving a total of $205,216.71.

Name Mountain Peak For Canadian Showman

Ottawa, Canada, February 1.

A large peak in the Canadian Rockies has been officially named in honor of a late Canadian exhibitor, Sir James Lougheed, owner of the Grand Theatre, Calgary, who was also prominent in the political life of Canada. The Geographic Board of Canada, Ottawa, has officially announced that a hitherto nameless peak, 8,850 feet high, Northeast of Borgeau Mountain in the Banff district, has been called Mount Lougheed. For years Sir James Lougheed was a leader in the Canadian Senate and previously he was a member of the Canadiant House of Commons for Calgary. He died recently in Ottawa.

Bandits Sort of Like Kansas City Showman

Kansas City, January 29.

W. O. Lenhart, manager of the Linwood Theatre, in this city, rapidly is gaining the reputation as the "most held up man about town." This week, for the third time in three months, he was a victim of bandits.

On Monday noon two bandits entered the theatre through an alley door, rushed into the door of the office in the front part of the building and, with several persons in the street looking on, not knowing it was a hold-up, took $984.05, the receipts of Saturday and Sunday, which Mr. Lenhart just had taken from the safe. One hundred dollars in the safe was overlooked by the bandits.

Large Gain In Motion Picture Exports for '25

Marked Increase in Foreign Trade in Films

Washington, D. C., February 3.

According to preliminary figures just issued by the Department of Commerce, American exports of positive films for 1925 reached a total of 225,656,151 linear feet at an invoice value of $6,787,687, while exports of negatives were 9,929,643 linear feet valued at $1,893,058. As compared with 1924, exports of the former, which were 170,347,342 linear feet valued at $6,081,917 and 8,100,264 linear feet of the latter at a value of $1,419,859, the year 1925 has shown a striking gain in our foreign trade in motion picture films.

In 1924 Europe took from the United States about 60,000,000 feet of negatives and positives combined In 1925 this figure exceeded 86,000,000 feet. Latin-America, to which in 1924 we sent about 47,500,000 feet, received about 63,500,000 feet in 1925. The Far East, with about 45,000,000 feet of films in 1924, increased this total to 53,500,000 in 1925. While figures for 1925 covering Africa and the Near East are not complete as yet, there is every reason to believe that a satisfying gain has been recorded here as well.

With regard to individual markets, the United Kingdom continues to lead as it always has in the past. The figures here show about 36,500,000 feet —a gain of above 10,600,000 feet, over 1924. Australia with just under 24,500,000 feet has displaced Canada for second place. This betters Australia's 1924 total by about 6,000,000 feet. Canada, as indicated, went to third place, even though her total of 23,000,006 feet topped 1924 by nearly 4,000,000 feet. One of the most startling gains recorded was the 20,000,000 foot total from the Argentine—a gain of more than 7,000,000 feet over 1924—which put her in fourth place. France is fifth with a 5,000,000 foot gain over 1924, her total for 1925 being 14,500,000 feet.

Our next five markets in that order are Brazil, Japan, Mexico, Germany and the Straits Settlements. Of these, Brazil's 2,000,000 foot gain brought her up over Japan, which stood sixth in 1924. Brazil's total was 10,500,000 feet and Japan's a little over 9,000,000 feet, the Japanese figure being a decline of about half a million feet from 1924. Mexico's eighth place total of 7,500,000 feet bettered the 1924 record by 2,000,000 feet, and Germany in ninth place, in spite of her "contingent" system, took just over 2,000,000 feet more in 1925 than in 1924, the figures here being 6,500,000 feet against a trifle under 4,500,000 feet.

Exports from the United States of motion picture films sensitized but not exposed amounted in 1925 to 74,605,179 linear feet, valued at $1,585,529, as compared with 59,482,479 linear feet valued at $1,261,087 for 1924.

Hays Says Free Casting Bureau Is Great Plan

Recognizes Only Most Competent Players

"A great thing for good actors and of no earthly use to bad actors," is the way Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, described the Free Casting Bureau which has just been opened in Hollywood by the Motion Picture Producers of California, Inc.

Mr. Hays returned yesterday from a trip to Los Angeles on business, which included the formal opening of the casting bureau.

"This bureau is operated by the producing organizations and eliminates commissions as high as 10 per cent. that all extra people were forced to pay in the past to agencies," said Mr. Hays. "This means that if a producing company uses a thousand extras on one particular day and pays them ten dollars each, the extras each get ten dollars, instead of nine, and the thousand dollar commission goes to the workers, not to the agents.

"The Free Casting Bureau recognizes only competent extra people and makes every effort to see that they they get enough work so that they may live comfortable. This plan eliminates the "extra" who was not a real part of the motion picture industry. The California state officials and the Actors Equity Association have cooperated fully.

"This Free Casting Bureau is only one of the many fine things that the California producers are doing to improve conditions on the coast."

Californians Fete Max Graf

San Mateo, Cal., January 24.

A state of feverish anticipation prevailed in San Mateo, Cal., and the adjoining township of Burlingame, awaiting the much heralded reopening of the magnificent Peninsula Studios. On January 20 the first scene was shot for the initial Max Graf production for Altamont Pictures Corporation and the news spread like wildfire throughout the Peninsula district.

The picturesque studio and grounds is the local community's pride and joy, and combined with the popularity of Max Graf, the event took on the aspect of a civic holiday.

Under the direction of Jay Howe, the cast, including Billy Bletcher, Bessie True, Mark Hamilton, Tex Young, Al Galvez and "Outlaw Cassidy," participated in the first scene of "Westward Bo," the first comedy of the Max Graf western comedy series. Civic officials, leading citizens and a San Francisco delegation headed the well wishers.

Contract Situation Considered By M. P. T. O. A. Administrators

Hays Tax Clause Condemned, and Contract Committee Urged to Insist on Other Changes

THE Administrative Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America met at National Headquarters, 745 Seventh Avenue, New York City, in a two-day session that started on the morning of January 26th and closed on the evening of January 27th.

Those present included: A. Julian Brylawski and Fulton Brylawski, Washington, D. C.; Sydney S. Cohen and Joseph M. Seider, New York; Jake Wells, Virginia; Harry Davis and M. J. O'Toole, Pennsylvania; Jack Harwood, Ohio and Tommy Goldberg, Maryland.

The Committee devoted five hours to the contract situation. This body instructed the Committee on Contract and Arbitration to obtain a reduction in the number of days for which the distributor has to accept a contract because of the rapid facilities afforded by the air mail. The Administrative unit also condemned the tax clause as offered by Mr. Hays, because of its form and language.

The Contract Committee was further instructed to insist upon a change in the percentage clause which would provide for a definite amount being paid by the exhibitor in the event the exhibitor does not "lift" a percentage picture. The provision now provides for the determining of the amount by averaging the daily gross receipts during a period of thirty operating days, plus the stated sum provided to be paid by the exhibitor.

The Contract Committee's stand for a provision for a specific amount to reimburse the theatre owner in the event a distributor does not deliver a percentage picture, was also approved.

The contract submitted to the industry by the national organization a few months ago, and now offered by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York to the Hays organization, was discussed. It was the unanimous opinion that the changes in this contract requested by the T. O. C. C. would nullify the spirit of the contract and be not in line with the thought of its author.

The Administrative Committee authorized President R. F. Woodhull to appoint committees for the National Convention in Los Angeles, in June. The social end of the convention has been left in the hands of National Director Glenn Harper. The handling of this promises to be equally interesting in view of the fact that the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, where the convention will be held, is surrounded by thirty-seven acres of ground, which will be lavishly decorated for the occasion, according to the present plans.

A suggestion that the M. P. T. O. A. organize sub-headquarters throughout the country was referred to the Business Manager. At the same time Mr. Seider was authorized to notify State Presidents that Harry Sigmond, of the Tax Free Music Bureau, has arranged a schedule indicating when he will visit their organizations and acquaint them with the value of tax free music in connection wth their campaign against the amendments to the copyright law.

Jake Wells was named as the contact point between National Headquarters and his own State organization in the campaign which Virginia exhibitors are mapping out against a proposed 10 per cent State tax.

Maryland exhibitors petitioned the National organization to intercede for them in connection with the use for motion picture purposes of armories and such State institutes, were referred to the Business Manager. Mr. Seider said he will write Maryland's Governor on this subject.

Independents On West Coast To Organize I. M. P. A. Auxiliary

I. E. Chadwick, Head of Group, Will Preside Over the Meetings Whether West or East

The immediate organization of the independent producers on the West Coast is to be undertaken by I. E. Chadwick, president of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America following the endorsement of the proposal at the monthly meeting of the association held at the Astor yesterday.

This meeting was attended by Dale Hanshaw, of Sierra Pictures, Inc., and P. J. Andrews, of Hercules Productions, who have recently returned from Los Angeles, and were enthusiastic regarding the prospects of securing the active support and cooperation of the other independent producers.

The association has recommended to the Executive Committee a classification of the producer - distributor members and as a result of this action it is anticipated that at least fifteen companies will take advantage of this opportunity to affiliate with the I. M. P. A.

President Chadwick has made tentative plans for the meeting which will be called by him within a fortnight and in the preparations for which he will have the assistance of several of the Independent Association executives who are already on the coast, including Sam Sax, of Lumas Film Corp.; M. H. Hoffman, of Tiffany Productions, Inc., and Harry Cohn, of Columbia Pictures Corporation.

It is proposed to perfect a producers' organization on the Coast which will serve as an auxiliary to the Independent Association in New York and the meetings of which will be presided over by President Chadwick, when he is in Los Angeles, and in his absence by a vice-president to be selected by the Coast Unit and who is also to serve as a vice-president of the parent organization.

The association approved of a short animated trailer to be attached to all independent productions and several of the company executives present stated that they had given instructions to have this trailer attached to their releases in the future.

Oscar Neufeld, of Philadelphia, chairman of the contract committee, announces he will call a meeting of his committee to be held in New York, Saturday, February 6, at which time conferences are to be arranged with representatives of other organizations interested in the adoption of a standard equitable exhibition contract.

Various routine matters were considered at the meeting which was presided over by General Manager Frederick H. Elliott in the absence of the president and vice-presidents of the association, all of whom are at present on the West Coast.

Rembusch Issues Call

cluding officials, are expected to attend the French Lick conference, under the conditions laid down in the Rembusch telegram. Information from other sections of the country point to a full attendance of exhibitors, regardless of their stand on questions other than the uniform booking contract.

In his wire, Mr. Rembusch, in part, said:

"A national survey, made last week, discloses these facts:

"For the last fourteen months, theatre owners everywhere have talked and complained much about the uniform contract, but have done nothing.

"Because of past organization political differences, national united action has been impossible, up to this time.

"The buying season opens within ninety days. Unless theatre owners unite, and make immediate demand for a fair contract, we will be forced to continue using the same old, one-sided contract.

"In interviewing leaders of national, allied, and other groups, we find all willing to join in a national conference to decide upon a uniform contract on the following conditions:

"That the conference shall be entirely free from politics, personalities, elections, and organization differences, and that there shall be no old organization affairs discussed or new organization work undertaken, and that no producers shall participate in the deliberations.

"That the Hays organization will be obliged to recognize the deliberations and demands of this conference.

"Because such a conference, called by any particular group, might fail, we are calling upon all the theatre owners of the United States and Canada, large or small, in and out of organization, to come to French Lick, Ind., as theatre owners, for two days' conference on the uniform contract, exclusively, Wednesday and Thursday, February 24 and 25.

"We are able to do this through the courtesy of the French Lick Springs Hotel Company, and other hotels in the Lost River Valley, and the Theatre Owners of Indiana will act as hosts."

Theatre Owners In New Jersey Turn Down Tax

Object to Details as Proposed by Hays Group

Morristown, N. J., January 28.

Upon the recommendation of President Joseph M. Seider, the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, at the meeting here today, authorized the organizations' Legislative Committee to take definite action in regard to theatre encroachments and overseating in the small towns.

In this respect the committee was instructed to prepare a measure for presentation before the Legislature which will amend the State Building Code. According to the outline for this measure, given by President Seider, the amendment will require towns under 10,000 to issue all licenses for prospective theatres in their jurisdiction.

In addition, it will require the approval of these licenses by respective common councils, and also the granting of a public hearing upon the request of any citizen.

Following a report by Mr. Seider on the contract situation, National President R. F. Woodhull's request for the State to turn down the Tax Clause by the Hays' organization, was unanimously acceded to by the twenty-nine theatre owners present.

Old-Timers' Night

Miss Hawley conducted a symphony orchestra of twenty girls, who are daily rehearsing at the Hippodrome.

Exhibitor Help!—Quick Reference Chart

HARRY MARION doesn't know it, but he is writing this editorial. He is our Man-On-The-Road. The circulation chap who jumps from Milwaukee to Millville, talks to our EXHIBITOR readers and gets THEIR reaction to our efforts to give them SERVICE.

"The exhibitor wants that Quick Reference Picture Chart. HE USES IT! He wants it to go as far back as space allows, and he wants it as ACCURATE and as full of INFORMATION as you can get it.

"You want to show the EXHIBITOR that you are HELPING him in every way to run a good house? All right. Let him know that you work EVERY week to make that Quick Reference Picture Chart as accurate as human power can make it.

"Let him know that you add INFORMATION that helps him. The type of picture each one is, for instance. Is it a comedy, a farce, a melodrama? The title doesn't tell. The press book is mislaid. You can help him dodge booking TWO pictures of the SAME type one right after the other if he knows the type of picture he's putting on.

"Keep your footage accurate. Let him know the date of your review."

So we did all this. And more. We guarantee the accuracy of information in our Quick Reference Picture Chart, paying one dollar for any major error reported. This in face of the fact that footages are changed after pictures are reviewed, at which time certain footages are reported. And changed later in some States to meet various local censorship requirements.

Typographically, a department of this kind is the UGLY DUCKLING of the family. It is apt to be passed over by those who like the SPECTACULAR in print.

But we print it, week in and week out because thousands of theatres DEPEND upon its being in Moving Picture World and, further, because they depend upon its ACCURACY.

For the benefit of those who do not realize how varied are the ESSENTIALS of the COMPLETE trade paper, we are bringing one of our MANY service departments to the front of Moving Picture World each week. This week it is Quick Reference Picture Chart. The department Our Man-On-The-Road and exhibitors tell us is one steady reason for their PREFERENCE of Moving Picture World. Look it over. You will find it this week beginning on Page 624.

HIRAM ABRAMS

President, United Artists Corporation

The man who welded the screen's greatest stars into one solid group, more than five years ago, is just as keen today in his task of building up a great United Artists Corporation. Starting with Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith, Mr. Abrams, through recent alignments, has lost Mr. Griffith, but has added Norma and Constance Talmadge, Rudolph Valentino and William S. Hart—and the end is not yet in sight! Covarrubias has added a touch of the Egyptian to the eye and hair of Mr. Abrams. In five minutes he caught the strength the astuteness that lie behind the face of this master builder.

The Tie-Up of Tomorrow—By Bill Reilly

WHEN radio took up the MANTLE of the "infant industry," dropped from the shoulders of the picture business, phonograph manufacturers were inclined to PATRONIZE the youngster. The DOCTORS gathered round and gave the CHILD a short time to live.

As time slipped by, the doctors were surprised to see this offspring of the air grow lusty. AND cut in on their business. Still they figured this state of affairs could not last. THEY were institutions, these phonograph houses. Their organizations girdled the globe. Their foundations were DEEP and SOLID. This adolescent Samson could not shake their temple! The PUBLIC would tire of his stuff and put him in his place.

That's the way the old-line FOUNTAIN PEN manufacturers figured a few UPSTARTS who dared to trespass in their BAILIWICKS. It would be all over in smart time. Far from being all over yet, the fight for fountain pen business keen as it is, is just BEGINING.

It is common knowledge that phonograph manufacturers have buried the HATCHET against radio. The ENEMY is now the ALLY, both in manufacture and selling.

Radio cannot be much of an enemy to the movies. But it DECIDEDLY can be an ally. It is a great promotional instrument, the possibilities of which have been hardly more than topped by the picture industry as a whole.

"Radio Movie" Over WJZ

The most recent tie-up between radio and the movies—First Nationals' broadcast of a "RADIO MOVIE" over WJZ—has proved such a success that the station has made it a WEEKLY feature. To make the tie-up more effecttive, the half hour playet on the air Thursday night is taken from a picture released the following Sunday. Letters from radio fans and from EXHIBITORS have been most encouraging to First National and to WJZ, a station covering a population of 60,000,000 people.

The picture of tomorrow will not be released until a RADIO TIE-UP has been effected on it. The form this tie-up will take is necessarily a matter of experiment, evolving LEGITIMATE radio entertainment. Which is at the same time an effective advance agent for the picture.

The tie-up brains of the picture business are entirely too FERTILE to let this angle go UNEXPLOITED. If NEWSPAPERS and MAGAZINES find morning picture views indispensable to circulation holding, RADIO stations will find that the movie is an attention getter and an attention holder, when properly presented.

The movie edition of BOOKS becomes a hack job compared to the RADIO tie-up.

If a PLAYING CARD company can cast Work and Whitehead, the bridge experts, in radio roles, our own PICTURE Exploiteers can go that one better.

Suppose Queen Marie were to go on the air? Suppose Cecil de Mille were to shoot a picture before the MICROPHONE, after instructing his stars with the studio bell ringing, and an orchestra giving the dramatic tempo? Suppose Charlie Chaplin becomes one of the Happiness Boys for the night? Or one of the Smith Bros.? Suppose the MANY commercial organizations using radio time are consulted and a tie-up WITHIN a tie-up effected, with advertising copy and window displays worked out on a mutual benefit basis country-wide?

We repeat: The Picture of TOMORROW will be STEPPED UP by radio. It now remains for our own advertising and publicity engineers to STEP up and DO THEIR STUFF.

Looking Them Over—With Gray Strider

Reviews from the Screen Angle of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

"Purple and Fine Linen"

"COLLIERS" deserves a medal for bringing out such an astonishing story as May Edington's "Purple and Fine Linen" which appears in this week's issue. The climax will shock any movie audience into speechlessness.

Because of her husband's inordinate cruelty, Lady Malvern at the age of nineteen runs away and leaves her baby behind. She goes with a lover who she thinks is half-God and half-Galahad. But he's only nine-tenths clay and one-tenth mess. She is forced to leave him and wanders—Nice, Cannes, Rome, Paris, Vienna, Budapest . . . but each year on her birthday she writes Lord Malvern and begs for permission to see her little girl. For sixteen years she receives no answer but on the seventeenth she gets a telegraphic response to come at once.

She has just enough money to reach London and here on her birthday morning we find this magnificent one reduced to a drab—clothes hopeless ruins, lips gone blue, glorious figure subdued, feet that drag, black hair with the bloom of grapes on it dimmed by a rusty old hat—begging in the street before a fashionable club—praying for money that she may appear decently before her daughter.

A rich Australian passes by and refuses her. He sees a street accident and rushes to the spot. In the excitement, this desperado watches and picks the Australian's pocket. He misses his wallet instantly and glimpsing her through the crowd follows.

First she goes to a woman's exclusive outfitting shop. The Australian waits. Then she goes to a beauty parlor. The Australian waits. Last, she visits a famous jeweler. The Australian waits. Finally she steps out—a lovely, perfectly groomed woman—ready for the fruition of seventeen years.

The man grabs her arm and starts for the Police Station. She begs for three hours grace, only one hundred and eighty little minutes out of a lifetime. He curses his softness but her beauty is appealing and he grants her a bare three hours. She can't see her child until nine o'clock so he takes her to dinner at the Ritz, disbelieving all her story, but subtly pleased to be in the companionship of a woman so distinguished.

At nine o'clock, accompanied by the Australian, she retraces her footsteps to her husband's door. The revengeful Lord Malvern greets her. Her anxiety is pitiful.

"Let me see her . . . Does she know I'm coming? What has she been told of me?"

"She knows nothing as you will see for yourself."

He threw open the door. "Oh my God!" The woman ran forward and fell on her knees . . . .

"The girl lay on a bier, candles around her; her hands crossed on her breast. Her mouth half smiled; she had been a pretty child, and in death was lovely."

The Australian lifted the woman from the floor with one hand and with the other struck the smile from Lord Malvern's weary, implacable, sarcastic mouth.

"I won't add one to the revengeful men to-night," the Australian whispered bending over her cold face. "I'll spend my life trying to make you happy. You must be sick of the old world. But there's a new one and I want to show it to you. Let's go."

No analysis is necessary. THE STORY SPEAKS FOR ITSELF. Let Norma Shearer put on a thirty-six year old make-up and get busy.

"Song of the Flame"

The romantic opera "Song of the Flame," which Arthur Hammerstein is so artistically producing at the 44th Street Theatre, has every known ingredient for a successful moving picture.

A Russian Prince falls in love with a peasant girl called "The Flame" because of the violent, revolutionary spirit she infuses into her people through her song of revolt. But not comprehending the bestiality and sheeplike density of THE MOB she is unable to control the forces she has started and her lover's castle is burnt, his jewels stolen and she herself although innocent is jailed by the Bolsheviki as a thief.

As a screen production, this opera has unlimited possibilities: love, staccato songs, mobs, princes, fires, revels, peasant, vodka, rubies, folk dances, humor, Paris, color, minor music, drama, hatred, cruelty, intrigue and over all FLAME! FLAME!! FLAME!!!

The Russian Art Choir which Mr. Hammerstein has introduced is symphonically perfect. He is to be congratulated upon this innovation which dispenses with the whipped cream atmosphere of the usual musical comedy and give the audience something musical to chew upon, digest and remember.

"The House of Ussher"

The Fifth Avenue Playhouse, in association with Wainwright and Brennan, is presenting a strong Jewish drama—"The House of Ussher" by H. V. Esmond.

"Like Father, Like Daughter!" Jacob Ussher, a clever, elderly, Jewish financier has been deserted by his Christian wife for many years. He lives in London with his acidulous sister, Miss Ussher, and his beautiful young daughter, Constance.

Constance falls in love with Ussher's secretary who has nothing much to his credit except a fair amount of English handsomeness. The father refuses his consent to the marriage and Constance, maddened by this injustice, fights Jacob with his own weapons. She forges his name to a check for a large sum, gambles successfully with it on the stock exchange (just as her father had done before her) and then throws her winning cards on the table—with money enough to finance the marriage.

The climax is tragic and unexpected. Excellent picture material.

BEAUTIFUL MARY PHILBRIN is the antithesis of beauty in her role of "Unity," one of her characters in "Stella Maris," the Universal-Jewel special, in which she has won the praise of critics and fans. Mary has had a medal coming to her for a long time.

Why We Pay Out Dollars

EXHIBITORS write us every week and tell our contact-man on the road that they consult QUICK REFERENCE PICTURE CHART footage all the time. That's why we want it as accurate as human effort can make it.

Footage comes first with review, and sometimes after this is published the picture is cut again and we are not notified by the producer.

Nevertheless when an exhibitor takes the time to give us the correct information we send him a dollar to pay him to a slight extent for the trouble he has taken—his interest is too highly valued to be covered by any money payment.

Because of the interest rather than the dollar, exhibitors are constantly watching for unavoidable errors—and telling us when they see them—and we send the dollar wherever a major error is shown—TO MAKE THIS CHART ACCURATE—FOR YOU!

Exhibitors Get First Chance at Showing of "Irene" Starring Colleen Moore

DAINTY COLLEEN HAS "EVERYTHING" IN "IRENE," which First National experts assert will stand at the top of the list as her "best work." The role permits Colleen wide latitude for all of the cute little bits of "personality" stuff that made her famous, and Al Green, her director, has managed to extract a few extra touches from the limitless hoard of things feminine that Colleen has packed away in her storehouse of the silent art. A superb cast assists the star, every player being in the "big, electric-light" class.

NO picture released by First National in many months has aroused greater advance interest than the special production of "Irene," starring Colleen Moore and presented by John McCormick. With the announcement of the completion of this picture requests for early showings have been received from first run exhibitors in all parts of the country who appreciate First National's policy in making a genuine special of this calibre available for first showings i npicture theatres at reasonable prices.

Judging from present prospects, the picture will be presented in upwards of one hundred and fifty theatres the week of February 21, backed by an extensive advertising campaign covering all angles of publicity and exploitation.

One of the tie-ups that will be of direct benefit to exhibitors was made with some three hundred department stores which will receive "Irene" gowns to be displayed in conjunction with the showing of the picture. These stores will arrange fashion shows which will be liberaly publicized in local newspapers. It is recognized that "Irene" is peculiarly well suited to exploitation of this description. The fashion sequences in the film, shown in color, are said to be the most beautiful of the kind ever done on the screen. An idea of the magnificence of the picture is given in a special delux trailer running three hundred feet.

Another exploitation tie-up of value to all exhibitors will be the radioized version of the story broadcast by WJZ on the Thursday preceding the week of national release. Reports from the Coast where "Irene" was previewed before representative audiences in Los Angeles theatres, state that the picture far surpasses any of Miss Moore's earlier starring productions in popular appeal. It offers a leading character replete with opportunities for comedy and pathos in the interpretation. Needless to say, Miss Moore takes full advantage of the possibilities of the character of "Irene."

The picture was directed by Al Green and includes in the cast Lloyd Hughes, George K. Arthur, Kate Price, Charlie Murray, Lawrence Wheat, Maryon Aye, Edward Earle, Eva Novak and Betty Francisco.

Signs Chester Conklin

Following his slogan of "A star for every important role," Robert T. Kane signed Chester Conklin to play the principal comedy part in "The Wilderness Woman," on which the producer will start work the first week in February. It will be a First National release.

"Skyrocket" Held Over

Due the unusually successful showing at the box-office, Peggy Hopkins Joyce's big Associated Exhibitors' special, "The Skyrocket," has been held over for a second week at B. S. Moss' Colony Theatre, Broadway, N. Y.

Warners Finish Four Pictures and Start Three New Releases

Everything in Shape for Work on New Season's Films; "Why Girls Go Back Home" Is Already in Production; New Rin-Tin-Tin Subject Will Soon Get Underway

INCREASED activity is noted at Warner Bros. western studio as the decks are cleared in readiness for the new season's program. Work on cleaning up the 1925-26 schedule was advanced within the past week by getting underway four new productions and completing three pictures.

Placed in production were "Why Girls go Back Home," the Success Magazine story, and sequel to Warner's famous "Why Girls Leave Home." The director is James Flood and the author Katherine Brody. Patsy Ruth Miller will have the principal role supported by Clive Brooke, George O'Hara, Myrna Loy and Jane Winton, the latter a new comer to the Warner lot.

Rin-Tin-Tin's new production also gets underway. It is "Hero of the Big Snows" from a story and scenario by Ewart Adamson and directed by Herman Raymaker, who has been responsible for most of the dog's recent successes. "Rinty's" leading woman will be Alice Calhoun. Other principals in the cast are Don Alvarado, Leo Willis and Baby Blossom.

Irene Rich has started "Silken Shackles," her first picture since Lady Windermere's Fan." This is a story by Walter Morosco and Philip Klein and will mark the debut of Mr. Morosco as a director. Supporting Miss Rich in the principal roles are Huntly Gordon, Bob Schable and Victor Varconi.

J. Stuart Blackton also gets underway "Hell Bent for Heaven," the Broadway stage success by Hatcher Hughes, adapted by Marion Constance. Patsy Ruth Miller has the leading role, supported by John Harron, Gayne Whitman, Gardner James, James Marcus, Wilfred North and Evelyn Selbie.

The production completed were "The Sap," from the story by E. T. Lowe, Jr., and Philip Klein directed by Erle Kenton featuring Kenneth Harlan, supported by Mary McAllister, Dave Butler, Eulalie Jensen, John Cossar and Heinie Conklin; "The Little Irish Girl," Dolores Costello's first starring picture, adapted for the screen by Darryl Francis Zanuck and directed by Roy Del Ruth. Supporting Miss Costello are John Harron, Dot Farley, Mathew Betz, Lee Moran, Gertrude Claire, Joseph Dowling and Henry Barrows; Dorothy Devore in "The Honeymoon Express" adapted by Philip Klein and E. T. Lowe, Jr., from the story by Darryl, Francis Zanuck and directed by William Beaudine. Supporting Miss Devore are John Patrick, Montague Love, George Pearce, Lynn Cowan, Russell Simpson, James Gordon, Frank Brownlee, Fred Kelsee and Charles Hill Mailes.

"Straight From the Shoulder Reports" Are Your Best Guide

"THREE FACES EAST" gets you guessing, but suspense is the keynote of Producers Distributing Corp.'s picture, so the title's right in keeping.

"Bride of the Storm" Blackton's Latest for Warners

EVERY bit of direction, casting and story value that spells box office success is contained in "Bride of the Storm," the first feature of J. Stuart Blackton under his new arrangement with Warner Bros. and after viewing the picture this week at their home office the Warners and the preview critics acclaimed it the best melodrama they have seen in a long time.

"Bride of the Storm," directed by Mr. Blackton, is from James Francis Dwyer's story "Maryland, My Maryland" adapted to the screen by Marion Constance. The action takes place in a light house on a reef in the Dutch East Indies and aboard a United States cable ship at sea.

Action swift and plausible fills the entire footage and excellent acting is done by a superb cast consisting of Dolores Costello, John Barron, Tyrone Power, Sheldon Lewis, Otto Mattieson and Julia Swayne Gordon.

"Bride of the Storm" also gives Dolores Costello another chance to live up to her work in "The Sea Beast" and in an entirely different role she is said to get across big. The production will be an early release by Warner Bros.

Universal Signs Five Leading Men For Feature Roles

FIVE of the screen's most prominent leading men have been signed for featured roles in current Universal productions, according to an announcement from the studio.

They are Francis X. Bushman, Kenneth Harlan, Edward Everett Horton, Theodore Van Eltz and Mario Carillo.

Bushman, whose work in "Ben Hur" and other recent pictures has put him near the top of screen players, has been signed to play the leading role opposite Mary Philbin in "The Star Maker," which Lois Weber will direct.

Harlan will play the featured role in "The Ice Flood," the first directorial effort of James O. Spearing, former New York dramatic editor, who has been on the Universal scenario staff for the last three years.

Von Eltz and Carillo will play prominent roles in "Perch of the Devil," the Gertrude Atherton novel which King Baggot is directing for Universal with Mae Busch and Pat O'Malley in the featured roles.

Horton, who just finished a co-starring role with Laura LaPlante in Harry Pollard's production, "Beware of Blondes," will be featured in Edward Laemmle's picturization of "The Whole Town's Talking" by John Emerson and Anita Loos.

"The New Klondike" Finished

Thomas Meighan finished work in "The New Klondike," Ring Lardner's story of the Florida real estate boom at Paramount's Long Island studio yesterday. With Mrs. Meighan he leaves tomorrow for a brief vacation in New Port Ritchie, Fla. Mr. Meighan will return the latter part of February to start work on his next picture.

Progress Film Secures "The Northern Code" For Big District

A STRONG Independent picture will be available for exhibitors in Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia and Delaware through the acquisition of "The Northern Code" by the Progress Picture Exchange of Washington, D. C.

The territorial deal was closed last week by Lumas Film Corporation.

"The Northern Code," as the title indicates, is a story of the Canadian Northwest, that famous district "North of 48" where the laws of man do not reach.

An excellent cast is presented in this subject, the principal players being Eva Novak, Robert Ellis, Josef Swickard, Claire De Lorez, Francis McDonald, Ray Hampton and Jack Kenney.

The production was directed by Leon De La Mothe from the story by Everett C. Maxwell.

"The Northern Code" is a Jerry G. Mayer production.

Virginia Lee Corbin Signed to Support E. E. Horton

VIRGINIA LEE CORBIN has been signed by Universal to play the feminine lead opposite Edward Everett Horton in "The Whole Town's Talking," according to to announcement from Edward Laemmle, who is to direct the production.

It is one of the first real leading parts Miss Corbin has played since she returned to the screen about two years ago, following several years' absence during the period of her "growing up."

Delores del Rio, famous Mexico City beauty, has been borrowed from Edwin Carewe by Universal to play the role of a stage star in this picture.

Senorita del Rio thus will play in her first production away from First National, where she has scored in "Joanna" and "Heirs Apparent."

This practically completes the cast of the John Emerson and Anita Loos story.

June Marlowe in 'Old Soak'

June Marlowe, 1925 Wampas Baby star, has just been placed under a five-year contract by Carl Laemmle, according to an announcement of Henry McRae, general manager of Universal's West Coast Studios.

Miss Marlowe's contract with another producer recently expired and she was immediately signed on the new contract.

Her first role will be the feminine lead in "The Old Soak," by Don Marquis, which Edward Sloman will direct as Jean Hersholt's first starring vehicle.

Books 7 Gold Bonds

A. H. Huot, manager of the F. B. O. exchange at Seattle, has sold "The Midnight Flyer," "When Love Grows Cold," "The King of the Turf," "The Non-Stop Flight," "Flaming Waters," "A Poor Girl's Romance," "The Isle of Retribution" and "The Adventures of Mazie" series to the American Theatre at Spokane for early showing.

Universal to Re-release Big Crook Drama "Outside the Law"

Making New Prints and Accessories for Popular Melodrama Which Broke Booking and Attendance Records Several Years Ago

"OUTSIDE THE LAW," the record-breaking crook drama made as a Universal-Jewel with Priscilla Dean in the starring role, and with Lon Chaney co-featured, is to be re-released by Universal, it is announced at the Universal home office. An insistent demand for re-bookings, on the part of exhibitors who played and cashed in handsomely with this picture during its initial release period, brought about Universal's determination to make this big box-office winner again available to theatre owners.

"Outside the Law" was a sensation when it first reached the screen. It was made from a story written by the man who directed it—Tod Browning, and adapted to the screen by Lucien Hubbard. In it Priscilla Dean achieved her greatest crook role, and Lon Chaney took the part which definitely established him as a character actor of unequalled qualities. Wheeler Oakman, too, has an unusual part in this picture.

The production had its New York premiere simultaneously in four legitimate theatres in the Times Square district, something that never before had been attempted in the way of moving picture exploitation and presentation. It took on right from the start, and proved one of the most popular pictures ever released. Universal reports that it played in more than 8,000 houses throughout the country, falling only a few bookings short of "The Storm."

It was hailed by critics and the public as an ideal screen melodrama, with a maximum of characterization, action, suspense and thrills. It received A-I ratings from all sides and did much to establish the Universal-Jewel schedule of pictures as quality pictures of top-notch box-office pulling power.

During the past year, it is asserted by Universal executives, many calls have come for re-bookings on this Jewel. However, prints in good condition not being available, it was though inadvisable to make new ones. However, the number of requests began to swell, until there has been pressure from every Universal exchange for new prints and accessories on the production.

Facing great expenditure in recreating the entire list of posters, press book, heralds and other accessories for this picture, Universal decided to try it out. Accordingly, one new print was turned out and arrangements were made to put it into the Cameo Theatre, Pittsburgh, cold, with little or no advance advertising.

The supporting cast includes Ralph Lewis, who plays Madden, E. Allyn Warren, who has an exceptionally strong role in Chang Lo, a Chinese sage; Melbourne MacDowell and Wilton Taylor. Little Stanley Goethals created a very lovable child part in the picture. Chaney gained great fame in this picture by his double characterization. Besides playing the role of "Black Mike" he also made up for a small Chinese role and did it so expertly that few persons who saw the picture realized at first that Chaney was playing the part.

"THE GREAT LOVE" an audience has for good pictures will be satisfied when Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picture of that title hits the screen. Viola Dana and Frank Currier shine.

Big Things Planned for New Associated Studios

Powers' Newly Acquired Plant a Beehive of Industry; Griffith and Carber Already Working on the Grounds; Officials Pleased With Way Things Are Shaping Up

WITH plans that are now going forward with lightning like rapidity, the Associated Studios, P. A. Powers' newly acquired film plant in Los Angeles, which is to be the production home of producers on the West Coast who are releasing through Associated Exhibitors, promises to be one of the most thriving hives of motion picture industry within the next 30 days.

Although the studios were actually taken over by Powers only a week ago, there are already two companies installed on the lot, with several others making preparations for the transferring of their activities from Hollywood. Those already on the ground are Thomas L. Griffith, who is to produce a series of comedy dramas co-starring two well known players, and Bert D. Carber, who is to star Bill Cody in a series of western features.

At the same time, S. S. Hutchinson is transferring his organization from Hollywood to the Associated, while other producers will join the new colony as soon as productions now under way are completed.

Arrangements are being made by Powers and his associates for the contracting of two feminine stars of the first rank for the A. E. program. All details should be completed within a few days.

Griffith Carber and one producer as yet unnamed are planning to get their first productions under way by February 1, which will give the studio three companies in actual production as a starter.

Both Powers and Emil Offeman, West Coast representative of Associated Exhibitors and general manager of the studios, are greatly enthused over the way things are shaping up for their new enterprise and are looking forward to one of the busiest seasons in their active careers.

Mary Pickford's Next Will Be Called "Sparrows"

HIRAM ABRAMS, president of the United Artists Corporation, announced this week that Mary Pickford has finished her next picture for United Artists Corporation and that this production will be put forth under the title of "Sparrows." This much heralded production was made on the Pickford-Fairbanks lot under the working title of "Scraps," but upon its completion it was decided to rename the production.

During the past few weeks a number of special added scenes were taken for the production and the change in the name was made after thousands of dollars had been spent in advertising "Scraps," the working title of the picture.

LAYING DOWN ON THE PICTURE? Not Betty Compson or Edmund Lowe—not in "The Palace of Pleasure," which they made for William Fox.

Schildkraut Is Signed For Metropolitan's "Shipwrecked"

FURTHER substantiating their announced intention of making "Shipwrecked" a real special production, Metropolitan Pictures have secured Joseph Schildkraut to play opposite Seena Owen in this production of Langdon McCormick's spectacular melodrama.

Schildkraut who is under a long-term contract to Cecil B. De Mille, scored a decided hit in "The Road to Yesterday." Following the completion of that personally directed De Mille special, he returned to New York where he was obliged to resume his starring role in "The Firebrand," his most recent stage hit. Ill health caused him to terminate his engagement in that role, and he has but recently returned to New York from a recuperative trip to Europe.

"Shipwrecked" was adapted to the screen by Finis Fox and will mark Seena Owen's debut as a star in Metropolitan Pictures. The director and supporting cast will be announced within a few days.

Warners Change Titles of Three Coming Productions

CHANGES in the titles of three pictures now in work at Warner Bros. studio were announced recently.

"Outlawed," the new Rin-Tin-Tin picture, has been changed back to "Hero of the Big Snows," its original title. Herman Raymaker, who has been responsible for several of the dog's biggest successes, is directing.

"The Grifters," from the story by C. D. Lancaster, will be known as "The Little Irish Girl." This is the next production in which Dolores Costello will appear and she has as her support John Harron, Dot Farley, Mathew Betz, Lee Moran, Gertrude Clair, Joseph Dowling and Henry Barrows. Roy Del Ruth is directing.

"Leave It to Me," an original story being directed by William Beaudine, will be released under the title of "The Honeymoon Express." This will be Dorothy Devore's next picture. In the cast are John Patrick, Montague Love, George Pearce, Lynn Cowan, Russell Simpson, James Gordon, Frank Brownlee, Fred Kersey and Charles Hill Mailes.

Finish "Prince of Pilsen"

With the photographing of an impressively gorgeous night sequence hinging on the famous fountain scene from the stage play, George Sidney last week did his final work on the A. H. Sebastian Production, "The Prince of Pilsen," for the Producers Distributing Corporation.

The fountain scenes are laid in the courtyard of a village inn at Altheim, a rendezvous of Heidelberg students, and for these sequences Director Paul Powell discovered, what is indeed a rarity in Southern California, a new and unused location.

NAT ROTHSTEIN

Nat Rothstein Rejoins Universal; To Exploit "Flaming Frontier"

NAT G. ROTHSTEIN, the first advertising manager of Universal, has rejoined Universal. His first undertaking there will be the entire handling from the exploitation, advertising and publicity standpoint of Universal's new western epic production, "The Flaming Frontier."

Mr. Rothstein was induced by R. H. Cochrane to give up his advertising agency in Chicago some nine years ago and to come to Universal as advertising manager. He soon proved his adaptability and brought to his task a trenchant pen, a straight-forward, direct punchful method which has characterized Universal's advertising from that day to this.

Mr. Rothstein will undertake his new duties at Universal on February 8, having resigned last week from F. B. O., where he has been in entire charge of advertising, exploitation and publicity for the past few years.

Louise Fazenda Made A Star By Warners

AFTER many years on the screen, Louise Fazenda is to be starred. Miss Fazenda has signed a new contract with Warner Bros. under which she will be starred in her own right during the coming year, and also co-starred with Willard Louis in high-class comedy-dramas.

The new arrangement with Miss Fazenda calls for her first appearing in a series of productions with Mr. Louis. Following this combination, she will head her own company and branch out as a full fledged star.

This elevation is a reward of merit gained through Miss Fazenda's work in Warner pictures during the last two years. Her every appearance has been good for a laugh.

Warner Bros. to Put New Faces On the Screen; Doris Hill Signed

Engaging of Player Is in Line with Policy of Company in Developing New Talent, Young Beauty Who Has Never Faced Camera, Is 19 Years Old

A PERSONALITY entirely new to the screen will appear in the line-up of Warner Bros. stock company next season in Doris Hill, a new comer to a picture studio, who never has faced a camera, and who has been signed by Jack Warner solely on her beauty, intelligence, striking type for pictures and her natural promise of development.

The signing of Miss Hill is in keeping with the policy started by the Warners last year of developing new talent. They feel there are hundreds of potential stars in the extra and small part ranks and intend to give as many as possible a chance to show their ability.

An example of this was the signing of Dolores Costello by the Warners. Miss Costello has turned out to be one of the big screen discoveries of the year, her most recent outstanding success being opposite John Barrymore in "The Sea Beast."

The signing of Miss Costello and Miss Hill is only another example of the fact that a personal screen background is not essential to success in motion pictures. In fact there is such a demand for new faces on the screen that unless the producers go outside of the industry for fresh talent, it has become impossible to find players to satisfy the public cry.

Miss Hill is a cousin of Eugene O'Neil, the playwright, and her relationship to the talented dramatist is her only professional connection. She is a dancer of more than ordinary ability, but has never used this talent professionally. She is nineteen years old, a striking beauty with wavy red hair and the figure of a miniature Venus.

Her screen tests have been exceptional and the Warners have placed her under a five year contract with the belief that she will develop into another Dolores Costello.

Weaver Prepares Next Associated Exhibitors Release

WITH their initial production "Hearts and Fists" successfully released by Associated Exhibitors, Inc., plans for the next production of the H. C. Weaver Production, Inc., of Tacoma, Wash., are under way and the forthcoming picture has been given the tentative title of "The Totem Pole Beggar." E. C. Maxwell, scenic and continuity editor, has completed work on the script and Peter L. Shamray, production manager, is preparing interior sets.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER have been stepping high—and "Soul Mates" is one of the "top steps."

Six Big Productions Offered By Paramount In February

"The Wanderer," "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter," "The Song and Dance Man," "The Vanishing American," "Behind the Front" and "Moana" Are Pictures Listed

FEBRUARY brings to the screen from the Paramount Studios the first six pictures on its strong program for spring and summer. Advance showings, declare Paramount officials, have definitely stamped these as box office attractions. These pictures are evidence, they say, of the company's pledge to present for spring and summer releases the strongest array of showmen's pictures it is possible to produce.

During February these pictures will be released: "The Wanderer," "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter," "The Song and Dance Man," "The Vanishing American," "Behind the Front" and "Moana."

Four of these attractions are listed among the company's 10 long run specials for the new season. They are: "The Wanderer," "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter," "The Song and Dance Man" and "The Vanishing American."

Test showings on "The Wanderer" in various sections of the country have revealed its drawing power. For several weeks this Biblical story held the screen at the Criterion theatre on Broadway. Reviewers classified it with "The Ten Commandments," one of the biggest money makers ever produced. Its cast, in the opinion of those who have viewed the picture, is supreme. Greta Nissen, William Collier, Jr., Ernest Torrence, Wallace Beery, Kathlyn Williams and Tyrone Powers all received the highest commendation. This picture was released generally on February 1. Raoul Walsh directed it.

In "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter," a smart love comedy, it is claimed that Adolphe Menjou and Florence Vidor have the best roles of their careers. This production was made under the deft direction of Malcolm St. Clair, whose subtle handling of situations has received the highest praise from all quarters. Like "The Wanderer," this picture has stood the severest test in advance showings. It will be released on February 8.

Also on February 8, will be released "The Song and Dance Man," a story of backstage Broadway by George M. Cohan. For humor and heart interest this picture excels. It is another indication of Herbert Brenon's flair for producing showman's productions. Each of his attractions has proved a hit. Featured in "The Song and Dance Man" are Bessie Love, Tom Moore and Harrison Ford. Bessie Love's work carries her to new heights. You will laugh with Tom Moore one minute and the next you will feel the tense pathos of his misfortune. Miss Love does the Charleston as only she knows how.

On February 15, Zane Grey's "The Vanishing American" will reach the screens. Stupendous, magnificent, great, beautiful, stirring and picturesque are the words which have been used generously in describing this picture, which has had successful engagements on Broadway, in San Francisco and other centers. This special was adapted from the Grey story of the American Indian by Lucien Hubbard. Richard Dix, Lois Wilson and Noah Beery comprise the excellent featured cast. George B. Seitz directed.

A new tone in comedy is offered in "Behind the Front," which will be released on February 22. This narrative of the war is considered one of the fastest and funniest comedies produced recently. Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton, the two doughboys, will be remembered a long time for their work in this attraction. Although not billed as one of the season's specials it stands as one. Edward Sutherland was the director responsible for this attraction.

On February 22, Paramount also will offer a production which has been accorded acclaim throughout the country. It is Robert Flaherty's "Moana," a real romance of life and love in the South Seas.

Dorothy Phillips Returns

Dorothy Phillips, former stage and screen star, and wife of the late producing-director, Allen Holubar, was signed last week to a long term contract with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, it was announced by Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production.

This return of the popular screen beauty to the studios ends her voluntary retirement, at the height of a brilliant career, on the death of her husband. Miss Phillips returns with energy and aspirations, and as she is strikingly beautiful and talented, it will not be long before she has regained her former enviable position among screen stars.

Solomon Joins Columbia

In anticipation of the campaign of publicity, advertising and exploitation covering the 1926-27 product the executives of the Columbia Pictures Corporation have appointed Julian H. Solomon as director of publicity and advertising.

Mr. Solomon needs no introduction to the trade, as he has been in New York for eleven years doing the things which he will do for Columbia. In addition to having handled publicity from the distributors angle he has been an exhibitor and handled exhibitors exploitation.

The tremendously successful National Laugh Month camprign which has received such wonderful support from the press of the entire country was handled by Mr. Solomon.

"The Sea Beast" Booked by Orpheum for February 12

THE first showing of John Barrymore in "The Sea Beast" outside of New York will take place at the Orpheum Theatre in Chicago February 12 when the attraction goes into the Warner house for a run. The Orpheum is a popular priced house with a continuous performance and there will be no change in its policy for this attraction.

The success of "The Sea Beast" at the Warner Theatre, New York, now entering its fourth week at $2 top with a performance twice a day and a big sale weeks in advance, has prompted Warner Bros. to put it in the Orpheum and it is quite likely that within a short time it will be seen in pre-release runs in several other of the largest cities. The remarkable business in New York City at advanced prices is the talk of Broadway.

The same exploitation campaign that introduced "The Sea Beast" in New York, will be put over in Chicago. Preparations are now under way to publicize the attraction in the Windy City, and the Orpheum's physical appearance will be treated the same as the Warner New York house, even to the big mechanical electric sign on the front of the theatre.

"The Sea Beast" has also been booked at the Metropolitan in Seattle and Miller's Figaro in Los Angeles for an indefinite run.

How Do You Like Our New Quarters?

Says F. B. O. "Fine" say we. This hustling live-wire organization has just moved into larger and handsomer quarters, which occupy the entire sixteenth floor of the big new building at 1650 Broadway, facing on Times Square. A significant move. And the first stop for this express is "F. B. O. Month" in March.

First National Studios To Be Built In Los Angeles Suburb

Site Announced for Erection of Plant in Burbank; Work Will Be Pushed so That at Least One Unit Will Be Installed by June 1; Butler Handles Construction

THE new West Coast Studios of First National Pictures, Inc., will be in Burbank, Calif., a small suburb of Los Angeles, according to a statement issued today by Richard A. Rowland, general manager, who has just returned from California.

In accord with First National's policy of expansion, arrangements have now been completed for the building of the largest and best equipped studio plant in the world, just three miles from the business centre of Hollywood.

A definite decision as to the location of the new studios was reached at a meeting of Mr. Rowland and the executive committee of First National, following which a wire was sent to John McCormick, in charge of First National production on the Coast, authorizing the purchase of a tract of land comprising sixty-four acres. The site selected is known on relief maps as the Providencia Rancho and Scott tract subdivision. It adjoins the Lakeside Golf Course. The huge realty transaction was consummated between First National and A. V. Handorf, the owner, who has large holdings in this territory.

Bids are now being received for the erection of a group of buildings in a decorative manner along Moorish, Colonial or Spanish lines of architecture. There will be no delay as it is planned to have at least some of the First National units installed in the new studios by June 1st. Mr. McCormick states that the studio construction will be in the hands of C. P. Butler, an official of First National Production Corporation, who will have full charge from the beginning to the completion of the work. The plant will be designed to accommodate all of the First National executives, stars and others engaged on the Coast in the making of productions for the most elaborate and extensive program ever prepared by First National.

Neal Burns Training His Police Dogs for Comedy

Neal Burns is training his own police dogs Ritz von Schultefeld and Barbar von Schultefeld in stunt stuff, and although they have never yet appeared in pictures, they may be heroes on the screen before long.

Great things were expected of Myrtle the Turtle, which has basked in the sunshine of the lawn inside the Christie studios for several years now waiting for her great opportunity to become a star. But the great part has not yet arrived. Scenario writers and the Christie gag men are racking their brains trying to think up a story which will give full sweep to the latent talent and emotional power which Myrtle is believed, by those who have been fortunate enough to see her screen tests, to possess.

Pathe Comedy Subjects Enliven Program At the Rialto

THE Rialto Theatre in Westfield, New Jersey, is a consistent user of Pathe comedies to provide the fun element on its bills. During the week of January 18 four subjects released under the rooster banner were seen on the Rialto screen.

Mack Sennett's rollicking two-reel comedy, "Cupid's Boots," starring Ralph Graves held forth during Monday and Tuesday. Alice Day in "Tee For Two," another Sennett two-reeler added laughs to the programs on Wednesday and Thursday, when "Outings For All," one of the Grantland Rice "Sportlights" was an added feature of the bill.

Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life," the first of his comedy classics to be brought back to the screen under the terms of his new half million dollar Pathe contract, sent the Rialto audiences into hysterics on Friday and Saturday.

In Roach Comedies

The striking array of screen celebrities listed in the casts of new Hal Roach comedies for Pathe release includes Virginia Pearson, Anders Randolf, Martha Sleeper, Mack Swain, Bull Montana, Helen Gilmore, Fred Kelsey and Vivian Oakland.

Puffy Starts New Series

Production of a new series of comedies starring Charles Puffy, the noted European actor, has been started at Universal City. Dick Smith is directing Puffy in the first picture, and Elsie Tarron is playing the feminine lead opposite the star.

FIRST NATIONAL CHIEF TENDERED FAREWELL DINNER.

Suggests Public School Courses In Motion Picture Appreciation

Jesse L. Lasky at Board of Review Luncheon Declares Producers Have Gone Far Ahead of Public's Ability to Appreciate Their Work

DECLARING that the artistic progress of the motion picture had outstripped public appreciation, Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Paramount, in an address before the eleventh annual luncheon of the National Board of Review at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, suggested that the people's money which was now spent by censor boards be diverted to raising the taste of theatregoers for the highest type of pictures.

"If possible throw your mind back to the pictures you saw in 1912 and 1913. You probably will not be able to recall having seen any pictures at that time, because I dare say that most of you would not be seen attending a motion picture theatre in those days. Now think of the pictures that we see today. 'A Kiss for Cinderella,' 'The Big Parade,' 'Ben Hur,' 'The Covered Wagon,' 'The Ten Commandments,' 'The Vanishing American,' 'Peter Pan.'

"I mention some of these pictures of today because the picture business is facing a distinct problem. I sincerely believe that, despite the astonishing popularity of the motion picture, its artistic progress has outstripped public appreciation. That is in some respects. It is true, of course, that most good pictures are well supported by the public.

"It is true that a simple story of epic qualities like 'The Covered Wagon' evokes an enormous public response. However, there are other types of pictures that we can do very well but which we are afraid to do because experience has shown us that there is very little material profit in doing them.

"It seems to me that if some of the money and energy now devoted to criticism and censorship were plowed into the field of public appreciation for pictures the results would be better all around. In other words, we have censorship boards which spend a great deal of the people's money in telling us what we must not do and in telling the public what they must not see. Suppose that some of this money were devoted toward raising the taste of some of the public for the highest type of pictures.

"In our schools today our children study classics which are as dead as the men who wrote them. The purpose of this study is to increase the children's appreciation of our language and the best thought that that language has expressed in years gone by.

"Has it improved their langue? Has it improved their appreciation of good literature? How many of the children who have been forced to read these books have retained the thought that was in them? Would it not be just as profitable to the community if he public school money were devoted to the appreciation of the living art that is so close to the daily lives of all of us."

The producer concluded his talk with the assurance that public taste for pictures is becoming beter each year. Whatever progress there has been, however, he said, had been brought about almost entirely through the efforts of the producers and not through the efforts of the public's critics and censors.

Chadwick Announces Two Specials for February

CHADWICK announces two special releases for February. "The Count of Luxembourg" will be released on February 1, and "The Transcontinental Limited" will be released two weeks later.

"The Count of Luxembourg" is an adaptation of the famous operetta of the same name by Franz Lehar, and it is expected to be one of the most important releases on the entire Chadwick program. Arthur Gregor, who is generally considered to be one of Europe's finest directors, wrote the screen story in collaboration with John F. Natteford and directed the picture. George Walsh is featured at the head of an all star cast. Helen Lee Worthing, a former Follies beauty, who has been seen in several leading roles on the screen, plays the role opposite him. James Woods Morrison has an important part as the artist friend of the Count. Other well known players include Lola Todd, Joan Meredith, Michael Dark and Charles Roqua.

"The Transcontinental Limited," Chadwick's second February release, is a railroad melodrama, which was directed by Nat Ross. This production is said to be a spectacular photodrama of railroading pictures. Johnnie Walker plays the leading male role of the A. E. F. hero, returned from France. Eugenia Gilbert, who is also appearing in "The Test of Donald Norton" for Chadwick, plays opposite him. Alec B. Francis, Edith Yorke, Bruce Gordon, George Ovey, Eric Mayne and James Hamel are featured in the cast.

MARY CARR
F. B. O. gets her appealing personality into strong relief in "King of the Turf."

Boyd In "Eve's Leaves"

William Boyd who has just completed work in the title role of Cecil De Mille's personally directed picture, "The Volga Boatman," has been assigned to the leading role opposite Leatrice Joy in "Eva's Leaves" to be directed by Paul Sloane.

Typically American in appearance, with light-brown hair, Boyd should make a splendid foil for the dark-haired Leatrice, and the two promise to provide an entertaining combination.

Walther Long has also been cast for an important role in this production.

Menjou Completes New Paramount Picture, "Social Celebrity"

ADOLPHE MENJOU has completed "A Social Celebrity," his latest starring picture for Paramount, which was filmed under the direction of Malcolm St. Clair, with Chester Conklin and Louise Brooks in the chief supporting roles.

The story of "A Social Celebrity" is an original by Monte Katterjohn. Pierre Collings adapted it.

In it Menjou has one of the best characterizations he has yet essayed on the screen. He plays the part of a small town barber who descends upon New York seeking riches and becomes involved in a social fraud.

Thalberg Due in N. Y.

Following a series of conferences with Louis B. Mayer, head of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Irving G. Thalberg, associate executive, is due in New York today (Friday). He is accompanied by King Vidor and John Gilbert. Mr. Thalberg brought East with him the most ambitious producing plans for the coming season in the history of the studio and he will confer with Messrs. Marcus Loew and Nicholas M. Schenck in this connection. He will remain in New York for three weeks or more and will view with John Gilbert and King Vidor the premiere of "La Boheme," Lillian Gish's new picture.

WHAT DO YOU WANT IN A RICHARD TALMADGE PICTURE? All right, he gets it into "The Night Patrol" for F. B. O. release.

"THE JOHNSTOWN FLOOD"—accurately, thrillingly pictured by a typical William Fox cast headed by George O'Brien. It's an Irving Cummings production.

Next Marion Davies Film For M-G-M To Be "The Red Mill"

MARION DAVIES' next Cosmopolitan Production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, according to an announcement by Louis B. Mayer, will be an adaptation of the well known operetta, 'The Red Mill."

This Marion Davies production will be produced by Irving G. Thalberg, and directed by Marshall Neilan.

Miss Davies will start work in her new starring vehicle shortly after she completes her picture, "Beverly of Graustark," taken from the novel by George Barr McCutcheon, and directed by Sydney Franklin.

Mr. Thalberg, associate studio executive at the big M.-G.-M. plant, plans to give Miss Davies' new picture an elaborate production. He entrusts the direction to Marshall Neilan, whose many successes in the past, as well as his recent hit with "Mike," fully justify Thalberg's confidence.

"The Red Mill" will be adapted from the famous operetta with music by Victor Herbert. The locales of the story are Vienna and other places in Europe.

Hoffman Goes West

M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of Tiffany Productions, has left for Los Angeles to be gone for several weeks. He said that several important conferences are to take place upon his arrival in Hollywood.

Hiram Abrams Adds Six to Sales Force of United Artists

Appoints District Managers to Work Out Strong Field Supervision in Their Respective Districts; Give Names of Supervisors and Territories Covered

ANOTHER step in reorganizing and reshaping the sales force of United Artists' Corporation is announced this week by Hiram Abrams, president of the corporation.

Not content with zoning the United States into three territories, each under the immediate direction of a divisional general sales manager, Mr. Abrams now announces the appointment of six district managers whose work will lie in effecting an intensive field supervision in their respective districts.

Each of these men has had a thorough training in United Artists Corporation selling methods. The new district managers and their territories are as follows:

Kenneth Hodkinson, supervising the San Francisco, Seattle, Los Angeles, Denver and Salt Lake City branch offices.

W. F. Seymour, Pittsburgh, Washington, Atlanta and Dallas branches.

Morris Safier, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Detroit branches.

T. Y. Henry, Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Minneapolis branches.

Henry T. Scully, Boston, New Haven and Portland branches.

Jack Von Tilzer, New York, Philadelphia and Buffalo branches.

Mr. Hodkinson and Mr. Seymour will work under the direction of Paul N. Lazarus, general sales manager for the southern and western division; Mr. Safier and Mr. Henry under Cresson E. Smith, general sales manager for the mid-west division, and Messrs. Scully and Von Tilzer report direct to Moxley A. Hill, general sales manager for the eastern division.

"This sales force formation gives United Artists Corporation an intensive selling organzation in both the Home Office and in the field," said Mr. Abrams.

J. I. Schnitzer Re-engages Two Well-known Directors

Having completed successful productions for F. B. O., two directors were re-engaged by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O. in charge of production, now at the coast studios of the company.

Harmon Weight, who filmed 'Drusilla With a Million" and "Flaming Waters" for F. B. O., has been retained to direct Laura Jean Libbey's "A Poor Girl's Romance," work on which will begin shortly.

James Hogan, having finished "The King of the Turf," will start "The Isle of Retribution," based on a novel by Edeson Marshall.

These will be the last two of the twelve Gold Bond specials which topped the F. B. O. schedule for the current season.

Corinne Griffith's Next

With production on her latest First Nation picture "Mlle. Modiste" about half completed, E. M. Asher, general manager of the Corinne Griffith Productions, has announced that the star's next vehicle will be "Into Her Kingdom," a current popular novel by Ruth Comfort Mitchell.

According to the announcement just received from the Coast, Miss Griffith will do "Ashes," previously selected for early production, following the completion of "Into Her Kingdom" which, it is expected, will be placed in production about the middle of March.

Kelly On Confidential Mission for M. P. T. O. A.

Joseph M. Seider, business manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America announces this week that E. Thornton-Kelly, proprietor of the Grant-Lee Theatre, Palisades, New Jersey, an associate director of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, and active on the Arbitration Board of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, has been entrusted with a confidential mission on behalf of the national theatre owner body.

Directing Lillian Gish

Nathaniel Hawthorne's masterpiece, "The Scarlet Letter," which is being produced by Irving Thalberg, and directed by Victor Seastrom, with Lillian Gish as the famous heroine of the story, was put into production last week in the forest some forty miles north of Los Angeles.

The first sequence which will take up the director's and the principal's efforts for the next few days is participated in only by Miss Gish as Hester Pyrnne and the famous Swedish actor, Lars Hansen, whose first American role is the characterization of the Reverend Dimmesdale.

Harriman Opens Office

Colby Harriman, well known presentation producer, and Editor of "The Theatre of Today" department of Moving Picture World, has opened offices at 1674 Broadway, New York, where he will engage in a general presentation business.

One of the outstanding features of his activities will be his attention to the programs of smaller theatres. Mr. Harriman has devised a series of "Cameo Classics" which he has in the course of production. These are artistic stage novelties particularly adaptable to small stages. Each unit will present artists of merit in complete scenic backgrounds artistically lighted.

Mr. Harriman has just concluded his engagement as production director at the Mosque Theatre, Newark, N. J.

"Flaming Frontier," Western Epic by Universal, Is Ready

Universal Executives Choose It for Immediate Broadway Presentation as an Event in the Celebration of Laemmle's Anniversary Month

"THE FLAMING FRONTIER, Universal's great epic of the West, has been completed and the first print and negative are now in New York. When screened for the Universal executives at 730 Fifth Avenue, it caused a sensation and is hailed as the most thrilling and stupendous Western drama ever produced.

It is a Universal Super-picture and will follow in the footsteps of "The Phantom." So highly is it regarded by Universal, that it has been forecast as the outstanding picture of 1926.. In this connection it will be presented on Broadway in the near future as a high-light of Carl Laemmle's Twentieth Anniversary celebration. Negotiations are under way for a suitable theatre to house the production for a Broadway run. The result will be announced shortly.

"The Flaming Frontier" tells the story of the pioneers who blazed the trail through the savage tribes of Indians to establish the West of today. It is particularly fitting that this picture was chosen, since Laemmle also was a pioneer. For the past twenty years he has been a dominating factor in the establishment of the firm foundation upon which the film business rests today. His tribulations were probable as great as our Western pioneers although his battles were bloodless.

"The Flaming Frontier" is romantically based on historical facts leading up to and including that dramatic moment in American history known as the Custer Massacre. Preparation and research work has been conducted over a period of three years. Among the historical characters appearing in the production are President Grant, General George A. Custer, General Reno, Chiefs Sitting Bull, Rain-in-the-Face, Gall, Red Cloud and Crazy Horse.

Hoot Gibson and Dustin Farnum head the cast of noted players. Gibson plays the part of a pony express rider and friend of General Custer, played by Dustin Farnum. Both are perfectly suited for the parts. As the pony express rider Hoot Gibson performs feats on horseback that are astounding. Anne Cornwall plays the leading feminine role in a natural and convincing manner. George Fawcett as Senator Stanwood gives a characteristic performance. Ward Crane in the role of Sam Belden present the sleek villian of the early pioneer camps. Kathleen Key as Lucretia Belden, his wife, does the best work of her career in a difficult role. Harold Goodwin as the son of Senator Stanwood also plays a difficult role with credit. Every appearance of Eddie Gribbon and Harry Todd will bring forth unstinted laughter. Noble Johnson as Chief Sitting Bull and Joe Bonomo as Chief Rain-in-the Face are excellent. President Grant is played by Walter Rogers in a realistic manner. Other members of the cast include Ed. Wilson, Charles K. French and William Steele.

Three thousand Indians of the Cheynne, Sioux and other tribes, many of whose ancestors participated in the actual battle of Little Big Horn, were used in the reconstructed battle. Half of them were mounted. Twenty-eight cameramen photographed these scenes. The site selected for the most thrilling battle ever seen on the screen where General Custer with his divided regiment, half of the original 212 men having been assigned to General Reno, was completely wiped out, was declared an exact reproduction of the original by Colonel Bryam, U. S. A., military advisor to the director, and others familiar with the spot.

The historic outposts were faithfully reproduced; Fort Hays, the headquarters of the Seventh Cavalry under the command of General Custer, and Crane City, a refuge for outlaws and gamblers. Much of the action takes place at the U. S. Military Academy at West Point in the '70s. These scenes are faithful reproductions of the famed army school.

The story was written by the director, Edward Sedgwick, and adapted by Edward J. Montagne and Charles Kenyon. The excellent camera work was in the hands of Virgil Miller.

Additions to Stellar Cast of "Eve's Leaves"

William Boyd who has given consistently fine performances in many of the Producers Distributing releases, has been cast by Cecil De Mille to play opposite Leatrice Joy in "Eve's Leaves," her next starring vehicle.

So Jin, the blood-chilling Chinese "heavy," has also been secured for a featured role in "Eve's Leaves." This remarkable Oriental character actor is one of the veterans of the motion picture business, having first attracted attention in the Pearl White serial pictures.

Other featured players already in the cast are Robert Edeson, Richard Carle, Nam Bu, another actor of Chinese extraction, Arthur Hoyt and Walter Long. The story, adapted by Elmer Harris and Jack Jevne, concerns a girl, brought up as a boy on a China trading ship, who suddenly learns the value of "Eve's Leaves." Paul Sloane is directing.

Big Cast Chosen For Mary Philbin Picture

Warner Oland, Caroline Snowden, Roy Bloomer and Grace Darmond, have been chosen for supporting roles in "The Star Maker," the Dana Burnett story, "Technique," which Lois Weber will direct for Universal with Mary Philbin in the starring role.

Announcement that Francis X. Bushman will have the leading male role opposite the star has already been made. Miss Weber has finished the adaptation of the story, and expects to begin production within the next few weeks.

Three Leading Men In One Universal Picture

Three prominent screen leading men are gathered together in one cast at Universal City, where King Baggot is directing "Perch of the Devil."

They are Pat O'Malley, who has the actual lead opposite Mae Busch; Theodore Von Eltz and Mario Carillo.

The plot is a marital mix-up in which Miss Busch, O'Malley, Von Eltz, Carillo and Jane Winton scramble for the affections of all the others of opposite sex at one time or another during the story.

"Perch of the Devil" was adapted by Mary O'Hara from the novel of the same name by Gertrude Atherton.

Added to Cast of "Toto"

Antonio D'Algy, handsome Latin type player of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer stock company, has been added to the cast of "Toto," the picturization of the famous stage play by Achmed Abdullah.

The suave Lew Cody has the title role, formerly played on the stage by Leo Ditrichstein, and John M. Stahl, the director, has discovered a practically unknown player for one of the important roles. She is Virginia Bradford, a red haired and petite southern beauty.

D'Algy has the role of the lawyer's nephew, which is well suited to his romantic abilities and appearance. Production on this amusing comedy will commence in a few days.

King Meighan Hops Screenward; Columbia Signs Tom's Brother

After Selling Film He Means to Be "In It"; Not After Tom's Laurels But Means to Land Columbia Pictures Getting First Vehicle Set

THE newest convert to the silver screen is King Meighan, brother of Tom, who since "The Miracle Man" has been well-known in and out of the motion picture trade.

King has long had the desire to act instead of selling motion pictures. This opportunity has been accorded to him by Columbia Pictures Corporation who have signed him to do a series of pictures, the first of which is to be made on the West Coast. King leaves immediately for the studios, and will probably appear as one of the stars of Columbia's "Sweet Rosie O'Grady." This picture will be one of the early releases for next season.

Mr. King Meighan was born in Pittsburgh not so many years ago and attended the public schools in the "Smoky City." When he left Alleghany High he went with the Board of Public Education of Pittsburgh for a short time. Having been active in school theatricals King wanted to go on the stage and try to commercialize his histronic ability but his parents strenuously objected. Bowing to their wishes he became a calculating machine salesman. While it is said that these machines have mechanical brains, nevertheless King's ability in mathematics at school had something to do with his selection on this particular style of commodity for his sales efforts.

Following this he went into the life insurance business for a short time and then joined Famous Players Lasky in their Washington office. Here he had a free hand in the territory and made good. It was while handling these pictures that King had the call or urge to do something.

Mr. Meighan has youth, personality and looks and felt that he should be able to capitalize these in the picture business. He know something of the financial rewards possible for a successful screen star because he had sold film. What more logical than that he should want to follow his famous brother's footsteps? He did not want to capitalize the fact that Tom is his brother but he did realize that other families had one by one appeared on the silver sheet and have made good. There are the Moore brothers, the two Chaplins, the Barrymores, the Pickfords, and a feminine family of Talmadge. Thought King Meighan—why not a family of Meighans?

"I've always wanted to go on the screen," the younger Meighan said "But I want to now more than ever. I believe its possibilities are greater than they were before, and with good authors co-operating, the movies are getting ahead at an extremely rapid pace.

"I'm most anxious to get to Hollywood, and haven't given myself any time at all for getting things together, before I leave for the coast. I signed a starring contract with Columbia Pictures Friday, and I'll be on my trip Westward Sunday night.

"No, I don't know what my first picture will be, nor who will be my leading lady. But they're choosing a dramatic story for me, with much comedy relief. Yes, it will be my very first appearance on the screen. And I have never been on the legitimate stage."

KING MEIGHAN
Brother of Tom. King has just signed a starring contract with Columbia.

Steinberg Made Manager

Nat E. Steinberg has been appointed manager of the St. Louis branch of Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

Mr. Steinberg is thoroughly conversant with conditions existing in St. Louis, having been assistant manager to Barney Rosenthal when the latter was in charge of the Universal branch in that city. He has the good will of the entire exhibitor body of the territory. For the past two years he was vice-president of Columbia Pictures Corp., of which Mr. Rosenthal was president.

Will Do Service Story

Louis B. Mayer announced last week that the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer corporation, of which he is vice-president in charge of production, will produce a very lavishly done Northern story, to be titled, "Robert W. Service's Trail of '98."

The feature picture will be based on the popular poet's novel of the same name. Robert W. Service is the most popular of American balladists, and his poems and stories of Alaska and of the World War are read and known to millions of people. A production based on his work is always a great box-office attraction.

The picture is to be produced by Irving Thalberg, but as yet no director, nor cast, has been announced for the photoplay.

Larmour Offers Sample Layout to Guide Others in Preparation of Their Copy

SOME weeks ago M. W. Larmour, of the National Theatre, Graham, Texas, wrote that he thought the proper layout of advertising material would materially aid in obtaining better results, and suggested that we reproduce some samples.

In commenting upon his letter we asked for some sample layouts with the resultant advertisement, but so far no one has sent in a sample of their work, so Mr. Larmour sets a good example by submitting a duplicate of his own two elevens layout on "That Royle Girl," together with the advertisement as it appears in the local paper.

THE NEWSPAPER SPACE

He explains that this was put through during the holidays and as a result he did not get as good a display as this layout should have yielded, but it can be seen that he got about what he asked for by comparing the display with the layout.

This layout is almost self explanatory. It is made on a sheet of 8½ by 11 inch paper, and as he ordered "Set ad in about 2 columns 11 inches" he got the exact scale by filling the paper top to bottom and making the space within the rule outline just two column width. Most managers will find that "about" may be abused. It is better to be definite and to say "Set in two elevens" if you use the inch rate, or make it "155 by 2" if you use the line rate. Then if the printer drops further down the space you can stand on your order and pay only for two elevens instead of two twelves.

Mr. Larmour has marked the type size of all the big lines, and has made those lines about the proper height, leaving it to the printer to select the exact face.

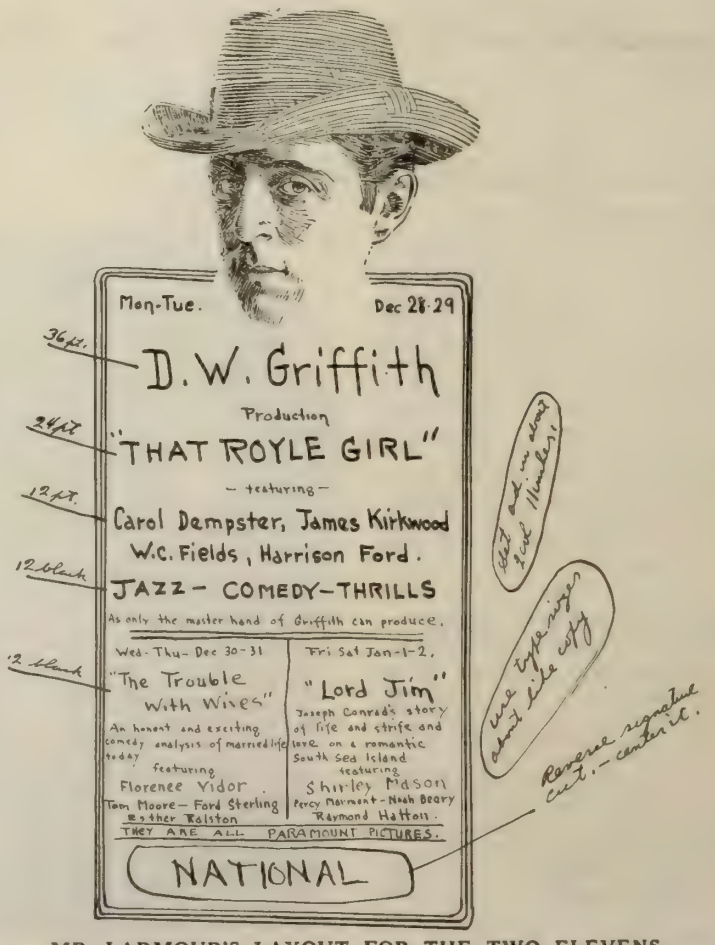
This is all right where you can trust the printer's judgment, but in some offices it would be well to name the face and indicate "26x Chelt bold" or whatever size and face you want, working from the type sample sheet. That all depends upon the printer. Mr. Larmour is fortunate in working with a printer of good taste.

Variants From Style

It will be noted that in his layout Mr. Larmour "staggers" the title of "The Trouble With Wives," but gets a double bank. It is best when you want to stagger a line to make an oblong to the right of the top line and to the left of the second line. To be very exact, you mark this oblong into the same number of squares as you wish em indentation.

Using comparatively little type, Mr. Larmour letters it all in. If you have larger masses of six or eight point description, this is not always practicable. In such a case you mark in lines to show where you want the copy to go and overmark this with a letter, starting with A.

Then you type out the copy on a separate sheet and mark it with the same letter, indicating the width, if you desire. The



MR. LARMOUR'S LAYOUT FOR THE TWO ELEVENS

This was done virtually to scale. Owing to the rush in the newspaper office he did not get as good a result as usual, but generally this form of layout gives him exactly what he wants since he carefully explains his wants.

Paris Manager Seems to Fancy Suitcase Stunt

printer will then set copy A in space A, put B where that letter is marked, and so on. This is a better plan than writing the copy on a sheet and pasting one corner of it to the layout.

Typewritten Layouts

Where a typewritten layout is used, it is not possible to make the letters of varying height. Here it is sufficient to type the copy and mark the sizes, but even here it is better to accompany the typewritten copy with a sketch of the layout.

It always is a good plan to paste in the cuts used in the precise position in which they are to appear, as Mr. Larmour has done.

Perhaps some of the live wires, now that Mr. Larmour has set the example, will kick in with a typed layout and sketched design. But follow Mr. Larmour and you are certain to get results.

Malaney Did It

M. A. Malaney, of Loew's Cleveland theatres, writes that the recent advertisement for The Freshman was produced by his art staff and was not adapted from the press book.

The background of type was set up, cut copy was pasted on this, the lettering was set in and a mortise made for type all in his own art department.

Mr. Malaney adds that he is not above using good plan book material, but this does not happen to be a supplied cut.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

D. W. GRIFFITH'S production, "That Royle Girl," opening on Saturday, was given added impetus when, on Sunday afternoon, Carol Dempster appeared in person on the stage and addressed the audience. The preliminary exploitation given the picture and Miss Dempster sent the week off flying, and business was consistent through the week, closing Friday night.

The surrounding show with Griffith's film included the Topical Review, an impressive overture by the orchestra, and a Revue Populaire. The two musical presentations were given eighteen minutes, while "That Royle Girl" required one hour and forty-one minutes. The Topical Review, as usual, unreeled itself for eight minutes. This brought the entire performance up to two hours and seven minutes, a trifle longer than the average show here.

Freedman's "Slavonic Rhapsody" was the overture which opened each de luxe show, played by the orchestra under the direction of Harold Stern. This overture has some very melodious passages and plenty of impressive work for the brass section, making it an excellent audience number. The lights used were as follows: The new fabric draw curtains over the production stage, forming the center portion of the cyclorama setting which extends from one side of the proscenium to the other, backgrounding the orchestra, was flooded by two bridge lamps of color blend, these floods trailing off to dim at the proscenium posts. Augmenting the color blends were two dome floods of amber, also taking in the musicians. Amber foots on production stage; amber borders; light blue floods from sides hitting the new cove piece which resembles sky and clouds, with transparencies for starts. Eight minutes for the overture.

Following the Topical Review came the Revue Populaire, with two principals and a bevy of twelve girl dancers. For the setting the cabaret arch drop, with platforms behind the arches, was used. Properties included artistic mirror, mosaic vases, benches, tables and a huge chandelier hung in the center. The set was backed up by colored voile drapes, lighted by straw open box lamps hidden back of the platforms. The opening of the incident, with orchestra playing a light popular number as introduction, showed girls grouped in various poses. Soprano, seated center stage with four girls around her, sang "When the One You Love Loves You," with second chorus danced by six girls, then finished strong by soprano. Tenor then came on and sang "Remember," with pantomime by ten girls, after which girls danced to selection from current musical comedy. Tenor then sang "Then I'll Be Happy," with obligato by soprano, after which one of the dancers had a solo number to music from "Sunny." The number closed with "I Wonder Where My Baby Is Tonight," first sung by tenor, then by soprano, assisted by the girls. The Revue Populaire took up ten minutes.

Every Window

Timely ideas sell largely, and just before Christmas the Temple theatre, Toledo, capitalized an idea to break into practically every worthwhile window in town.

Playing the Fox feature, Havoc, cards were done up with "Shop early and you will avoid Havoc for clerks, and find time to see the World's greatest picture, Havoc, at the Temple theatre, starting, etc." Every merchant was glad to give space to that message since it gave him his share and put over a timely message. Merchants who will not advertise an attraction will take a card that helped them, too. Don't try to get it all yourself. Be willing to pay rent.

A radio was borrowed from a shop and installed in the lobby of the Victoria Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., over which the "phantom" voice was heard in the aria from Faust. Guess the singer and you were given seats to The Phantom.

Made a Merry Widow Worth Fifty Bones

They offered only $50 for the Atlanta Merry Widow, so someone on the outside was given the prize, a much better way than offering a reward so large that it has to be kept in the family.

The stunt was worked by the Howard Theatre and was tied to the Georgian. It was worked up by newspaper announcements and double trucks the previous week and on the Friday before the opening the impersonator of the Widow went over the route she would officially cover the followiing day, but this time she was masked. The next day, of course, every effort was devoted to making her look entirely unlike the young woman of the previous trip but she finally was captured and led to the Georgian office. The co-op pages were obtained through having the Widow enter the stores of the advertisers, which got the crowd in, and not all of them got out without being tempted by the bargains displayed.

A social club was tied to a dance contest with the masked Widow attending to hand out the silver loving cup which formed the prize, and a music store cleared its window that a couple might do the waltz several times a day, particularly around showing times. A loud speaker carried the music to the crowd outside the glass, and also advertised the phonograph record, which was the reason the store wen tto all the trouble.

The Nunally Candy store made an elaborate display of the better grades of candies, and 5,000 blotters and 10,000 heralds, with eight oil paintnig supplemented the newspaper and billboard work.

For Book Marks

Book marks have become standard on book titles and have ceased to be a novelty, but in Detroit the Washington Theatre managed to find something new.

Book marks on The Iron Horse carried a coupon which was good for a pre-showing the Saturday before the opening when presented by a student along with 10 cents.

Boxing Prologues to The Fighting Heart

Boxing matches to settle the question of local championships were used to help put over The Fighting Heart at the Hippodrome theatre, Youngstown, Ohio. This was good for a lot of talk on the sporting pages, where it would do the Fox release the most good.

This was backed by a throwaway in imitation of the broadsides used by the fight clubs to announce their matches. These were put into barbershops and other places where the sporting element is supposed to congregate and reached many who generally prefer the bouts to the pictures. They came to see The Fighting Heart.

In the lobby a special three-sheet board carried pictures of Jack Dempsey and George O'Brien, the latter the star of the picture. In between was the announcement that O'Brien was the only boxer Dempsey was afraid to meet, and this was backed up by a bona fide wire from Dempsey.

It all made for extra business.

Staged a Circus

Frank J. Miller, of the Imperial Theatre, Augusta, Ga., had a really characteristic prologue on Sally of the Circus.

He used a canvas cyclorama with a beaverboard circus ring, putting down a sawdust floor. Two small children in clown costume did a dance and then a third little girl entered on a led pony. She was in the conventional tights and tarletan of the old-time equestrian star. After a solo dance the two clown girls made it a trio for a closing number.

As all three children were from fashionable homes, the stunt had a society flavor that helped not a little.

Clock Face Used to Tell of Lightnin' Hour Sales

Mayor Helped to Sell New Brooms

Making the Mayor the chief exploiter for New Brooms was the stunt the Palace Theatre, Indianapolis, used the "week" idea.

Mayor Shank issued a proclamation explaining that on the eve of his retirement from office he was going to use New Brooms to clean up City Hall and calling on all the inhabitants to use New Brooms for their own year-end housecleaning.

This was sold off to the Retail Grocers Association, who placarded some 500 windows and persuaded the grocers to make a drive on New Brooms. Each purchaser of a new sweeper was given a ticket which, with one paid admission, would admit two women to any matinee. As this was in the middle of the pre-Christmas slump, the two-for-one was a real business bringer, for many came who would not have bought in at full price, even for the matinees, but who could not resist the bargain angle.

An S. P. C. C.

When he came to play The Making of O'Malley at the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., D. Roscoe Faunce inaugurated a contest for the most popular policeman.

Then he pulled one of his own. He persuaded the City Commission to proclaim a Courtesy to Policemen Week, and the Society for the Promotion of Courtesy to Cops did a lot toward putting the picture over.

The newspapers cooperating in the popularity contest declared it to be the most successful stunt they ever had worked.

Circused

Everything was circusy around the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, during the showing of Sally of the Sawdust. Charles G. Braham put a circus tent on the marquise with cutout elephants, and dressed the lobby to suggest the main entrance to a circus. The prologue opened with a barker selling the sideshow and faded into the interior of the tent with a number of circus stunts.

He perambulated a parade with live bears and other animals in fancy dens.

Different

Jack Rowley, of the Rialto theatre, Laredo, Texas, is one of the few managers who did not perambulate a Lost World monster Instead he put the animal on top of the marquise where it could be seen up and down the street and put cutout letters across the front below the rim. Backed by an extensive general campaign he worked up interest to get a capacity opening matinee, which assured business for the remainder of the run.

Uses a Rewind for An Animation Motor

Leo L. Hartler, of the Colonial, Dream and Arcade Theatres, Hoquiam, Wash., part of the R. and D. circuit, sends in the photograph of a front he made on The Lucky Devil. This is a cutout racing car with the number thirteen carried by Richard Dix in the play. It had practical wheels which are turned by a rewind motor instead of the usual fan or special motor.

The cutout sets in a shadow box with the lower half of a six sheet pasted to the front for announcement, and it makes a very effective display. Many persons would watch the wheels go round for a time and then go over and buy seats.

The photograph shows part of the Christmas display and Mr. Hartley explains that he put this top piece up a week in advance to make it easier to complete the display at the proper time.

For the Consul

It's no secret that Griffith's part in He's a Prince is patterned after the Prince of Wales, and this gave Barry Burke and Raymond B. Jones the idea of giving the British Vice-Consul a preview before the picture opened at the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

The Consul liked it and told the assembled newspaper men that he did, so they put it in their papers with a beneficial effect on the box office. You can make almost anything press work if you can only hit the right angle.

Widows Won

Widows, merry or otherwise, were the guests of R. T. Newton at the Capitol theatre, Little Rock, Ark., during the run of The Merry Widow. He got a lot of pure reading matter on the stunt, and it helped to raise the box office figures on the run.

matches the lettering, both fitting the type of story, and this style of drawing is about the only thing that will fit the adaptation of the poem. Exceptional Space On The Merry Widow

Half a cut sometimes serves as well as a full one. There is just a slice of the familiar pose from The Merry Widow in this down page twos from Chicago in the advertisement of the Roosevelt Theatre, but it serves as well as a four or five-column space and costs less in newspapers where they sell space at a high line rate. As a matter of fact, we think that leaving most of the pose to the imagination make for additional interest, since the suggestive is always more interesting than the revealing. Size alone counts for much in Chicago, where only the Cosmopolitan attractions can get a big splash in the Hearst paper. The others have to pay a rate almost as large as that charged in New York, and a double full column is almost prohibitive in price. It pays only for an extended run, but Balaban & Katz knew that the Widow was good for a long run, so they put it over with a flash that would not be practical for the engagement of a week or two. There is not very much copy in proportion to the space taken, but it is copy that will sell in every line. It is not only opulent copy, but it reads convincingly. It sounds as though the copy man believed what he wrote. This cannot always be said of theatrical copy, too much of which is of a general nature that might be pinned to any play of similar type. Sometimes the most glittering sentences leave the reader unmoved because the copy man is so palpably striving for effects without knowing precisely what he is talking about. Here there is conviction as well as enthusiasm, and the space was worth its cost in getting early interest for this sumptuous production. If you have not played the Widow, here's a tip. In the New York run the feature has been the large number of women who buy in. Groups of from two to half a dozen women attend the night shows without masculine escort, and the women in the average audience far outnumber the men, so make most of your drive on the women. This Novel Design Makes for Interest

This looks like a plan book cut, or perhaps part of one, on The Phantom of the Opera,

A Universal Release

AN ODD ATTRACTOR

but we have not seen it used before. This treatment comes from the Mozart Theatre, Canton, Ohio, and it gives an unusual and therefore striking display. The big value of this space comes from the white in contrast to the black rather than from the design as such. It is much the same as a reverse strip but with the added value of irregularity of outline. It is only a three fives, but it makes a much stronger flash than would the average space in this size. One of the good points is the diagonal setting of the adjectives. This makes it just difficult enough to be interesting. It must not be too difficult, or it will not be read and if these lines were at right angles to the bottom rule few would take the trouble to turn the paper sideways, but on the slant they still can be read easily, though there is the suggestion of difficulty. This seems to be a local addition to the cut.

Gets Two Phases of His Secretary

Getting two sides of the story in one cut is an achievement of Loew's Palace Theatre, Washington, D. C. The modest secretary and the butterfly girl into which she developed are both shown in the one cut, and the copy builds up on the story told by the cut. Of the two phases, Norma, the grub, will attract the greater attention, because this is a role with which she has not been largely identified. One looks for her in fine clothes, and the secretary is a bit startling at first glance, and so more apt to get the attention of the fans, but the other cut and the text both give assurance that she will blossom into the woman they know best, and a more certain sale is made. The line cut comes up much better than the half tone. They almost always do. Few halftones can fight line in newspaper work for which reason it is well to leave line alone when you are trusting to the halftone for emphasis. Here the typist is the more important, which is probably one reason why the halftone was employed. It gives greater emphasis to the more useful line cut.

smash on Monday. In this he also used the comment of Lynde himself from the supplied material. The local comment was run in six point in the upper right hand corner and the lower left, eight being worked in. But he did not stick to straight spaces. He used a lot of one inch scatters the previous week as well as during the three days of the showing. These were mostly single ones, though he used one double, and they worked so well that he used them after the opening to stress the fact that the engagement ran only for three days. This helped to hold the interest to the picture and to drive them in before it got out of town. The appeal was especially directed at the prospects who were not regular attendants and who might not be supposed to know of the weekly change, or at least not to realize it. He supplemented the personal endorsement ads with the news stories, for Lynde made the preview real news and not merely material for an advertising display. It gave him a record in the Christmas shopping periods when records have a tendency to go the other way.

Second Day Ad Is Simple But Strong

Here is an ideal second day space from the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland. It is a two fives and we think that it carries much more conviction than would a lot of "greats" and "splendids." This sounds as though

AN IDEAL FOLLOW AD

M. A. Malaney meant just what he said, and we think that it is even better than the usual "apology" for a lack of seats. If you get too strong you are not apt to be believed. The over-glowing hurrah sounds like a press agent's lies, no matter how sincerely it may be intended, but this reserved praise carries real weight, and means much more than excessive praise, no matter how richly that praise may be deserved. Just keep this in mind when you want to put a picture over to extra sales.

Has an Improvement on Calendar Idea

M. A. Malaney has added one more touch to the calendar idea in his space for the third week of The Freshman. He puts a black seal with "last day" over the Saturday which marks the end of the run. In the loop of the arrow is "Get here on or before that date or you'll miss it." The calendar with the marked dates picked out in white against a darker ground is not new, but it always is good and can be repeated more frequently than many novelties. The idea not only gives the essential week, but it stresses the last day, which gives even greater emphasis to the thought. It's best when worked for a hold over, but it is good on any big picture if kept only for the big ones. This cannot be made an accessory cut except for such events as a national week, but the results are so uniformly good that it will pay even the small town man to have a cut made for his own use. It will not cost much and it will sell many more tickets than the cost. Try it some time and you'll be surprised and delighted.

Halloween Stunts Helped Baldpate

George Brown played up Hallowe'en with lobby, foyer and stage effects to help put over Seven Keys to Baldpate, which was his attraction.

There was a fountain in the lobby with a mirror into which the girls could peer for a glimpse of their future husbands, and a tub of apples was spotlighted in the foyer. Both lobby and foyer were dressed in red, yellow and black with cutout switches and goblins, and a large owl in the lobby winked one red eye. On the program was a Hallowe'en overture of gooseflesh music with errie effects in the darkened house.

For the picture he obtained a display, the evolution of the lock from a hardware concern and got four windows in the Yale & Towne hook-up, one of the concerns using considerable newspaper space.

George McManus' "The Newlyweds" New Comedy Series for Stern Bros.

Carrying Out Announced Policy of High Class Series Comedies, the Stern Brothers Will Make Thirteen Two-Reelers from Cartoons for Universal Release

WHAT promises to be one of the best two-reel comedy series ever made for the screen is promised for next season's market by Stern Brothers, makers of two-reel comedy releases for distribution by Universal exchanges. A contract has just been signed by the Stern Brothers and George McManus, the famous newspaper cartoonist, whereby the comedy producers have obtained the screen rights for the popular newspaper cartoon characters "The Newlyweds and Their Baby." The series will include 13 two-reelers.

"The Newlyweds and Their Baby" is one of the best known newspaper comic strips ever published. It has appeared in scores of newspapers all over the country and is one of the outstanding favorites.

This is another of the important steps taken by the Stern Brothers following their recently announced change of policy. They announced that henceforth their production activities would be confined to series of high class comedies and that no expense would be spared in production or in getting suitable material for screening. In order to obtain the screen rights for the McManus comic characters they had to pay an exceptionally stiff price, but they say that this is well justified by the excellent quality of the series they plan to turn out.

"The Newlyweds and Their Baby" series is the third highclass series so far announced by the Sterns for the 1926-1927 market. The first was a new "Buster Brown" series, to be even better than the present series, which has proved a revelation in the comedy field, winning a place on the screens of the finest theatres in the land, and chalking up a box-office drawing power hailed as marvelous by hundreds of exhibitors.

The second series to be announced for Universal release was "What Happened to Jane," a group of 13 two-reelers featuring Wanda Wiley and Al Ford. This series is already in the making. The stories are being written by Roy Evans and the direction is in the hands of Jess Robbins. The series, each two-reeler a separate comedy, but all containing many of the same characters, deals with the adventures of a modern flapper and the escapades she and her real sweetie get into, in connection with their attempts to evade the hand-picked suitors wished on the girl by her mother and father.

Two other high class series are projected for next year by the Stern Brothers. Arrangements probably will be completed in a few days for the screen rights to other material, of the same character as "The Newlyweds and Their Baby." In fact, the Sterns says that they have another great surprise in store for the trade, which they will announce within a week or so, and which will absolutely clinch the Stern Brothers Comedy output for 1926-1927 as the best bet of the industry.

No selection has yet been made of players to take the roles in "The Newlyweds and Their Baby." The series, of course, will be enacted by real actors, as closely resembling the original cartoon characters as possible, just as in the case of the "Buster Brown" comedies. Neither has a director been selected for the series. The Sterns are studying the comedy field in the hopes of obtaining the services of a top-notch director, with a long string of short comedy successes to his credit, for the Newlyweds two-reelers. Announcements as to cast and company executives will be made in the near future.

Meanwhile, production is booming at the Hollywood studios of the Stern Brothers, with the Buster Brown company and the Wanda Wiley company busy on the new series pictures, and several other companies, including those headed by Edna Marian, Al Alt, Charles King and Constance Darling, at work on two-reelers for late Spring and Summer release.

"Casey of the Coast Guard"

Pathe Serial Directed by Will Nigh and Featuring Helen Ferguson and George O'Hara Is a Crackerjack

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

AS IS EVIDENT from the title, the newest Pathe serial, "Casey of the Coast Guard," is woven around the exploits of the brave body of men who guard our coasts to prevent smuggling and aid vessels in distress. George O'Hara and Helen Ferguson are the featured players.

We doubt if a more ideal background for a serial could be found than the adventures with which these "watchdogs of the sea" meet in their regular rounds of duty. In addition to providing abundant material for just the kind of situations that appeal to the serial fan, there is added realism in having the story deal with the exploits of a real and romantic body of men and additional punch in the fact that much is authentic as the U. S. Coast Guard actively co-operated in the filming of the serial.

The story is developed along familiar serial lines with the usual carried over suspense. In the first episode we find the hero, Ensign Casey, the terror of smugglers, in love with Doris who introduces him to a supposed Count and Countess. Casey's brother in chasing a smuggler is shot and Casey vows vengeance.

The second episode shows Casey on the trail which leads to the home of the countess. He is wounded and Doris, coming to his aid, is captured by the smuggler's henchman. Casey enters the house and mounts a ladder while the count waits for him with drawn revolver.

Episode three shows the Guard as having traced the smuggler to a yacht, and Casey is sent in an aeroplane to this vessel which sails as he gets on board and confronts the count. Just then, a coast guard cutter, with Doris aboard, fires a shot over the bow of the yacht which disregards the signal to stop.

Director Will Nigh has filmed this story in such a manner that the suspense keeps mounting and the action and interest grow continually stronger, with the result that "Casey of the Coast Guard" offers exceptionally exciting entertainment that will delight the serial fans.

We believe both of the leading players to be new to serials although they are well-known in other lines of motion picture acting. Their performance should make them favorites with the serial fans, for George O'Hara makes a likeable hero and Helen Ferguson is attractive as his sweeheart. Coit Albertson, an experienced serial player, scores in the heavy role and Jean Jarvis, a newcomer does well as his assistant, the countess.

"Casey of the Coast Guard" is an exceptionally good serial.

"Officer of the Day"

(Fox Comedy—Two Reels)

LIKE other recent Imperial Comedies, this one has a real plot running through it. A lover whose prospective father-in-law has been appointed consul to an out-of-the-way country joins the navy to get there. All goes well until he reaches the place. He gets wet and while his clothes are drying dons a captain's uniform and finds himself the guest of honor at a reception. The real captain comes along and kids him as a vamp and heartbreaker. The chap, however, makes good and wins forgiveness when he saves the girl who has been kidnapped by a rival suitor. There are a lot of good gags in this comedy and some amusing slapstick. Harold Goodwin is amusing in the title role and Jack Ackroyd has some good rough and tumble comedy as his pal. Eugenie Gilbert is excellent and attractive as the girl. A good comedy for the masses.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Winged Rider"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

THIS Mustang picture features Edmund Cobb and tells the conventional story of a western cattle rustler, a ranch man, his pretty daughter and a mounted scout posing as the rustler. "Jackie" Day, the girl, falls in love with the man she supposes is the rustler and shields him. In the meantime, he gets evidence against the crooked ranch foreman. This subject is well staged with picturesque backgrounds, fast riding and capable acting. The ending, however, when the real identity of the supposed rustler is exposed, comes as no particular surprise.—Sumner Smith.

"Fish for Two"

(Red Seal—Novelty—One Reel)

A PLEASING little novelty of boyhood days is this Gem of the Screen which shows a little dog urging his master to go fishing. The boy falls in the water and the dog rescues him. A clever bit shows the dog retrieving the fishing pole which is found to have attached to it a big fish. The picture is entertaining and has been filmed amidst pretty scenic surroundings. The dog shows a lot of intelligence.—C. S. Sewell.

LLOYD HAMILTON appears as the collector for an installment furniture house who is sent into a terribly tough neighborhood, in this issue of his series for Educational. He throws all the furniture out of the window and is joking with a tough when he discovers that the tough is the owner of the furniture. As he is about to be beaten up a rival gang appears and the two gangs fight each other to a finish. Lloyd appears as a hero to a rich girl held for ransom. She takes him to her home and vamps him. Her jealous guardian appears and Lloyd is thrown out of the window. While waiting in an auto to consider what to do, the machine is lifted in the air by a derrick and finally lands in an apartment, runs down several flights of stairs and falls to pieces on the sidewalk. This is an amusing number with quite a number of laughs. Lloyd does some good near-fall stuff while the auto is suspended in mid-air and his inimitable acting contributes considerable merriment. Well up to the standard of the recent Lloyd releases.—C. S. Sewell.

"Mazie's Married"

(F. B. O.—Series—Two Reels)

WITH this release "The Adventures of Mazie" series reaches its twelfth and final installment. As the title tells, Mazie gets married, and those who have followed her adventures will readily guess that her boss is the lucky chap. The first reel is devoted to the ineffectual attempts made by Dorsey to propose, aided by Tripp and Fall. Then, a crook steals important papers, and, as usual, Mazie and her pals are on the job and finally get them back. Mazie helps her boss by writing "yes" on a card he was too timid to hand to her, but which her pals found. There is plenty of action and excitement and the comedy situations are amusing. A fitting ending to this series that has proven decidedly snappy and entertaining.—C. S. Sewell.

"A Dumb Friend"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

THIS Blue Bird, featuring Arthur Lake, is a very good juvenile comedy. As driver of a cleaner's wagon, he is mistaken for a nobleman and tendered a reception by the girl with whom he has fallen in love. There all the men follow his bizarre style in ties. But everywhere that Arthur goes, even within the girl's house, his devoted horse and the attached wagon follow him. At last he confesses the deception and is forgiven. The comedy is wound around the repeated appearances of horse and wagon in the most unexpected places while Arthur is talking to the girl. It is very effective fun.—Sumner Smith.

TELEPHONE GIRL SERIES. (F. B. O. Series). Star, Alberta Vaughn. For the highbrows each installment is a knockout. For the farmer trade they seem to please fair. I should say about every other one is good for my bunch. Not liked as well as the familiar slapstick comedies. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

WILD WEST. (Pathe Serial). Am now on third episode and don't yet know what it is all about. Lay off this one or you will wish that you had never started it. My attendance has fallen off with each episode; just simply cannot tell what it's all about, no action, no nothing, and yet I have seven more weeks of it. A. Mitchell, Dixvie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

TWO TWO-REEL COMEDIES, ONE TWO-REEL DETECTIVE STORY, FABLES, TOPICS, REVIEW. (Pathe). Audience who came liked the above, but not many came. The worst New Year's business I've had for seven years. Weather was splendid and no counter attractions locally. Cashier reported that numerous people came and looked over the lobby display, smiled and got back into their cars. John McGill, Community Theatre (400 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

MISFIT SAILOR. (Educational Comedy). Star, Bill Dooley. Why does every comedy producer have to try the Harold Lloyd stunt of eating something that isn't what it's supposed to be? This gob gargles a bun loaded with shaving cream and terrific facial contortions ensue. His adam's apple is a sure enough star. Funny comedy. They'll laugh. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

ONLY A COUNTRY LASS. (Educational Comedy). Nowhere near as good as "The Voice of the Nightingale" though there is a wonderful bit of work in making it. It only pleased a few. High class and family trade town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

TRUTHFUL LIAR. (Pathe Comedy). Star, Will Rogers. A tragedy not a comedy. Rogers' comedies are all too deep for the ordinary theatregoer. This one should be very good among the aristocrats. Appeal, poor. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

WEEK KNEES. (Educational Comedy). Very poor one reel comedy. Not much to it. Town and farm class town of 900. Admission 10-25-35. Oren J. Spalti, Strand Theatre (235 seats), Pleasantville, Iowa.

THE LION AND ANDY GUMP hold the interest of every one sitting through the new Gump comedy, "Andy's Lion's Tale," which Samuel Van Ronkel produced for Universal release. PRODUCERS DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION has in "The Million Dollar Handicap" a horse-racing melodrama that builds up to a terrific whirlwind climax that will bring the spectators to the edge of their seats and cause them to yell with excitement. It is one of the best of its kind we have ever seen and should go over big with the vast majority of patrons.

John Porter, who owns a stock farm, has a charming daughter, Alis. One of her suitors is Crane, a banker, who secretly owns a rival stable and does not hesitate to use crooked measures to gain his ends. He unloads on Porter an apparently worthless horse which has been doped to win a race, brings about a situation which results in Alis' brother embezzling money from the bank and then before the big handicap has his henchman doctor Porter's entry so that it is out of the race. Alis, however, substitutes the apparently worthless horse and acting as her own jockey wins the race and saves her brother and her sweetheart, who tried to shoulder his guilt. Incidentally, the excitement brings about the cure of her father, who was injured and not expected to walk again.

It will be seen that the story follows along the usual lines of pictures of this type, introducing several sure-fire melodramatic angles, doped horses, crooked jockeys, the weak brother, and other lines of villainy. It gets off to a rather leisurely start, but once the various threads are planted, continues to gain speed and momentum up to the exceptionally well handled racing scene. Here is a fine example of construction and direction, for which we take off our hat to Scott Sidney. In a superb manner he builds up interest and suspense along several lines at the same time, for sandwiched in between the shots of the race itself with the girl outwitting the crooked jockey, he shows the father in a wheel chair on an open wagon becoming so excited that he continually comes very near rolling off. Every time this happens the audience will gasp or yell, and there is a big punch when he does fall off and, forgetting his lameness, starts to walk away. But this is not all, for there are several cut-ins showing effective comedy between two negroes. The race itself is unusually exciting for it has been filmed so that the entire course from start to finish is followed by the camera.

Vera Reynolds, as Alis, is the centre of interest and gives a thoroughly pleasing and capable performance. Ralph Lewis, who can always be depended on in roles of this kind, scores as the father and puts over a big punch in the wheel chair episode. Edmund Burns, the third featured player, has less to do but is pleasing and registers particularly in a fight with the villain. In fact, the entire cast does effective work. Great credit is due to Director Scott Sidney for his admirable direction which puts this picture over with a bang.

Tony Shares Honors with Tom Mix in Stirring Scenes of Production That Should Please Fans

Based on novel "Conquistador" by Katherine F. Gerould

TONY must have been kicking to good effect, for in "The Yankee Senor" he gets more opportunity than was given him in recent Tom Mix releases. He steals part of the big scene from Tom himself and contributes the comedy relief in a fight sequence. He is trying to batter down a door to come to Tom's relief and Tom backs the villain against that portion of the door receiving the impact of Tony's hoofs.

This fight would be almost enough to carry the picture over with the Mix fans, but this is secondary to a sequence in which Tom is bound to the back of a wild horse and turned loose. Tony unties his halter rope, gallops after, and at the end of a wild chase over the mesa unties the ropes and frees his master. It is a tremendous situation and should lift them out of their seats.

This time Tom is the son of an American adventurer who married the daughter of a Spanish ranch owner, Don Fernando Guiterrez, for which she has turned away. In his declining years the Don seeks his own blood to carry on the family traditions. This is not relished by his foster son, Juan, who has expected to inherit the ranch and Manuelita, a relative of the owner. Tom is engaged to a girl in Boston, who comes to the ranch, but Juan very successfully breaks the engagement through the importation of a dancer as star of a fete given in honor of the lady from Massachusetts, who sees the girl go into Tom's apartment and does not see him throw her out, so that leaves the way open to the marriage of Tom and Emanuelita, but not until Tom has thrashed Juan; who is the secret head of a bandit gang, and his chief henchman.

The story is rather sketchily developed, but it holds the interest. There is a fine sequence in color of the fete under the glorious Mexican night sky, and some picturesque settings.

Olive Borden is appealing as the Mexican girl and Kathryn Hill properly icy as the original sweetheart, but Margaret Livingston, as a dancer, is easily the largest eyeful among the women, though her's is a minor role. Tom Kennedy, as the chief thug, contributes a vivid character sketch and Francis McDonald is a regular snake in the gras.

This is one of the best of Mix's recent productions and should amply satisfy his followers.

Herbert Brenon Production of Cohan Stage Success Is Even Better Than the Original

"Happy" Farrell	Tom Moore

Charles Nelson	Norman Trevor
Fred Carroll	"Bobby" Watson
Jane Rosemond	Josephine Drake
Inspector Craig	George Nash
Tom Crosby	William B. Mack
Mars. Lane	Helen Linroth

Based on play by George M. Cohan
Scenario by Paul Schofield
Directed by Herbert Brenon

LIKE many plays originally done for the stage, George M. Cohan's character study, "The Song and Dance Man," gains much in its screen version, since much can be shown that is merely referred to in the stage version. When "Happy" Farrell tells of the death of his partner; we move from the dressing room to the stage with the pair, and all through the story there is a similar gain in atmosphere and a reduction in the talk.

The result is excellent entertainment and Herbert Brenon has been very successful in his handling of the scenario. The story is advanced smoothly and while there are no "big" scenes, the interest is early caught and is held to the unexpected climax.

"Happy" Farrell is a very real man to those who know their vaudeville: the song and dance man whose eyes are ever on Broadway though his abilities hold him to "the sticks." He fails when he gets his long coveted trial on Broadway and, disappointed, he turns to a commercial career and makes good, only to be drawn back to the homeland of the stage. "Happy" is a real person, stressed a little to meet the exigencies of dramatic construction, but still convincing, and he should make friends among all classes. This is not one of those "it's good if your patrons like this sort thing" stories. It should make a very broad appeal.

Tom Moore closely follows the author in the latter's depiction of the role, but is at his best when he momentarily forgets his model, for he loses naturalness in his imitation, but he holds the interest at all times. Bessie Love is scarcely the ideal type for Leola, though she handles the role well and certainly does a snappy Charleston. Norman Trevor is excellent as the theatrical magnate, but Harrison Ford is swamped by an artificial role. George Nash and Josephine Drake in minor roles, contribute not a little to the comedy. More comedy comes from the sub-titles, most of which are taken from the play manuscript.

"The Song and Dance Man" is not a "wow" to borrow from the song and dance vernacular, but it is a sound and entertaining offering, well developed and even better staged.

Fast-Moving Story Involving Stolen Diamonds Presents Evelyn Brent as Star in Dual Roles

Jeanette Durant / Jerry Lynn	Evelyn Brent

Story and Scenario by Fred Myton
Directed by Chet Withey

HER NEWEST starring feature in the series for F. B. O., "Queen of Diamonds" gives Evelyn Brent the opportunity to appear in dual roles, as a stage star who is in league with diamond thieves and as her chorus girl double who foils the conspiracy.

When Phillips, a diamond thief, makes arrangements with Jeanette Durant, a stage star to take charge of stolen diamonds, a rival thief kidnaps her and through a ruse gets Jerry, the chorus girl to pose in her stead. The plan almost works, but Phillips kills the other thief and Jerry finds herself suspected. While posing as the star she meets Ramsey a producer and carries through the deception to aid her pal, a struggling playwright to get a hearing for his play. When the police begin to close in on her, Jerry arranges an interview with Phillips in which he incriminates himself and Jeanette. The producer agrees to take the play and to star Jerry in it.

Chet Withey has given this melodramatic theme good direction, and while the story is not always convincing, and there is practically no suspense as to the final outcome, good dramatic tension has been developed that holds the interest in the plot development. "Queen of Diamonds" will probably prove satisfying entertainment for Evelyn Brent's fans and lovers of melodrama in general, for the story moves forward as a good pace and never gives the attention a chance to lag.

Evelyn Brent provides sufficient contrast in the two roles, and gives a good performance. The cast gives her good support, headed by Theodore Von Eltz as her playwright-sweetheart.

Lon Chaney Gives Remarkable Performance of Two Different Roles in Gripping Story

Crook Drama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

CAST:

The Black Bird / The Bishop	Lon Chaney
West End Bertie	Owen Moore
Fifi	Renee Adoree
Polly	Doris Lloyd
Shadow	Andy McLennan

Story and direction by Tod Browning

STARRING Lon Chaney and directed by Tod Browning, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "The Black Bird," offers unusually tense and gripping entertainment, somewhat similar in type to "The Unholy Three" in which this combination scored a tremendous success.

The action is laid in the Limehouse district of the slums of London and concerns Dan, a notorious crook, whose brother, known as the "Bishop," conducts a mission. Dan, who is separated from his wife, falls in love with Fifi a dancer, and a swell crook, Bertie, is his rival. Bertie wins Fifi's love but Dan double-crosses him and uses every means his crafty brain can suggest to outdo him but fails. Finally, the police close in on Dan and his secret is discovered, that in reality he is also the "Bshop." He dies from an injury sustained by a fall and leaves the road clear for Bertie to marry Fifi.

Naturally, there is no sympathy established for Chaney as Dan, but in this part as the misshapen Bishop, he having abundant opportunities, does some of the very best work of his career. His handling of both of these roles is superb.

Audiences are early let in on Dan's secret and it is a marvelous piece of work to see Chaney make his changes from one role to the other, twisting himself and apparently throwing one arm and one leg out of joint. His death in great agony is a rather morbid touch but is the climax to a fascinating character study that is really the work of genius.

Chaney dominates the story, but Renee Adoree gives an exceptionally fine performance as Fifi, and Owen Moore is excellent as the gentleman crook. Tod Browning's direction of this picture is flawless, the sets, atmosphere and types of the Limehouse district are convincing and a study in themselves and, although the story is melodramatic in type, it is filled with dramatic situations that grip the attention. He early builds up strong dramatic tension and suspense and holds it to the end.

Thomas Burke	William Conklin
Printer's Devil	Joan Standing

Based on novel by Leroy Scott.
Directed by Burton King.

A CAST of well-known players, headed by Betty Compson, House Peters and Rockcliffe Fellowes, including Jay Hunt, the star of "Lightnin'"; Emmet King, William Conklin and Bernard Randall and Joan Standing, is one of the box-office features of Associations Exhibitors production, "The Counsel for the Defense."

Adapted from a popular novel by Leroy Scott, this picture tells the story of the efforts of a woman lawyer to save her lovable and unselfish father from jail when he is framed by the town's leading lawyer and banker on a charge of graft. She fails, due to overwhelming circumstantial evidence, but finally, with the aid of the editor of the local paper, and an outsider, who poses as a bidder for the waterworks, she secures evidence against the lawyer, as well as a confession from the banker when an epidemic rages and the girl's father, a doctor, is released from jail to fight it and saves the banker's wife. The editor, who has been railroaded to jail, for libel, finds the girl waiting for him on his release.

Burton King has given this story capable direction. It is good heart-interest melodrama that holds the attention and will entertain the average patron. The various complications are nicely worked out and the turning of the townspeople on their former favorite when he is unmasked provides an exciting climax. A woman lawyer, her defense of her father in court, the frame-up and the jury finding an innocent man guilty, are not only good entertainment but exploitation angles.

Betty Compson, who has the only feminine role; House Peters as the hero and Rockliffe Fellowes as the villain are capably cast and, in fact, the whole company is entirely satisfactory. Especially noteworthy is the portrayal of the lovable unselfish old doctor by Jay Hunt. He is ideal for the role and the scenes where he tries to comfort the very men who sent him to jail will cause a tug at the heart.

Scenario by Sada Cowan
Directed by Howard Higgin

NUMBERING among the featured players Belle Bennett and Lois Moran, who in similar roles as mother and daughter scored so decisively in "Stella Dallas;" First National is offering "The Reckless Lady" adapted from a story by Sir Phillip Gibbs.

Mrs. Fleming, a young wife and mother, has an affair with Feodor, a Russian connisseur of women, who pays her gambling debts. Her husband suddenly returns and will have nothing more to do with her but demand the custody of their daughter Sylvia. Mrs. Fleming takes Sylvia away and years after we see them at Monte Carlo. Feodor reappears and makes love to Sylvia as does Hillier a young American. Fleming who has threatened to follow her and take Sylvia away finally finds his wife and they are reconciled. In the meantime Feodor has compromised Sylvia but her mother straightens matters out after confessing to the girl that she has made her living by gambling. Hillier finds happiness with Sylvia and Fleming, to avoid a scandal lets Feodor go free.

The work of the entire cast is excellent. Belle Bennett plays with feeling the role of the mother, but there is little sympathy in the character, Lois Moran is especially good as the bouyant, happy, unsophistocated girl. James Kirkwood is good as Fleming, and Lowell Sherman gives one of his superior performances as a polished villain. Ben Lyon is well cast as the snappy young American, and Charles Murray as a policeman contributes some peppy and amusing ocmedy touches.

The picture is well mounted and especially effective are the scenes of a carnival in Monte Carlo. The early part of the story is well developed, but coincidence plays a large part in the later developments some of which do not ring with conviction and appear to have been introduced more for effect.

FROM a western ranch to Vienna and thence to a mythical Balkan kingdom is the varied expanse of territory covered by "The Cowboy and the Countess," Buck Jones' newest starring vehicle for William Fox.

An auto accident brings to Buck's ranch the Countess Justina of Belgravia and her party and it is love at first sight. A down-and-out theatrical manager seizes the chance and easily sells Buck the idea of taking a wild west show to Europe. The party reaches Belgravia in time for the wedding of the countess to a haughty duke who is secretly the leader of a band of bandits. Buck stages a show and kidnaps the countess taking her to a castle where he fights the bandits until his horse White Eagle escapes and brings the boys to his rescue. So as not to disappoint the guests the Countess suggests that she and Buck return for the wedding ceremony.

In the early scenes there is some good typical western stuff such as fine horsemanship and bull-dogging and Buck gives a fine rope exhibition at the wedding feast. There are amusing comedy touches all the way through and good romantic atmosphere that makes this picture thoroughly entertaining. Especially "peppy" is the sequence where Buck holds the gang at bay with a fine display of athletic stunts climbing all over the spacious castle interior and jumping on his foes and escaping from them by means of his agility, in the manner of Douglas Fairbanks or Richard Talmadge. His fans will like this.

"The Cowboy and the Countess" gets away from the usual run and the story is sufficiently interesting to hold the attention throughout and make it a good picture for the masses. Buck Jones, as usual, does fine work and his support is thoroughly capable.

Breymaier Made Head of Van Curler

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

FRANK X. BREYMAIER, lacking but a single year of rounding out a full quarter of a century in the show business, with many years as manager of various motion picture theatres in Schenectady and Amsterdam, has been advanced a notch, the reward of faithfulness. Mr. Breymaier has been named as manager of the Van Curler Theatre in Schenectady, acquired a couple of weeks ago by W. W. Farley, of Albany, owner of many theatres in Schenectady, Catskill and Yonkers. For the past several months, Mr. Breymaier has been handling the Barcli in Schenectady, one of the Farley houses, and his work there, as well as with other houses, made Mr. Farley's decision an easy one, before he left with his family for Miami. While Mr. Breymaier will probably look after the affairs of the Barcli, as well as the Van Curler, for a short time, it is expected that someone will shortly be named to handle the Barcli, but Mr. Breymaier will continue to look after all advertising and exploitation for the five houses operated by Mr. Farley in the Electric City.

Mr. Breymaier's beginning goes back to 1902, when the Orpheum was opened in Schenectady, and he was named as its manager. Later on Mr. Breymaier handled theatres for John J. Walker and then went to Amsterdam, where he had charge of four houses. He is an old-timer in the business, who knows every twist and turn, and whose career has been marked with success. He succeeds A. J. Rochell, who has been transferred from the Van Curler by the Berinstein brothers, former lessees of the house, to Elmira, where he will handle the Majestic Theatre.

"Cute—but Costly"

Ted O'Shea, formerly of Buffalo, now manager of the Metro-Goldwyn exchange in Albany, N. Y., has a very precocious five-year-old son. The boy's precociousness, however, set his dad back a matter of $5.50 last week. While Mrs. O'Shea was at a neighboring drug store, the boy, who had often called his father on the telephone, conceived the idea of calling Mr. O'Shea's sister in Buffalo.

The call went through without any delay and then the boy, waking up his two-year-old brother, brought him to the telephone in order that he might also say hello. The costly conversation at the rate of about two dollars for each hello, quickly ended when Mrs. O'Shea entered the house and found out what was going on.

"Cute, but costly," remarked Mr. O'Shea, when his wife told him of the incident.

Coal Shortage Hits Exchanges

Special Dispatch to M. P. World

Several of the exchanges in Albany, N. Y., are rather hard hit these days by the long coal strike, and are resorting to all sorts of means to obtain heat. On one day last week, at least one exchange was practically idle during the entire morning, the quarters being without heat, and the young women being obliged to sit around in heavy fur coats and overshoes.

At another exchange, the manager, disgusted, spent the morning visiting the manager of another where there was coal at least sufficient to take off the chill. One other exchange managed to secure a quantity of soft coal, but so much gas was generated that the force of employees sat around with handkerchiefs over their nostrils. Coke was later substituted for the soft coal.

Amend Ordinance to Erect New Theatre

BECAUSE of the Rochester city ordinance prohibiting construction of a theatre within 50 feet of a church, school, hospital or orphan asylum, an amendment has been enacted by the common council of the city permitting the Monument Theatre Corporation of Buffalo in association with the Fennyvessy interests of Rochester to erect a theatre at Clinton avenue south and Court street in that city. The First Unitarian Church at Cortland and Temple streets is directly in the rear of the building and within 50 feet. By amending the ordinance to 30 feet no difficulty will be had by the theatre syndicate. Martin B. O'Neil, president of the council, said that the ordinance was not intended to interfere with the construction of theatres in the downtown section near churches.

Pastors Pass Resolution Favoring Pictures

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

THE well-defined line of demarcation between the movies and the churches which exists in some portions of Ohio has been obliterated insofar as the Episcopal Church, Diocese of Southern Ohio, is concerned. At a convention of Episcopalian clergymen and laymen held at Springfield, Ohio, recently, the assembly went on record in favor of good motion pictures, by a vote of 57 to 31.

The resolution adopted by the Bishop and Chapter, and proposed by Rev. Thos. Williamson, of Middletown, Ohio, is as follows.

"Resolved, That the convention go on record as seconding the efforts now being made to secure for the nation and the world wholesome motion pictures, including the efforts of the Federal Motion Pictures Council in America, Inc., and that the individual members in their own parishes do all in their power to stimulate by word and action a wise choice in motion pictures."

Approval of good pictures will be signified by attendance and disapproval of those not up to standard by the remaining away of the clergy and laity who compose the chapter.

"Guess Who" Stunt Has Invaded Detroit

THE "guess who" exploitation germ has invaded Detroit first run theatres with a vengeance. The Kunsky theatres, in cooperation with a local newspaper are staging a screen stunt based on the identification of masked players, while the Fox-Washington is doing practically the same thing on its own initiative.

BUTTERFIELD ADDS ANOTHER THEATRE

Another theatre has been added to the chain of Butterfield theatres in Michigan through the acquisition of the Idlehour at Grand Rapids. For many years this house, a small downtown "drop-in" has been operated by J. W. Goodspeed. This gives the Butterfield enterprises six theatres in Grand Rapids, all the result of an invasion that started only a year ago.

PREPARING PLANS FOR NEW THEATRE

Architects are preparing plans for a new theatre to be erected on Hamilton Bulevard near Seward street. The name of the owner is withheld, but it is known to be planned for a large seating capacity.

BROADWAY LADY. Star, Evelyn Brent. Quite different from her usual style of crook pictures in which she makes quite a hit. First National

CHICKIE. (7,000 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. A fair picture on the sex order but cost too much for small exhibitors, therefore, First National gets it all. OUR GANG

CHICKIE. 7,000 feet). Star, Dorothy Mackaill. Drew well on account of newspaper serial advertising. Not a special as I have seen better pictures of this nature than "Chickie" was. Use your own judgment if you cater to a family trade. Tone, spicy. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, sixty percent. High class and family trade town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

DESERT FLOWER. (6,837 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. This lovely little star generally draws well for us but she treated us to a reguar box office flop on this one. Not bad, but somehow they did not care to see it and those who came did not enthuse. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

GOLD FISH. (7,145 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Have seen reports that this picture was no good, but will say it sure pleased here. Call it a good one as bad boys and men say it was good, and usually they don't like anything but westerns. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

HALF WAY GIRL. (7,520 feet). Star, Doris Kenyon. Splendid acting all through the picture, the sea scenes and ship wreck exceptionally good. Should please any audience. Tone and appeal, good. LOST WORLD. (9,700 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Truly a wonderful picture. Animals are great. Comments on same very satisfactory. Advertise it and clean up, business good in a town of tnis size. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

Book it as it is different from the majority. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvedere, New Jersey.

MEANEST MAN IN THE WORLD. (6,500 feet). Star cast. Only pleased about fifty per cent here. Men and boys will not like it, but ladies will. Advertising is misleading. Tone, none. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. Country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

MY SON. Star, Nazimova. A wonderful story of mother love, ably enacted by Nazimova and a great supporting cast including Jack Pickford, Constance Bennett, and Charlie Murray, who is a scream. Extra good, I would judge this one. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SHORE LEAVE. (6,856 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Slow, moving picture. Everyone seemed to be expecting action in this and were sadly disappointed. Picture far inferior to "Classmates" and patrons weren't slow in telling us that this was a poor effort for Dick. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes, here. Special, not here. Appeal, fifty percent. Mixed class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SO BIG. (8,562 feet). Star, Colleen Moore Colleen is a fine actress, but her flapper pictures do better business, stick to them, Colleen. Had many good comments but not your type. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Business class and farmers town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

SOUL FIRE. (8,262 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Our patrons did not like this one very much. The feature was too long and drawn out. Majority were disappointed. Tone, fair. SOUL FIRE. (8,262 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Terrible, terrible stuff. Poor Dick! Why will he work in such "stories," nothing but nine reels of slush and kissing. Terrible! Poor tone. Sunday and special, no. No appeal. Family class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

THE SPLENDID ROAD. Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. We didn't know anything about this one until after the first show and will say it is one of the best of its kind, namely that of the days of forty-nine but with so many different new twists and thrills it is way above the hackneyed class of westerns. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre, Pocahontas, Iowa.

UNGUARDED HOUR. (7 reels). Star, Milton Sills. The best we could give this would be to call it a fair program picture. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, South Dakota.

WE MODERNS. (6,655 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Very sorry, Colleen, but we can't help but think you slipped a little in this one which was not so much your fault as it was the story which was very light. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, South Dakota.

WHY MEN LEAVE HOME. (8 reels). Star cast. Here is a good clean comedy spoiled with a sensational title. Decent people wouldn't come to see it after reading the title and seeing our slide on the screen. Those who did come were disappointed. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, fifty percent. Small town class town of 350. Admission 10-35. Nelson & Ottem, Rex Theatre (140 seats), Osnabrock, North Dakota.

Fox

BEST BAD MAN. (4,893 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A great Mix picture that did great business. Liked by all. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

CYCLONE RIDER. (6,672 feet). Star, Reed Howes. This picture has more thrills than any I've seen for a long time. If your patrons are sick of sex pictures, this one is great for a change. The colored comedians are just wonderful. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. High class and family trade town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Mass.

DESERT'S PRICE. Star, Buck Jones. A good western with plenty of action. Better than Jones' pictures have been for a long time. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

DICK TURPIN. (5,224 feet). Star, Tom Mix. While this picture is good it would have saved Mix if O'Brien would have taken his part, although Mix is good he does not fit in this kind of a picture. Print fair. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eight per cent. All classes. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

EVERYMAN'S WIFE. Star cast. One of Fox's super specials and nothing but a common program picture. A good comedy or other short subject will pull it through. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

THE FOOL. Star, Edmund Lowe. You ough to play this one if you lose money on it. It was a perfect Christmas attraction for us. Oh! for six a year like this. Tone, great. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats). Jonesboro, Arkansas.

GERALD CRANSTON'S LADY. Star cast. Not a super special as Fox claims for it but a very good program picture. Do not pay too much for it. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre, Hughesville, Pa.

GERALD CRANSTON'S LADY. Star, James Kirkwood. About as good a show as you could wish for with many liberties taken of the Gilbert Frankau story. Maybe the picture is better than the book. Some stirring stuff with as rotten a title as could be wished on it. Tone, not so good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pa.

GREATER THAN A CROWN. Star, Edmund Lowe. A weak program picture that will have to have some good short stuff to pull it through. No tone. Sunday and special, no. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

HEARTS AND SPURS. (5 reels). Star, Buck Jones. Mighty good. Everybody liked it. Several cute stunts. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. Business class and farmers town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

IRON HORSE. Star, George O'Brien. My opinion best picture this season. Can't go too strong with this one. Pleases one hundred percent. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

IRON HORSE. Star cast. One of the finest pictures I ever ran. Saw the opening in New York over a year ago and have viewed it twice during the present run and still say that it is the best of the western features we have had. Fox failed to sell the public on this and I doubt if any exhibitor can make money on it. If it had been handled as "Covered Wagon" was it would have been a big success. You simply can't break records with this despite it's fine. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

KENTUCKY PRIDE. Star cast. As the title suggests it is of the Southern Kentucky Derby class. Although we have seen it in many forms this one is, however, very good. A nice story is told throughout. Good races with nice clean photography. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Theatre (250 seats), Union, Maine.

KENTUCKY PRIDE. Star cast. This is what I call a very good small town picture. Has a good story, good characters, two or three good races. Comedy, fine shots of horses, nice scenery, and most everyone will like it. Tone and appeal, good. Special, no. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

KENTUCKY PRIDE. (6,597 feet). Star cast. Owing to the poor reports the Fox productions have been receiving we were beginning to believe we had got "stung" again on this company's pictures but if this is a fair sample of what they are going to give us "we should worry." A splendid production for any theatre, for any class of people any day in the week. We used this on Friday and Saturday but would make an excellent Sunday offering. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, South Dakota.

KENTUCKY PRIDE. Star cast. Another good one from Fox. Some wonderful horse race scenes in this one. Shows many of the well known American horses. Poor weather spoiled my attendance, but everyone present enjoyed it. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

LAZYBONES. Star, Buck Jones. This picture is entirely different from the regulation Buck Jones productions and has to do with an easy going lazy fellow with small town atmosphere. Buck registers a fine character sketch which fairly radiates sympathy and human interest and does him great credit. The story has great appeal and the supporting cast is excellent. Draw from tourist class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

THE MAN WHO CAME BACK. (8,272 ft.). Star, George O'Brien. Wife and I were disappointed in this picture. Not much action and very little comedy. We were surprised to hear that so many of our Friday and Saturday night crowd liked it. Guess it was a change from Westerns. No one walked out on this picture. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal seventy-five percent. Town and farm class town of 900. Admission 10-25-35. Oren J. Spalti, Strand Theatre (235 seats), Pleasantville, Iowa.

MAN WHO CAME BACK. (8,272 feet). Star, George O'Brien. Very good picture. Played "family" nite by admitting every young man and young woman for fifteen cents if accompanied by either parent. You can't go wrong on this if you boost it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. High class and family trade town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

MAN WHO PLAYED SQUARE. (6,700 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A fine show pleased almost everybody. The comedian was great. Some said it was the best show they had seen for months. Our patrons like some comedy and lots of action in all features. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Extra good appeal. Country class town of 900. Admission 10-25. Orew J. Spalti, Strand Theatre (235 seats), Pleasantville, Iowa.

RAINBOW TRAIL. (5,251 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A fitting sequel to "Riders of Purple Sage." A very good picture. Mix fine as usual. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Great appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE. (5,578 feet). Star, Tom Mix. First Mix played here to a good business. Picture very good. Some of my patrons are still wondering where Tom got all the strength to push that big "rock" over the cliff in the last reel, when he annihilated his enemies. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal,

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE. (5,578 ft). Star, Tom Mix. This was very good. Fine scenery, good story, plenty of action. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Business and farmer class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE. (6 reels). Star, Tom Mix. I've heard more talk about this picture before playing it than after. Seemed satisfactory to the Mix followers and all the rest of the Western fans. Sunday, no. Miners and farmers town of 1,500. Admission 10-20, 15-30. A. Catalano, Victory Theatre (200 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

THUNDER MOUNTAIN. (7,500 feet). Star, Madge Bellamy. A good picture for any night in the week, including Sunday. The entire cast does good work. Ran this a week before Christmas, when money was tight. Tone, very good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

WHEN THE DOOR OPENED. Star cast. A beautiful action picture produced on a big scale. Thrilling flood scenes and a great cast. A picture that will boost your house. Tone, okay. Appeal, ninety percent. Mixed class town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. A. M. Rosenbloom, Home Theatre (350 seats), Rochester, Pennsylvania.

Metro-Goldwyn

DADDY'S GONE A HUNTING. (5,831 ft.). Star, Percy Marmont. A human pathos picture that should appeal to all classes, the title is bum but gets them in through good advertising and they will be more than satisfied. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five percent. All classes. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pa.

GO WEST. (6,256 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Can't be compared with "Seven Chances." The last two reels are better more action, but before that it is just fair. Neighborhood class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

GO WEST. (6,256 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. This is a "dandy" comedy, chock full of laughs and will please especially anyone liking westerns. Bill this picture right and it will bring you the biz. We were given a price that enabed us to make a little profit. Tone, okay. Suitable for any day. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety percent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30, regular. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Gloverdale, California.

MAN AND MAID. (8,307 feet). Star, Lew Cody. Considering the fact that Elinor Glyn wrote the story and that the title is rank, you many have to work heal hard to get a house. The show is not quite as suggestive as the vampire makes her books but is not a fine picture. Some scenes particularly the war scenes are great. Tone, risque. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

MERRY WIDOW. (10,027 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Personally thought it one of the best pictures in two years, but patrons about fifty-fifty for it. Would have done a big business but weather freezing. All classes. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

MIDSHIPMAN. (7,498 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. Oh boy! this is a corker. Novarro better than ever. Real comedy throughout. Advertise it good and you won't be sorry. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Great appeal. Neighborhood class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

RAG MAN. (5,908 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Not his best, will get through being Coogan, if your audience likes Coogan give them this, but don't boost it as they will be disappointed. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. All classes. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

THE RAG MAN. (5,908 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. A fair picture, nothing to rave about. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Mixed class town of 1,800. Admission 10-20. A. J. Masters, Columbus Theatre (200 seats), Lowellville, Ohio.

RAG MAN. (5,908 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. This is in my opinion the best picture that this star ever made. His costume stuff just before this one nearly ruined Coogan for me. He is outgrowing his part. Excellent tone. Sunday, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. All classes town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Onida Theatre (225 seats), Onida, South Dakota.

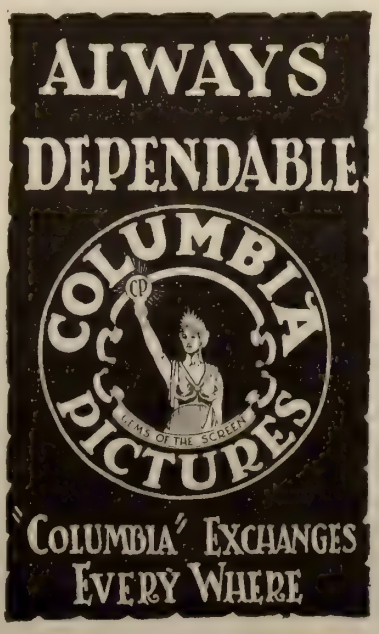
SILENT ACCUSER. (6 reels). Star, Peter the Great (dog). Most of the patrons enjoyed it. The dog sure does the acting. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed class town of 1,800. Admission 10-20. A. J. Masters, Columbus Theatre (200 seats), Lowellville, Ohio.

Carl's Complete Service a Life-Saver

"Have been using Universal's 'Complete Contract' Service for almost three months and am convinced that it is the best thing that the small town exhibitor could do.

"It enables me to run three and four nights a week instead of one, which was formerly the case (and then barely made expenses!) whereas now I am able to show a little profit.

"The short subject program (about which I was a little dubious) has proved a great success. I show this program on Wednesday and my patrons are greatly pleased with it. Town of 500, farming community. Admission, Wednesday, 10-15; Sunday, 10-25. George Fleischman, Paramount Theatre, La Jara, Colorado.



Paramount

DANGEROUS MONEY. 6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. This pleased our New Year's crowd at a free show. We were given this show by the courtesy of the Wilkesbarre manager, Mr. Myers, and we were pleased with it. Tone, good. Not a special. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

IN THE NAME OF LOVE. (5,904 feet). Star, Marguerite de la Motte. A very good production which pleased our people but did not draw which we believe largely due to the poor title. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, South Dakota.

IRISH LUCK. (7,008 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. One of his best pictures and with Lois Wilson it has a good box office value. The story is very good and the kind of picture that pleases the crowd. He plays a dual part which is well handled and adds interest to the picture. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Small town class town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

KISS FOR CINDERELLA. (9,621 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Betty is ruining her following by appearing in such as this. Twenty-five walkouts and the word passed along to some hundred and fifty in line at box office window for a second performance so we lost heavily. Maybe we are dumb but we have yet to see an audience anywhere that can appreciate English humor and especially when combined with a fairy tale that doesn't mean a thing. Mr. Sewell gives this an excellent review but he doesn't take into consideration the fact that ninety-nine people out of every hundred don't care for this sort of fairy tale stuff; it's the exhibitor who pays and pays for its the little hole in the box office window that supports the film industry and the producers have already got their express collect. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, twenty percent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

NEW LIVES FOR OLD. (6,796 feet). Star, Betyy Compson. A first class production. Good music will help a lot. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Farmers and small town class town of 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

"Before Taking" His "Iron"—

"Van—and 'Gang'—Things are very quiet here in the theatre line. Mills and factories are mostly closed down and everyone is squeezing the Eagle until you can hear his cries of distress.

"I am playing 'The Iron Horse' for one week at the admission price of fifteen and thirty-five cents (three houses). To the best of my knowledge I am the second in the State of Maine to play this production. It looks like a case of 'survive or perish'; will say how I come out for I believe there are still some small town men who'd like a slant on this production.

"MY ADVERTISING CARRIES THE FOLLOWING: 'To any patron who, after viewing "The Iron Horse" is dissatisfied, the price of admission will be cheerfully refunded.'

"So long until my fate is announced." E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit, Union, Maine."

OLD HOME WEEK. (6,780 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Didn't go over. Nothing remarkable and did not please all. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. Factory and farm class town of 5,000. Admission 10-20-30. G. J. Kamm, Grand Theatre (800 seats), Ephrata, Pennsylvania.

Pathe

BLACK CYCLONE. Star, Rex (horse). All horse. Not nearly as good as "King of Wild Horses." Not as good a story. Fair picture but once is plenty to see it and some didn't see it that often. Made almost thirteen dollars in three days' showing. Tone, good Sunday, yes. I don't think it suitable for special. Just average appeal. Farmers and business class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

BEYOND THE BORDER. Star, Harry Carey. A good western program picture especially good for Saturday. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 feet). Star, Syd Chaplin. As good as reported. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. Farmers and small town class town of 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

COMING OF AMOS. Star cast. We ran this one first in state and will say it is great. The wise ones will buy Producers and step on them, they are winners. Rod LaRocque made a great hit. Why worry about Paramount when you can get such pictures as Cecil B. DeMille is now making. All I can say I am for better production and it seems here is one company who is doing it. G. A. Peterson, Cozy Theatre, Hollis, Oklahoma.

MAN FROM GLENGARRY. Star, Pauline Garon. Good picture, many favorable comments on logging scenes. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Farmers and laboring class town of 350. Admission 10-25. Ed. F. Cox, Princess Theatre (400 seats), Bristol, Colorado.

RECKLESS ROMANCE. Star cast. A good comedy cast including Wanda Hawley, T. Roy Barnes, Harry Myers, and Jack Duffy, furnish laughs enough to make this a suitable Laugh Month picture for every month in the year. Story is interesting and characters are well portrayed, especially Duffy as Grandpa. Suitable for Sunday but not a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

TEXAS TRAIL. Star, Harry Carey. Fine. Everybody liked it. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Farmers and business class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

TEXAS TRAIL. Star, Harry Carey. This is a fair Carey subject which can be run as an ordinary program feature and will please the type who like westerns. Good Saturday feature. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

United Artists

GOLD RUSH. (6,525 ft.). Star, Charlie Chaplin. Consider this a real picture, regardless of so many poor reports from other exhibitors, who could not give it much because they bought it too high. It seemed to please most of our patrons. Thos that were disappointed were the ones that expected to see Charley in his old style comedy. Some said it was better than "The Freshman." Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, 85 per cent. Town and farm community, town of 900. Admission 10-25-35. Oren J. Spalti, Strand Theatre (235 seats), Pleasantville, Iowa.

GOLD RUSH. (6,525 ft.). Star, Charlie Chaplin. Fair program picture. Nothing to rave about. If you can buy it and not raise admission, okay. Mixed class. K. M. Murray, Chino Theatre, Hurley, New Mexico.

LITTLE ANNIE ROONEY. (8,900 ft.). Star, Mary Pickford. This is a sweet little picture and not so little either, as it is ten reels. The crowd liked this a lot. I don't think it is as good as a lot of her's, but no one can complain, because a picture is only as good as her average, as that makes it worth three ordinary average pictures. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Small town class, town of 3,200. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

Universal

FAST WORKER. (6,500 ft.). Star, Reginald Denny. Good comedy entertainment, but nothing to rave over. We were led to believe it was wonderful. Had a fair crowd. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Fair appeal. Business class and farmers, town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

GOOSE WOMAN. Star cast. A great picture. Acting is the best seen this year. Fair business. General class, city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

HIS PEOPLE. Star, Rudolph Schildkraut. Uncle Carl has sure been putting out real pictures this year, but here is one that is all and even more than the critics claim it is; in fact it is just about the best ons that I ever saw. It is called a jewel and it is one. After looking over what I have written above I see that it falls away short of describing this wonderful picture; in fact even a high-powered press agent cannot do this picture justice. All I can say is, Van, go see it yourself. I had patrons who sat through two shows and would have stayed and seen it again, but I ran them out. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre 200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 reels). Star, Lon Chaney. A wonderful picture of the kind, but will not please over 50 per cent in small towns. Had bad weather here. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, 50 per cent. Country class, town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denny, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

I'LL SHOW YOU THE TOWN. (7,400 ft.). Star, Reginald Denny. A great comedy. Liked by all who saw it. Somehow or other we can't get the masses in to see Denny. General class, city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

"K" THE UNKNOWN. (8,146 ft.). Star, Virginia Valli. It should please the majority. However, did not draw for me and lost money. Not the picture's fault, to my judgment. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Miners and farmers, town of 1,500. Admission 15-30, 10-20. A. Catalano, Victory Theatre (200 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

LET 'ER BUCK. Star, Hoot Gibson. Showed on Saturday to the usual Saturday audience. Seemed to please the kids better than the grown-ups. No comments. Miners and farmers, town of 1,500. Admission 15-30, 10-20. A. Catalano, Victory Theatre (200 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

LET 'ER BUCK. Star, Hoot Gibson. This is a very pleasing picture with a better story than most westerns, and through the Pendelton round-up, tie-up, it has a big drawing power. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

OH DOCTOR. (6,507 ft). Star, Reginald Denny. A corking good comedy that pleased everyone and did a fair business. A few more like this and Denny will have arrived. Clever, interesting, funny. What more can you want. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. High appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

OUTLAW'S DAUGHTER. Star, Josie Sedgwick. Good western picture. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred percent. Phillipson Brothers, Opera House, Argule, Wisconsin.

PHANTOM OF THE OPERA. (11 reels). Star, Lon Chaney. Made on a big scale. Men will like it fairly well but the women came out shivering the first night and very few ever came back. Not a woman on its third night's run. Horrible make of Lon Chaney almost drove them out of town and too, I spent ninety dollars to advertise. W. E. Fields, Rylander Theatre, Americus, Ga.

RAFFLES. Star, House Peters. Just a long drawn out program picture that got by and that is all. You can't make money on this type of picture, but it is merely a fill in for an off day. Don't waste time and money trying to get people to see this. Run it and say little about it. Special, no. Appeal, sixty-five per cent. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

SADDLE HAWK. Star, Hoot Gibson. Gibson always draws here. I did not go out to advertise it as I played it on December 26, one day. Used one three, two ones and photos. Get behind it and advertise. Sunday, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed class town of 1,800. Admission 10-20. A. J. Masters, Columbia Theatre (200 seats), Lowellville, Ohio.

SADDLE HAWK. (4,419 ft.) Star, Hoot Gibson. Just what you expect of this star a darn good picture and he packed 'em in. Nuf sed. Print good. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Very good appeal. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

STORM BREAKER. Star, House Peters. A very good picture. Thanks to Universal for complete service contract just the thing for small town exhibitors. Tone, good. Appeal, ninety percent. Farmers and business class town of 530. Goodrich Brothers, Strand Theatre (175 seats), Callao, Missouri.

Vitagraph

BORROWED HUSBANDS. Star, Florence Vidor. Her husband goes to South America and she borrows all her women friends' husbands in turn and gets in a mix-up. Not such a rip-snorting good show and nothing distinguished except Miss Vidor's performance. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 10-30. H. W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

FALSE TRAILS. Star, Pete Morrison. This fellow is always good but prints bad and if you can get a good print, why, it will be okay. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

Warner Bros.

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED. Star cast. Not as good as expected, but have seen worse. Tone, none. Sunday and special, no. Oil class and farmers town of 250. Admission 10-15. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (350 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

BELOW THE LINE. (6,083 ft.) Star, Rin-Tin-Tin (dog). A fine dog picture, in fact, of all dog pictures we have ever played Rin-Tin-Tin's stand out first as the best. Excellent print, good direction, and a cast that was well nigh perfect. Charlie Conklin's comedy had them laughing whenever he appeared. His work is always fine. Rest of cast did good work, too. Tone, okay here. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Strong appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BELOW THE LINE. (6,063 ft.) Star, Rin-Tin-Tin (dog). Splendid picture and a wonderful dog that did a fine business. W. E. Field, Rylander Theatre, Americus, Georgia.

RECOMPENSE. Star, Monte Blue. Good. Run it, a sequel to "Simon, Called Peter." Can be run one week in any town, worth showing, no vulgarity in this, at least it isn't in this state. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. One hundred per cent appeal. All classes. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

WIFE WHO WASN'T WANTED. (6,858 ft.) Star cast. There is consideriable drawing power in the title but it proved to be nothing more than a good program picture. W. E. Fields, Rylander Theatre, Americus, Georgia.

Independents

AMBUSHED. (State Right). Star, Bob Reeves. A fair western, nothing to get excited about, but will do. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

CALIFORNIA IN 49. (Progress Pictures). Star cast. Heard more kicks on this one than any we have played lately. Town and country class town of 5,000. Admission 10-25. W. F. Jones, Criterion Theatre (300 seats), Frederick, Oklahoma.

FIGHT FOR HONOR. (State Right). Star, Eva Novak. One of the most pleasing little pictures I ever played. A welcome surprise. Full of thrills and action. Can be bought for a song and if you can get them in they'll like it. Some have hardly caught their breath yet over those hair-raising stunts. Went over big. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Farmers and laboring class town of 350 . Admission 10-25. Ed. F. Cox, Princess Theatre (400 seats), Bristol, Colorado.

FULL SPEED. (Weiss Brothers). Star, Buddy Roosevelt. Not up to Roosevelt's standard of full action pictures, but it will pass in the smaller house. Print fair. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. All classes. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

GOAT GETTER. (Independent Pictures). Star, Billy Sullivan. A money loser for us, wasted two good days with it. Town and country class town of 5,000. Admission 10-25. W. F. Jones, Criterion Theatre (300 seats), Frederick, Oklahoma.

HEARTS AND FISTS. (State Right). Star, Marguerite DeLaMotte. Equalled some of the best super features. A real lumber story that will please. Book "Hearts and Fists," a he-man story of the Northwest, by Clarence Buddington Kelland from the American Magazine. General class. George Greenlund, Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, Washington.

KNOCKOUT KID. (Rayart). Star, Jack Perrin. Fair western comedy, Perrin supported by a good cast. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Neighborhood class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

LYING WIVES. (Ivan). I didn't expect this one to go so good. It surprised me. True to life story. Real all star cast. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Neighborhood class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

MAN FROM GOD'S COUNTRY. (State Right). Star, Bill Fairbanks. Just an every day western with plenty of action, but those are the kind that go over for me. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (167 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

PAYING THE PRICE. (Lee-Bradford). Star, Jean Leslie. This looked to me to be a foreign made production, anyhow it was no good. I believe it's an old picture, too. Special, no. Neighborhood class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponstant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

PRIDE OF SUNSHINE ALLEY (Barsky). Star, Kenneth McDonald. Very good melodrama, action and comedy aplenty. McDonald looks great as a policeman. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Neighborhood class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

After Taking—Was "Iron" a Tonic?

"WELL, Gang, after a two-day run in each of my three houses, with 'The Iron Horse' I hand you the following report, both from my point of view, also from that of the audience:

"I've told you what my advertising carried—offering to refund patrons' admission (15-35) if they were dissatisfied.

"After a six-day run to 'all' (or general class) patronage, WITHOUT A DEMAND FOR ADMISSION REFUND—this, in my opinion, is placing a feature in the hundred per cent. class for entertainment!

"Quite a few told me it was one of the finest things they had ever seen and when I tell you these people have 'lamped' the finest of productions it looks like a bull's-eye. I have yet to learn of a patron who did not like it.

"You should not judge that your people will eat this up as did people here, on my say-so (for you may have different taste to cater to) but I believe I am safe in saying that if you were successful with 'The Covered Wagon' you will also be successful with 'The Iron Horse,' for it is a big, splendid picture from every angle." The Note Book

RECENTLY I attended the opening of "The Love City," a drama in three acts featuring Sessue Hayakawa, the well known Japanese actor of the silver sheet. It was a source of gratification, in spite of the drab performance, to note the type of setting or scenic treatment given the play, which was along the lines of the new art as advanced and produced by the best motion picture theatres. The first act was a fabric set, the walls, ceiling, backings all of fabrics of metalline material hung in heavy folds forming the outlines of the room. There was an opening up right leading out onto a balcony which overlooked the sea. There was a curtained alcove at extreme left in which a "joss" was placed, and the lighting was very colorful, particularly arranged to highlight the folds and emphasize the fabrics. The second act was introduced with a series of printed scrims, one a Chinese street, another a London scene, and when the second act was disclosed after the scrims had been taken away, large panelled interior of painted flats and draped columns were introduced. The lighting was particularly indicative of the motion picture houses, and the producers are to be congratulated for sponsoring this type of scene and treatment. A "scenic overture" or atmospheric curtain preceded each act. This was a painted sea with a moon done in Chinese style on a metalline surface, with a black grand drapery and tormentors bearing a Chinese dragon design in gold. These were flooded first a green and a blue, then a red, then back to green prior to the rise of the curtain.

LAST week we ran a little box announcement in which we emphasized that this department was a service bureau. It has always been that since its inception but there are a lot of folks who haven't realized it. We have systematized our information on materials, etc., in a manner to render the maximum of service to our readers, and we have concrete evidence that we have been able to save much by showing our readers the short cuts, giving them information they could depend upon, and helping them to eliminate the non-servicable merchants. Why experiment? We can help you greatly. Tell us your troubles if you have any. Let us assist you in solving your problems and we can assure you that we will give out honest attention to your needs regardless as to how large or small they may be. I suggest that you address your inquiries to me direct.

OSEPH PLUNKETT, managing director and impressario of the New York Mark Strand, is so encouraged over the favorable reception and receipts of his "Frolics" that he has decided to make them a regular feature of his programs "everything new—every week."

The News Galley

PUBLIC BOOKING OFFICE

WE are in receipt of a communication announcing the inauguration of a general booking office for attractions which will play the F. P. and B. & K. under the Publix banner. It is expected that the office will be in full swing within a couple of weeks with Herschel Stuart as supervising head. Earle Saunders has been engaged to assume charge of the booking activities at least on a temporary basis until the organization has been perfected. The office, according to present plans, will have a Times Square address.

NOVELTY STAGE, CHICAGO HOUSE

AVERY adequate stage is being designed for the new Oriental Theatre, a B. & K. house, Chicago. The stage which will approximately cost within six figures, will be one of three of its kind in existence. The stage will be capable of rising about ten feet from the normal level and may be lowered to the basement. It will consist of four sections and will be constructed to permit its moving about in any way that the producer desires. This arrangement will make it possible for four stage settings to be made at the same time.

BAER FORMING MIAMI ORCHESTRA

EMANUEL BAER, formerly director at the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, New York City, has been engaged by the management of the Olympia Theatre, Miami, to supervise the organization and to conduct the orchestra for the new theatre which is to be opened within a few weeks. The organization will comprise about thirty musicians, most of whom will be selected from the Miami local.

MILWAUKEE MAYOR IN PRESENTATION

AN innovation was wrought in the production of the Old Family Album, a clever presentation at the Wisconsin Theatre, Milwaukee, when the Mayor of the city, the Hon. Daniel W. Hohn, appeared as a character in the presentation at all performances. The presentation itself which recalled many of the old features of the city was given an added impetus by the appearance of the Mayor who used this as a means to promote his program for the observation of the Eightieth Anniversary of the city.

ASH HITS 1,000

PAUL ASH, who has demonstrated what a symphonic jazz orchestra can do provided it has a conductor with brains, showmanship and personality, has just celebrated his 1,000th show at McVicker's Theatre. Ash is not only the hit of Chicago, but his style is the talk of the show business.

The Mail Bag

THE CAPITOL THEATRE, New York City, which has been adhering to a strict presentation policy in spite of the influx of jazzical revues, submits three comments relative to its policy, which we are glad to publish:

VARIETY SAYS: "There has been nothing hectic about a Capitol show for some time. That is to say, the performances here have been conspicuous through the absence of jazz music, Charleston or acrobatic dancing. The result is a restful performance. And that this theatre is drawing and pleasing under such a campaign is undoubted. It's simply a matter of being entertained minus the 'hey, heys,' and 'hot music.'"

O. O. McINTYRE (Celebrated Columnist) Says: "I believe the Capitol Theatre, the largest movie house in the world, offers more amusement than any institution in New York. . . It also stages ballets and surprisingly good vocal numbers. The attendants are courteous and the whole atmosphere is one of refinement."

FILM BULLETIN SAYS: "The Capitol is well known all over the country for the high type of musical entertainment it offers each week, and with the spirit of jazz invading the sacred precincts of Carnegie Hall, Major Edward Bowes is being congratulated by prominent musicians and music lovers for continuing to present the music of great composers in the motion picture theatre."

A Prologue to "The Sea Beast"

Specially Devised for WARNER BROS. by COLBY HARRIMAN

(A Prologue or Presentation for New Feature Pictures Published Each Week)

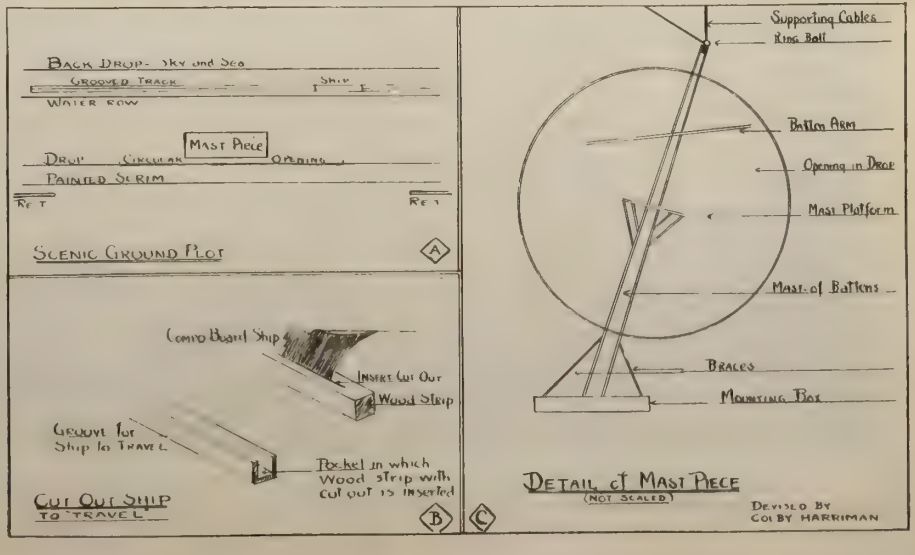
"THE SEA BEAST" is one of those pictures which need little in the way of surrounding program features. With the drawing power of John Barrymore and the superabundance of favorable press comment anent Dolores Costello combined with a good sea story when "sailors were sailors and whales were whales," a limited program is sufficient for any house.

In analyzing the picture from an audience angle rather than in the chilliness of a pre-view room, we believe that a prologue, atmospheric in its introduction and constructed to introduce the theme music of chantrys, is the ideal and necessary treatment. It is with this purpose in mind we devised this prologue to serve as a link between the overture and the feature picture.

The Overture should be one of those compositions indicative of the sea such as "Plymouth Hoe" (Ansell); "Prelude to 'Romances of the Seven Seas'" (Baron); "Before the Mast" (a March by Laurendeau); "the Third Movement of 'the Second Peer Gynt Suite'" (Grieg), or "Life on the Ocean," a selection on nautical airs by Binding. Or, it may be a medley of sea songs such as Herman Heller, director of Warners Theatre, New York City, has arranged in most commendable fashion for the orchestral feature attendant to the Metropolitan showing of this picture. Towards the last movement of the overture it is suggested that house lights be dimmed, closein curtains be slowly drawn revealing the scene as indicated in Plate 1 of the accompanying sketches. The treatment accorded this "scenic overture" will be given hereafter, but it is the link between the music and the prologue which introduces the chantrys, especially the one used in the picture "We Are Hanging Johnny." If the audience has been introduced to this lilting tune it will appreciate to a greater degree the scenes in the early part of the picture in which this theme is used, rather than wait for the second introduction. The prologue suggestion we are giving is effective for this particular picture, very simple to construct, and can be produced inexpensively.

DESIGN for PAINTED SCRIM ①

DESIGN for SET PIECE and PAINTED DROP. ②



THE SETTING

The principal units comprising the set and detailed under the various headings are (a) Painted Scrim; (b) Cut Drop; (c) Mast Piece; (d) Water Row; (e) Cutout Ship; (f) Back Drop.

(a) Painted Scrim

This scrim should be hung at the curtain line and be given a scenic treatment similar to the design indicated in the sketch marked Plate 1. White sailed ships on a green-blue sea. Here and there white crested waves, a deep blue sky with a huge orange amber setting sun. The batten in the pocket of the scrim should be fastened to the floor with the top batten drawn tight to eliminate any sagging of the scrim. If an artist is not available a very desirable effect can be secured by having a slide made of similar design, and projected from front on the plain scrim.

(b) Cut Drop

A drop, opaqued, with a large circular opening is hung back of the painted scrim. To make this scene effective it is suggested that the opening in the drop be the same size of the setting sun painted on the scrim, and that the opening should be directly back of the painted design. The drop should be opaqued so that there may be no light leaks though the drop during the action of the prologue. Light leaks are annoying to an audience and detract from the effectiveness of a scene.

(c) Mast Piece

This is the principal scenic unit of the set and is very effective in its impression of a ship at sea. The mast may be constructed of battens as indicated in Diagram C. of the accompanying sketches. A small platform large enough for one or two singers to stand upon is attached midway to the mast. Another batten above it may be fastened upon which a rolled sail is attached. The mast piece should be dressed with the various ropes, halyards, etc The bottom of the mast piece may be set into a mounting box which is fastened to the floor, braces running from the box to the mast acting as a base support. At the top of the mast an eye bolt may be adjusted with two cables attached to it, one running vertically to the batten above, and the other on an angle to the right to take the strain off of the mast piece when the characters are upon it. This is a very inexpensive piece to construct, old strips of canvas may be used to wind around the mast itself. The whole unit should be painted a dark blue which assists in the silhouette treatment which this piece must have against the colorful background. The cut drop forms the frame of the picture as indicated in Plate 2.

(d) Water Row

A Water Row with an uneven edge painted a green-blue extends from right to left back of the Mast Piece. It is suggested that it be slightly raked when set as this lends a better surface to the water effect which operates upon its surface.

(e) Cutout Ship

This is a miniature sailing ship. A flat piece in silhouette effect cut out of compo-board mounted on a wooden strip as indicated in Diagram B. The wooden strip with the compo-board cutout ship inserted in it is placed in a grooved track which extends across stage back of the Water Row. The track should be given a good treatment of graphite so that the ship may move easily without any jerks or jumps. A lash line may be attached to a screw-eye in front of the wooden strip and led along the track and this acts as the traveler for the ship, an operator pulling it slowly along the groove during the action of the unit.

(f) Back Drop

This may be a plain blue sky or it may be an especially constructed drop of blue with painted gray streamers running horizontally across its surface. A large sun box is placed back of the drop or may be painted on the special drop.

LIGHTING TREATMENT

With the introduction of the painted scrim in the last movement of the overture as previously suggested, the lights may be brought up gradually on the scrim starting with a blue in the foots and first border with the same treatment in the flood. As the blues reach half, introduce the reds. When the blues are full bring the reds into one half. A wave effect may be operated on the scrim if desired but this is not recommended. As the reds start on up full bring the blues down one half. When the reds reach full bring in the ambers about one quarter. As the red reach one half with the blues still at one half take out the ambers. As the overture finishes and goes into introduction of the theme song gradually take out the reds and as the blues are brought down after the reds are out the lights back of the scrim highlighting the scene of the Second Movement are brought up full with the foreground dark.

The lighting in the Second Movement should be very colorful. A deep blue sky blending with a green-blue tone at the horizon. A deep blue-green on the Water Row with an amber Water Row. The Mast Piece in silhouette may be caught with a light blue and amber from right with the under part of the sail tone a green. As the character mounts the ladder to the platform a spot off stage in amber should highlight him in contrast to the silhouetted mast. The cutout ship should be silhouetted against the drop and a green-blue spot may be focused on it from the sides. A large sun should change slowly from a dark amber to a rose. For the finale the lights dim out slowly as the first titles of the picture are brought on, being irised in on the scrim, then scrim taken away to sheet.

THE ROUTINE

The routine principally concerns the Second Movement. One or two male singers dressed in costumes similar to the characters in the picture sing one or two of the chantrys, especially "They Are Hanging Johnny." One may be discovered on top of the platform which is attached to the mast, while another one ascends towards him. We do not recommend many characters in this unit, as the main demand of the picture is to register the theme song or chantry.

COSTUME FEATURES OF GRAUMAN'S PROLOGUE

SID GRAUMAN whom we all recognize as one of the outstanding exponents in the production of real presentation and prologues, has recently produced a spectacular feature entitled "The Pageant of the Allies" which was a part of the mammoth prologue for "The Big Parade" shown at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre, Los Angeles.

The various costumes which created so much comment and which perhaps were the most pretentious of any ever designed strictly for a motion picture house, were created by Erte, the famous European designer who is now in this country. Erte has the ability to suggest a picture, create an atmosphere with a costume in a manner similar to those engaged in achieving the same effects with scenes and lights. His costumes are symbolic, they mean something, and in each of the characters he has caught the theme or keynote of the particular nation and reflected it in his design.

Mr. Grauman in conceiving this Pageant selected beautiful girls typical of the countries he wished to introduce and when they were garbed in the Erte creations, it was only natural that the Pageant "stopped the show." We are pleased to publish herein photographs of a few of the characters.

Here Are the Protect-the-Print Awards!

WELL, folks, the hard workin' Print feels like kickin' up her heels—or ought I to say MY heels, me bein' the one to whom I am makin' reference in this allusion?—but bein' a perfect lady I will abstain from such joyful exhibits.

The reason of this gay gladness is because at last I am finished and done with lookin' over Van's shoulder and the shoulder of each of these other two gentlemen, Mr. H. H. Buxbaum, the genial and business-gettin' Fox Exchange manager, and F. H. Richardson, who runs—I says runs because it is always going ahead at top speed—that department BETTER PROJECTION, of which gentlemen, the three was judges of the award in my Protect-the-Print campaign.

Now these three judges has decided after much care and has gave a final opinion, upon which of the accurate lists and accompanyin' letters about the things the writers done to protect the print had been the ones in all ways and manners most deservin' of bein' gave the awards.

I Have Wrote to Them Who'll Give Awards

Letters have been mailed and sent to the folks who donated the award materials in their interest in helpin' to better print conditions, to wit, as follows:

To Chalmers Publishin' Company, which allotted the First Award of Twenty-five Dollars.

To Mr. Frederick Watson, Advertisin' Manager of the Duplex Film Film Industries, who generously donated the very fine and capable helper, a Duplex Patchin' Block, Second Prize award material.

To Will C. Smith, who was backed up by Mr. Rabell, the go-getter president of Independent Movie Supply Company, in donating a Rewinder Set as Third Prize.

These Are Them Who Get the Awards

Now these are they to which the awards is to be awarded in the order of the way the awards is gave:

First Award. FRED K. LEGLER, Projectionist of Lyric Theatre, Redfield, South Dakota, gets the $25.00 from Chalmers Publishing Company—and it's REAL money, too.

Second Award. W. B. BOBBITT, Jr., Chief for the Suffolk Amusement Corp. Theatres, Suffolk, Virginia, gets the Duplex Patchin' Block—and it's a real help for a real feller.

Third Award. J. R. GOOD, Projectionist, Grand Theatre, Lancaster, Pennsylvania, gets the Rewinder Set donated by Independent Movie Supply Co., and he will find it a protect-the-print help indeed.

Besides the fortunate lucky award getters there was many who kept the judges hesitatin' because they had such good letters;

Honorable Acclaim For These Entrants

These gentlemen are gave high favorable mention:

Harold Mulcahy, Costello Theatre, New York City.
T. N. Low, Star Theatre, Coello, Illinois.
W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre, Jamaica, L. I., N. Y.
H. M. Alsman, United Theatres Amusement Co., Princeton, Indiana.
Wayne Mickelson, Coyle Theatre, Charleroi, Penna.
P. C. Stillwell, Rialto Theatre, Erie, Penna.
D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Penna.
G. J. Kamm, Capitol Theatre, Lancaster, Penna.
S. V. Haigler, Palace Theatre, Newport News, Va.
J. J. Dempsey, Dream Theatre, Winthrop, Mass.
V. J. Groetzinger, Chilton, Wisc.
Theo. Jorgensen, Rialto Theatre, Rock Springs, Wyo.
C. St. Peters, Box 212, Moville, Iowa.

Each of all of these can be proud of what they are doin' to protect the print, and exchanges in their territories should ought to see that they always get perfect prints—they deserve 'em!

Letters of the award getters and some of these others will be printed and published from time to time when Van can give me the space.

Lasky Expands Hollywood Plant To Keep Pace With Production

Bigger State Space to Take Care of Needs As Finer Equipment Will Provide Directors With Everything to Make Their Work

ANNOUNCEMENT of a gigantic expansion program to provide facilities for the greatest production program in all motion picture history came today from Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production.

Plans were made public for immediate construction of new huge stages at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Hollywood, which embrace two square blocks, and for the reopening of the Realart Studio on Beverly Boulevard.

Mr. Lasky returned to Hollywod after four months absence to personally supervise expansion and production activity on West Coast. He declared himself highly pleased with the results of the recent reorganization. In commenting on building program to provide space for new series of important pictures to be made on West Coast, Mr. Lasky said:

"In 1922, stage four was built at the Lasky studio to provide additional 30,000 square feet which brought total up to 90,000 square feet. We felt that would be ample to take care of production for a period of 10 years. But a year ago we found it necessary to add another 10,000 square feet of stage space, which was done on our Argyle street lot, bringing the total to 100,000 square feet. Now the first conference on my arrival in Hollywood has resulted in plans for immediate reopening of the Realart studio to provide us with still additional 41,000 square feet and construction of other stages on the Hollywood studio premises. We are beginning the most splendid era in the annals of motion pictures, one that we are assured will bring our ideals of the silent art to fruition. Of necessity there will be changes and additions in the line of progress, but these are of a nature that depend upon developments."

Daily conferences of important nature will occupy Mr. Lasky's time with the studio executives during his stay in Los Angeles.

Projection 9/10 of It Thinks Sanschagrin Opening Theatre

REAL picture theatres in this part of the state are not losing sight of the fact that projection is about nine-tenths of the recipe spelling "success" to a picture theatre. L. M. Sanschagrin, opening the new theatre in Saranac Lake on February 1, is installing two new Powers machines and Mazda equipment, with Elmer Crowninshield of Albany doing the job. The Strand in Schenectady has installed recently a Peerless low intensity, while the Community Theatre in Catskill has installed a Powerlite with low intensity.

Kansas City's Midland Will Stack Up With Any 4,000 Seater

THE proposed $3,000,000 Midland Theatre, a house which will seat 4,000 persons, the presentation policy of which will be modeled after the Capitol Theatre, New York City, is "in the works."

Midland Theatre Company have ten theatres in Kansas, strictly chain houses, but the Kansas City Theatre presents an entirely different proposition, it is said. That an alliance with "one of the large producing companies" is expected, officers of the company readily admit.

The layout of the theatre will permit an orchestra of more than forty pieces. Some idea of the scale of the building planned is gained from the fact it will have a total frontage of 514 feet on the three streets—Thirteenth, Baltimore and Main—mostly available for an impressive collection of shops. The theatre entrance will be on Main street, but exists will lead to all three streets.

Herbert M. Woolf is president of the Midland company and M. B. Shanberg manager.

Snappy Buying

YOUR EQUIPMENT likes to report the activities of men astute enough to see the advantages of new installations of the better equipment and to mention the folks who give them real co-operation.

The Louis R. Greenfield Theatres, conducting a chain of houses in California, with interests in the Hawaiian Islands, has placed orders for new Simplex machines for most of its theatres, and all will be equipped with the new Peerless lamps.

Greenwood Theatre, Trenton, N. J., purchased a Hertner Transverter, Liberty Theatre, Bernardsville, N. J., is installing two Simplex projectors. The Tivoli Theatre, a Gold & Hennessey house, purchased two Peerless Mirror Reflecting Arc Lamps, four of which type were grabbed up by the Strand-Royal Theatres, Elizabeth, N. J. They all got these, with service of the kind that counts, from Howells Cine Equipment Corp.

The J. D. Wheelan Organ Co., at Dallas, Texas, have arranged to handle the new Link-C Sharpe Minor Organ, manufactured by the Link Organ Co. The new organ has an attachment for four music rolls, so that the instrument can be played automatically.

McAuley in New York

J. E. McAULEY, manufacturer of the Peerless (Super, Reflector Arc Lamp, has been in New York during the past week. On this visit, Mr. McAuley took occasion to drop in on Joe Hornstein, of Howells Cine Equipment Corporation, and was compelled to express his gratification for the splendid success Joe has had in distributing this Super lamp throughout his territory.

Projectionist Says Exchanges Adopt Print Helps Promptly

Los Angeles Boys Took Up Protective Measure with Exchanges and Got Action Right Off the Bat from Live Managers

A PROJECTIONIST with pep is O. F. Stowe, who has the world by the tail out in Los Angeles. He has taken a vital interest in the campaign for Protect-the-Print measures that YOUR EQUIPMENT has been harping on, and his news, while not absolutely new, is bound to be of interest to those who think exchanges don't care about the prints they send out. Here's his chat:

Moving Picture World.
Dear Sir:

Referring to your article in the World of Jan. 16, I know that I am too late to get in on the prizes, but I want to state that the projectionists of Los Angeles submitted a novel idea about one year ago to protect the film, and it has been adopted by every film exchange in Los Angeles except one.

Acknowledging the injury to film by crooked reels, too tight tensions, hooked sprocket teeth and tight rollers, and film out of alignment, as being very injurious to film, but what is worse than sitting in a theatre and when the reel gets near the end seeing punch marks, scratches, and patches put there for cues, you no doubt will say why don't they run the reel down and look.

Ah! the delivery man rushes madly up in the booth five minutes before the show starts with a string of alibis as long as a railroad track, from flat tires to traffic jams, and could not possibly get there before. Well, we in Los Angeles should worry about cues.

We know the little piece of opaque is there, and the booths are built with three or four stations with momentary contact switches controlling Weaver Dousers. When the reel gets to the end the projectionists simply opens the magazine door and watches for the opaque to start through the film fire trap. Bingo, machine switch; bingo, momentary contact switch, and before the opaque can reach the aperture plate the change-over is made.

The ends of the reels suffer most because each time it is returned, the exchange has to cut out bad cue patches, punch marks and scratches.

The exchanges went so far as to taking all the old reels in the vaults and splicing in the opaque, claiming that it lengthened the life of the film six months.

Yours very truly,
O. F. STOWE,

Resurrect Theatre "Buried" 12 Years

SOUTH SIDE audiences in Kansas City ere long will sit in a threatre which for twelve years literally has been "buried." The house not only will be brought to "life," but will be resurrected in a splendor it never has known.

Few persons in Kansas City today know the theatre is in existence, although thousands pass within a few feet of it daily.

More than twelve years ago at Thirty-first and Main streets a theatre, the auditorium of which formed the center of a group of store buildings and shops, was abandoned and its lobby was made over into a store room. The auditorium has stood in silent darkness since that time. The property has been purchased by the E. O. Koch Leasehold and Investment Company of Kansas City and plans for the remodeling of the theatre are in charge of Charles A. Smith, Kansas City architect. The exterior, two stories in height and fronting 101 feet on Main street, will be in stucco in a light red or pinkish shade and the house will have all the modern equipment found in the best suburban houses. Details as to a name for the theatre or possible alterations have not been decided upon yet.

Big Building Program That's What It Is!

RUBIN LEVINE & CO., INC., E. P. Ruppert, Architect, and Samuel Klein, Consulting Engineer, Chicago, announce $30,000,000 worth of theatre work for 1926, consisting of twenty-seven theatres.

Six of these theatres to be erected in St. Louis, Mo., of which two are now under construction and the other four will be started within 90 days. The total cost of these theatres being $4,500,000. The seating capacities of these theatres to range from 2,000 to 3,500.

There will be nine theatres erected in Chicago at a total cost of $12,000,000 with seating capacities ranging from 2,200 to 4,000.

There will be erected in Toledo, Ohio, a 16-story office building and a 3,300 seat theatre in conjunction with same, at a total cost of $4,500,000, work to start March 15th, 1926.

At 89th Street & 1st Avenue, New York City, for Mr. Charles O'Reilly a 2,500 seat theatre and 10-story apartment building at a cost of $2,000,000. Work to start January 20th, 1926. The Gohman & Levine Construction Co. of Chicago are the general contractors.

Work will start soon on a new hotel and theatre in St. Joe, Mo., at a cost of $1,800,000.

R. Levine & Co. expect to reach the 40 mark for 1926, making them the largest theatre architects and financiers in the United States. All of these theatres designed by R. Levine & Co. are financed through their financing plans which have won their success.

West Portal is a Real Patron-Pleaser

SAN FRANCISCO'S West Portal will open during the Christmas holidays. It is within a few steps of the West Portal Twin Peaks tunnel. The "K" car passes the entrance.

Samuel H. Levin adds the West Portal to his family of suburban houses. The theatre will be operated under his personal supervision with the object of furnishing his patrons with a clean entertainment and instructive pleasure, the meanwhile receiving every courtesy.

The West Portal is substantially built of reinforced concrete and has ample exits on all sides. Every seat in the theatre is large and comfortable, with an unobstructed view of the stage.

Patrons of the West Portal Theatre perhaps will marvel at the lighting effects and color harmonies and changes produced. The lighting effects interwoven with the beauty of the auditorium and decorations are striking in their effectiveness. The perfect blending and synchronizing of colors is truly pleasing and gratifying to the eye and will create aquiet and restful feeling.

Better Projection Pays

About Non-rewinding Reels

FROM Ohio comes this letter:
The writer had a very pleasant and profitable chat with C. E. Long, projectionist at the Strand Theatre, Middletown, Ohio, concerning non-rewind reels for motion picture machines (meaning motion picture projectors presumably. There are a dozen or more machines which might be called "motion picture machines," you know. A printer is one of them, the camera another, motor generators another.—Editor).

I am obtaining a patent on a non-rewind reel. He suggested that I write you. Said I could use his name, as he knew you (Correct! Howdy, brother Long. How's tricks in Middletown? I am still using blotters presented to me by the Projectionists, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. of Hamilton and Middletown, Ohio. They certainly gave me an ample supply.—Editor).

He advised me that there are two non-rewind reels, viz. the "Toledo" and the "Feaster," but they had never gone over big. He did not know why, unless it was the price. Believed you would know if any one did. If you do I would appreciate any information you can supply.

I am advised that my reel can be produced for about twenty-five dollars. The reel fits on the present housings, and uses the same driving mechanism. Do you believe there would be a demand and sale for a moderate priced or low priced non-rewind reel? What do you think would be the best method of marketing such a device? Will you give me the names of the largest and best builders of motion picture machines? As soon as I get the patent papers and drawings I will send you a copy.

In the first place, it would be impossible to say just why the Feaster, which was the grst really practicable non-rewind device, never made much progress. All I know is that when it was first marketed it was in the hands of men who demanded an utterly absurd price for it. This department was "for" it, until they named the price. Later the price was reduced, but somehow it never got anywhere. I know next to nothing about the activities of the men handling the "Toledo."

Impossible to Answer It

It would be utterly impossible for me, or I think for any one else to presume to answer your questions with authority. First of all, much would depend upon the workableness of your reel in practice; its durability and freedom from complications and its reasonableness in the matter of price. If the production price is $25, then the selling price could not be under fifty dollars, I think.

Personally I would refuse to offer an opinion concerning such a device until I had had it actually tried out in practice by at least half a dozen projectionists.

My only suggestion would be that when your patent is completed, you demonstrate, using a working model, your device to one or more of three motion picture projector manufacturers.

You ask for the names of manufacturers of motion picture machines. Again presuming that you want the addreses of manufacturers of motion picture projectors, they are the Nicholas Power Company, No. 90 Gold street, New York City. The Precision Machine Company, manufacturers of the Simplex projector, 317 East 34 street, New York City, and the Enterprise Optical and Mfg. Company, 564 West Randolph street, Chicago, Illinois.

This is Pure Gall

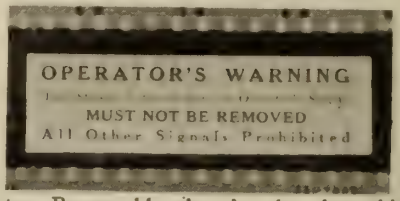
FROM Guy Hill, Projectionist and President Local Union No. 254, Yakima, Washington, a mixed local of stage employes and motion picture projectionists, comes this letter:

"Last time I wrote you you were in a hospital. Hope this one don't find you in one, and what's more I hope you are well, and that you stay well. And now to the purpose of this letter: Enclosed find a piece of film cut from the feature "Romola." There are eleven reels, and one of these (guess the word) things on every one of the eleven.

What do you think of it? And we are warned to not remove them, but they came out just the same, and will NOT be put back by me either. Our cues are all made out in writing, and no punch or scratch or sticker marks go. This should, it seems to me, be nipped in the bud."

You have asked me what I think of it. I think it is an exhibition of pure, unadulterated GALL for an exchange to try to compel a projectionist to mar his work by projecting to the screen such a thing as this. This to all intents and purposes opaque sticker of paper covers three whole frames, and laps over on the fourth by one quarter of its height, hence with eleven reels there would be a total of thirty-three frames of the feature which would not be frames, but an almost entirely black screen. Every reel there would be a complete stoppage of the show for three frames. The screen would go black.

Nice stunt, what? The thing is placed there as an "Operator's signal," you will observe, which tells us that he exchange believes you are all merely machine attendants. Presumably that is why they think machine "operators" won't care a what-you-callum how the thing looks, so long as the machine runs well.



And why is this abomination perpetrated? The answer is easy. Producers and exchanges have been told by this department time, time and time again how punching and similar change-over signal film mutilation could be stopped, BUT that involves a real, careful, honest inspection each time, and co-operation between exchanges, AND that means expense and some trouble, at which exchange managers and Film Boards of Trade elevate their dear hands in holy horror. They should do anything like that if they can force the projectionist to have a dark screen once every reel. That would cost them merely the very small fraction of a cent one of those gummed labels would cost. How lovely. How PERFECTLY lovely. That such a thing outrages the work of the projectionist—oh, well, they should worry! There probably are only machine attendants in ONE territory anyhow, and the machine operator won't worry so long as the machine runs all right.

You did well to cut out the stickers, and to LEAVE THEM OUT. If your exchange demands that you keep them in, then you demand that they send a man to your theatre to explain to your audience why your screen goes black once every reel—that it is not your fault.

The exchange is entirely justified in stopping film mutilation by punching, scratching, etc. This department is with them to a finish on that, BUT let them go about it as they should, by thorough inspection, charging the theatre with every bit of film thus ruined, suggesting to the theatre manager that it be charged against the wages of the projectionist, or the machine operator, for no projectionist would thus manhandle film. It is all a matter of knowing just what man commits the outrage of punching, scratching, etc., and that may only be determined by careful inspection of the films each time they come back to the exchange, with a record made as to their exact condition.

Bluebook School Answers 429 to 433

NOTE: Chauncey L. Greene has sent in an answer to the question dealt with last week which sets the matter forth in remarkably understandable form. He says essentially the same thing Mr. Jones did, but puts it in a way that we poor dubs can understand it more clearly. I shall therefore publish Greene's letter following these answers.

E. G. Steele, Salt Lake City, Utah, sent in excellent answers to question 424 to 428. Don't know whether it was overlooked or came too late.

Question No. 429—Suppose the neutral fuse to be blown and the load to be unbalanced, system being 110-220 volt Edison. Were you to connect a single 110 volt lamp between the neutral and one outside wire on the "heavy" side, would or would not the test lamp filament glow, assuming the unbalanced amperage to represent sufficient amperage to equal the amperage capacity of the test lamp? Explain the effect of such a connection.

E. G. Steele, Salt Lake City, Utah; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island; Thoreau and Clark, Strand Theatre, Vancouver, British Columbia; Allen Gengenbeck, New Orleans, Louisiana; Roy Saxon and John Read, Sufkin, Texas, Charles Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico and T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama, all came through without getting mixed up in their dates on the above question. This is once I deliberately tried to mix you up. You should see some of the answers received. Gosh!

Doe says:

Certainly the lamp filament would "glow," and then some. If you connected it in on the heavy side, you would merely unbalance the load that much more. The lamp would burn with the same brilliancy the rest as those of the lamps it is connected in parallel with.

It was a very simple matter, gentlemen. Why did some of you get so wierdly mixed up? Never mind how a question is worded. Just use your common sense. Such a lamp would, of course, simply be one more added to the "load" on that side of the circuit.

Question No. 430—Name the various types of switches commonly used in theatres.

The before named men, plus F. H. Moore, Taunton, Mass., answered "fair to middling" as to this one. I guess maybe Thoreau and Clark did best. They say: "(1) Single Pole, Single Throw (S. P. S. T.), used for short circuiting where series type motor generator sets are used; also used on multiple coil rheostats. (2) Double Pole, Single Throw (D. P. S. T.) for many purposes Double Pole, Double Throw (D. P. D. T.) switches, used for making connection to two power sources, and for other purposes. Triple Pole, Double Throw (T. P. D. T) switches used for connecting to two power circuits. Triple Pole, Single Throw (T. P. S. T.) switches, used on various 3-wire circuits. Four Pole Single Thow (F. P. S. T.) switches, used for 2-phase power circuit, and many types of approved push and snap switches, used for a variety of purposes.

Question No. 431—Name the various parts of a knife switch and tell us what care switches should have.

Gengenbeck says:

"Taking a double pole single throw knife switch for example, it consists of (a) a fireproof, insulating base upon which the parts are mounted. (b) Four terminal binding posts, mounted either on the base itself and connected to the metalic parts of the switch, or on the metalic parts of the switch themselves. (c) Four clamping nuts, one on each binding post. (d)a spring washer (maybe) under each clamping nut. (e) Two contact posts which carry the blades. (f) Two screws to fasten blades to posts, which same must have bolts with nuts and compression spring washers. (g) Two copper "blades." (h) Two copper contact posts—copper posts with which the blades make contact. (i) One insulating bar to connect loose ends of blades and carry the switch handle. (j) One handle, usually of wood. (k) One bolt to fasten handle to the crossbar and (l) one nut and (maybe) washer on handle bolt.

Well, by golly if there is anything overlooked in that answer, show it to me, though at that he didn't name the threads on the bolts.

Thoreau and Clark made a good point, though, when they named "Hinges—must not be used to carry current unless equipped with spring washers held by lock nuts or pins." Gengenbeck covered it, but did not mention the prohibition. In fact their answer was excellent all through. All the men did well on this one, including Mike De Voy, Portland, Oregon, J. R. Sanderson, San Francisco (first reply ever received from that city), California, S. T. Bolling, Houston, Texas, Howard Billings, Ashland, Minnesota; A. T. Dunbar, St. Louis, Missouri and John Lewiston, Pendleton, Oregon.

Question No. 432.—What point or points should be considered when installing knife switches?

Doe says:

Care should be taken that the switch is of proper dimensions to carry the voltage and of the right amperage capacity; also that it is of an approved type, and well made. Such switches, unless on a switchboard, should be installed in a suitable approved cabinet, in such position that the handle will swing either sidewise or up in closing, so that the switch will not tend to fall into closed position by gravity. Ordinarily it is best to so install them that the blades will be "dead" when the switch is open. If the switch itself carries fuses, it also is well to so install that the fuses will be "dead" when the switch is open. Such switches should always be installed in accesible places, where they may readily be observed and examined.

Question No. 433—Describe the various types of knife switches.

Colby says:

Single, double, triple and four pole single and double throw switches.

He then proceeds to describe each in detail, but this hardly seems necessary, especially in view of what has already been done in the other answers of this series.

This letter is from Chauncy Greene, 2,403 Aldrich Avenue, South Minneapolis, Minnesota. That brother Green is an able man this letter supplies ample evidence, as have his not too frequent letters of the past. We hope he will remain in the profession of motion picture projection, for it is sadly in need of more such men. I am giving his address because some of you might like to drop him a line, suggesting that he contribute to our department much more frequently. His letter, which is printed without any change whatsoever, reads:

Dear Mr. Richardson: If my understanding was correct Griffiths, in his problem proposed in January 9th issue, intends that, since the light coming to the audience from the screen is from points equally distributed about the center, we are to consider it as all coming from the center. This will result in no great error for any except the 40 foot distance, because the inverse square law holds fairly closely so long as the source is 1/5 or less of the distance.

Under the conditions the screen is illuminated to an intensity of 20 foot candles. Under this intensity magnesium carbonate will have a normal brightness of 25.4 millilamberts. It will have an apparent normal candle power of 0.626 per square foot, or a total candle power of 152. Then the apparent candle power of the two surfaces under consideration will be to the normal candle power of magnesium carbonate as their brightnesses for the various angles, as listed on page 263 of the Bluebook, is to the normal brightness of magnesium carbonate in the same list. (In this connection I wish to call attention to a misprint in this table. No. 14 for 20° should read 69.4 instead of 60.4. Mine is one of the early Bluebooks; maybe this has since been corrected.) Then their candle powers are as follows:

	0°	20°	40°	60°
No. 14	111	105.4	103.6	101.9
No. 27	216	142.5	96.9	77.3

Now their candle powers do not vary with distance from the screen, but only with the angle. A 16 candle power lamp is a 16 candle power lamp whether we view it from the next seat or from the next state. So is it with the screen. Candlepower is our unit for the measure of brightness.

The illumination reaching the audience will of course vary with the distance according to the inverse square law, with the modification previously mentioned, and possibly this is what Griffiths had in mind. This is tabulated below. Illumination is in foot candles.

Distance	0°	20°	40°	60°
		No. 14
40′	0.695	0.658	0.649	0.637
80′	.173	.164	.161	.159
120′	.0077	.0073	.0072	.0071
160′	.00434	.0041	.00405	.00398

For purposes of graphical representation on a plan of the auditorium it would be better to calculate the locations of points of equal intensity on each angle line and then draw in equal intensity lines similar to contour lines on a map. However life is too short for this, when it has no practical importance.

This is one such case because brightness of a surface is independent of distance, as may be readily seen by considering the physiology of the human eye. The eye consists of a lens, diaphragm, and light sensitive retina. This lens, by the way, is a marvel. Capable of an infinite number of focal lengths and speeds, and completely corrected at all of them for chromatic aberration, spherical aberration, coma, astigmatism and distortion. This lens forms an image of the screen on the retina. The total amount of light reaching the eye from

Question No. 450—Give us your idea as to just what circuits should pass through the main house switchboard, stage not considered. Tell us why these circuits should pass through the main board.

Question No. 451—Explain to us, using drawing if necessary, how you would proceed to trace out the connections in a large switchboard.

Question No. 452—Give us your ideas as to a home-made switchboard for a small theatre. Don't want a plan, but merely to see what you know about the matter.

Question No. 453—Name a few important points in connection with stage switchboards. Of course I know that is not the business of the projectionist, but just the same it is well that every man in a theatre have some knowledge of such things.

each unit of area of the screen varies inversely as the square of the distance. BUT the area of the image formed on the retina also varies inversely as the square of the distance. For example we view a screen at a certain distance and there is formed on the retina an image having a certain intensity of illumination. Now we move back to twice the original distance and the eye receives one-fourth as much light as before, but concentrates it upon an area on the retina one-fourth as great as before (half as wide and half as high) and the intensity of illumination of the image is the same as before, and therefore the screen appears as bright as before. In an improperly lighted theatre the observer, moving back from the screen, may bring into his field of view an extraneous light source which was previously outside the field of view and so affect the adaptation level (by changing the iris opening) of the eye, but that is another matter.

The above discussion holds true only for SURFACES. It does not hold for point sources of light due to the structure of the retina. The surface of the retina may be likened to the severed end of a telephone cable. It is composed of thousands of nerve endings which are sensitive to light. These are "fanned out" to use a telephonic term into the switchboard of the brain. Now a point of light is imaged on only one of these nerve endings instead of on many as a surface is, and consequently the amount of radiant energy or stimulation the nerve ending receives varies inversely as the square of the distance to the light source. It might be argued that since this holds for a point of light it also holds for each point on the screen. Perfectly true, but the number of such points imaged on each nerve ending varies directly as the square of the distance, and from any angle of view the brightness of a surface is independent of the viewing distance.

The only value of such data as contained in table 2, so far as I can see, is that, if we wish to carry matters to the ultimate degree of refinement, the distribution of auditorium illumination should be adjusted to suit the distribution characteristics of the particular screen surface in use.

Perhaps we shall some day come to this. Perhaps some day theatres, in addition to fire, electrical, and health inspection will also be subject to inspection by a board composed of a projection engineer, an illumination engineer, an oculist and inevitably of course a politician.

I certainly enjoyed both the note and the letter I received from you while I was in the hospital. You were right in assuming that it was not serious. I strictly eschew go-devils (in fact anything more deadly than Henry's Puddle-jumpers) so the likelihood of serious hospitalization is somewhat remote. It was simply a clear case of appendicitis, but I had let it go a little too long and gangrene had got a running start. This however was not as serious a complication as it sounds. Another hour or two and the story might have been different, but all's well that ends well. I feel better than ever. Perhaps it's our birth-dates that stand us in good stead, your's the 25th and mine the 30th. Pretty close to Halloween you know.

Sincerely yours,
Chauncey L. Greene,
2403 Aldrich Ave., S.,
Minneapolis, Minn.

This letter is extremely enlightening to me, though the entire matter is not yet cleared up. A very large sized start has been made, though, and I think before it is finished and done that we shall all have a very much better understanding of light-action as between the screen and human eye, which is of very large importance to the real motion picture projectionist, and may possibly hold some measure of interest even to the "moving picture machine operator." I hope so anyhow.

One thing I don't "get" is the statement, contained in the first paragraph of the letter: "This will result in no great error for any except the forty foot distance, because the inverse square law holds fairly closely so long as the source is 1/5 or less the distance."

"I am not sure that I understand this limitation, and shall ask Mr. Jones to comment on the matter for us, if he will; also brother Greene might elucidate.

I now have the matter of brightness and the non-effect of distance well fixed in my mind, but here is another point, viz.: Does it apply to visibility of various objects upon the screen surface. In other words, each object thereon being visible by reason of more or less diffused rays from the innumerable points, where its surface, will the object be visible to the eye along the lines laid down for brightness, or will its visibility be governed by the inverse square law.

Mark you well that in this I take into consideration the item of decrease in size of image on the retina caused by added distance. What I am after is information as to whether the less visibility at distance is because of the added difficulty for the eye in discerning or "picking out" the items in the smaller image, or because the inverse square law makes it difficult because each point of the image of the object sends to the eye less light.

I think you understand me. The point may seem a bit foolish after what has gone before, but just the same I want to have no doubt left in my mind concerning any point before this matter is finally closed.

Level Projection In Boston Town

BOSTON projectionist sets forth excellences of projection arrangements in a new theatre which has recently opened its doors.

From Arthur Gray, Boston, comes this comment on the new Metropolitan Theatre, and when Gray says it is good, and that its projectionists have real ability, I accept the statement as fact. Gray says:

A new, splendid de luxe house has been opened here in Boston—the Metropolitan—and the way the projection end of things been handled is a credit to every one concerned. It actually has LEVEL PROJECTION! Think of it, Rich! A 5,000 seat house and level projection! Just what we have all been waiting to see. Some one with foresight enough to go ahead and put into practice the very obvious truth you have for so long preached.

The lay-out of the projection room is fine, the equipment is the "last word," the crew is composed of mighty capable men with the result that there is high grade excellence in projection—in the thing the public pays to see. I do not know that I have ever seen better anywhere. The net result of the thing as a whole is that the whole game is being appreciably helped in Boston, or at least so I think.

Certainly any advance in procedure such as that automatically operates to help the whole industry in the locality in which it is begun, because it shows the foolishness and needlessness of picture distortion. The West Coast cities have for years had many large theatres with level projection. To me it has been an amazing thing that the East has been so persistently stupid in holding to needless distance, angle and picture distortion for so long.

I shall be glad to visit the Metropolitan, when opportunity offers, and describe the whole lay-out.

I am especially well pleased that Brother Gray is able to speak so highly of the projection room staff. I would appreciate a photograph of the projection room and the projectionists for publication in this department.

Roxie is planning a huge new de luxe theatre for the White Light District here in New York. I have been invited to examine the plane, but as yet have not done so. I do hope he has provided for level projection.

No Excuse for Long Projection Distance

Long projection distance and angle in projection have no legitimate excuse. They do great harm. They are mostly the result of a blunder in the past, which have been perpetuated by architects of much more renown than learning, insofar as has to do with projection problems. They are automatically relied upon and looked up to, hence are able to perpetuate this colossal crime against the motion picture industry.

I once wrote one of the largest producer-exhibitors here in New York City. He is at the head of an organization owning or controlling more than two score theatres in and around New York City, and many others scattered over the country. I asked for an interview to set before him the matter of placing projection rooms in the front of the balcony, or elsewhere, in order to avoid excessive projection angle and distance.

Did I get the interview? I did NOT. He replied, courteously enough, to the effect that his architects had advised him that such a thing was unnecessary and impractical, and that it would increase the fire hazard.

So I dropped the matter without telling him that dozens of high-grade theatres on the West Coast had done those things for years, and that more were doing it. The "architect said so," and to him that settled it. The poor projection engineer was not even worth listening to.

My compliments to Boston for leading the way. May her example of just plain common sense and projection sanity soon be followed in other eastern cities. Possibly it may be hoped that after a sufficient number of cities have pointed the way, New York City may consent to FOLLOW.

Mr. Nat Rothstein,

Dear Mr. Rothstein:

I had the pleasure last week of sitting through the scenes of "The Midnight Flyer", which, no matter what Fifth Avenue may think of it, and that makes little difference to our box office, is a real picture for getting the dough.

Our audiences here, a cosmopolitan crowd, ate it up. Many of the people stuck around for another look. This is a continuous house.

1000 kiddies out of the house. They came at 10 a.m. and would have staid until 10 p.m., if they were permitted to see this story of railroading over and over again. You can go out into the cities, towns and rural districts and praise "The Midnight Flyer" to the skies and you won't tell a lie about it.

Sincerely,

John Carroll

New Rental Contract Signed; Effective at Once

Clyde W. Eckhardt Goes to Chicago For Fox Company

Was Assistant to General Manager for Years

Clyde W. Eckhardt, who for the last three and a half years has served as assistant to W. R. Sheehan, General Manager of Fox Film Corporation, has been assigned to the position of manager, with supervision of the territories served out of the Chicago, Milwaukee and Minneapolis offices of the Fox Film Corporation, with headquarters in Chicago.

Mr. Eckhardt's return to the sales organization is directly attributed to the fact that it is generally understood that Mr. Sheehan will devote practically all of his time to the supervision of productions in the William Fox Studios in Hollywood.

George F. Dembow, at present manager of the Chicago office, will be transferred to the Home Office, to work in the field as a special representative.

Mr. Eckhardt was formerly district manager in Chicago, and has been with the Fox organization about eleven years. He has work hard, and achieved rank as one of the highly valued employees of the firm. Mr. Eckhardt expressed himself as greatly pleased to be able to return to the Chicago territory, where he has thousands of friends.

Skouras Says Anyone May Build in St. Louis

St. Louis, February 8.

Asked whether he had met William Fox on his recent business trip to New York City, Spyros Skouras, president of Skouras Brothers Enterprises and of the St. Louis Amusement Company, said he had not. The Skouras Brothers take the position that Mr. Fox or anyone has a right to build in St. Louis if they desire to do so.

In recent years none of the St. Louis first run houses have confined their screens exclusively to any one brand of pictures. Naturally the Missouri has favored Paramounts, the Grand Central, First National, and Loew's State the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer products.

McConnell Quits Universal; Succeeded by Julius Singer

New Appointee, Associated With Carl Laemmle Sixteen Years, Will Also Handle the Complete Service Contract

F. J. McConnell, manager of Universal's Short Product Department, has resigned.

Julius Singer, one of the original coterie of men whom Mr. Laemmle gathered about him when he first went into the distribution and manufacturing business, has been appointed short product manager of Universal and at the same time will take over the direction of the Complete Service Contract, upon which he has been working for some time.

Mr. Singer is thoroughly acquainted with the duties which devolve upon him and is one of the most popular and widely known exchange men in the entire Universal organization. Starting in Chicago some sixteen years ago, he has had charge of various exchanges under Mr. Laemmle's direction and with the exception of a few years when he was in the State Right business, has been continually in Mr. Laemmle's employ during that time.

Mr. McConnell for the last seven years has been with Universal in the dual capacity of sales manager and producer spending part of his time at Universal City and part of the time in New York. He is one of the best known film men who ever entered the picture business from the newspapers, having had experience in exploitation and syndication work which was invaluable to him.

Mr. McConnell will relinquish his duties at Universal on Saturday and will take a week's vacation at Pinehurst, before announcing his future connection, to accept which he resigned from Universal.

Call To Defend Motion Pictures

A call to arms to defend the motion picture industry from the indictments of college professors, judges, members of the clergy and those in the public light who would condemn the "movies" as a medium for inspiring the youth of the land to crime and moral laxity, is being sounded in a personal communication to the motion picture theatre owners of the United States and Canada in the February 1 issue of their official house organ, "The Official Bulletin of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America."

America's theatre owners are urged to groom themselves in writing and public speaking, so as to be prepared at any time to take a stand for their industry before a Chamber of Commerce, a Rotary Club or even a Parent-Teacher's meeting in a public school. The communication bears the endorsement of R. F. Woodhull and Joseph M. Seider, president and business manager respectively, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Publix Theatres Orders Changes

The following promotions and transfers have been made recently in the organization of the Publix Theatres Corporation:

Montgomery S. Hill, district manager of the Carolinas district, with headquarters at Charlotte, has been transferred to the management of the Atlanta district, with headquarters in Atlanta. He succeeds J. J. Franklin, who has been transferred to the management of the New York district, with headquarters at the home office. J. J. Fitzgibbons, who has been manager of the New York district, goes to Charlotte to succeed Mr. Hill as district manager in the Carolinas.

Ernest Morrison, formerly manager of the Imperial, Asheville, has been appointed manager of the Howard, Atlanta, succeeding Charles G. Brandon, resigned. C. B. Stiff goes from the Imperial, Columbia, S. C., to the Imperial, Asheville, succeeding Morrison. Thomas Holliday has been transferred from the Alhambra, Charlotte, to the Imperial, Columbia.

Important Organizations, At Hays' Luncheon, Approve Pact

Advisory Committee for Detail Work

An agreemnt designed to end contractual disputes between motion picture theatre owners and the producers and distributors of motion pictures was reached in New York City, on Saturday, February 6, at a luncheon given by Will H. Hays, President of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, for the officials of the important organizations of motion picture theatre owners throughout the United States.

The group representing all the factors in the motion picture industry, agreed upon a Standard Exhibition Contract which will be used by all theatre owners and distributing companies in booking motion picture for exhibition, effective immediately.

The exhibitors of the United States were represented by R. F. Woodhull, Dover, N. J., President; Joseph M. Seider, New York City, Business Manager, and A. Julian Brylawski, Washington, D. C., Chairman of the Administrative Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Charles L. O'Reilly, New York City, President of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce; W. A. Cut Ticket Tax

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Washington, February 10.

The Senate tonight suddenly voted to abandon taxes on theatre admissions. There was no warning of the move. The Senate had approved the repeal of the estate tax when Senator King of Utah, a member of the Finance Committee, moved to strike out all admissions and dues taxes. His motion barely carried, 36 to 34.

The House had voted to cut these taxes from $33,000,000 to $29,000,000, and the Senate committee had cut the revenue still further to $24,000,000.

Boston Financier Purchases Control of F. B. O.

Jos. P. Kennedy, Buyer, To Continue Policy Now in Work

Personnel Retained in "High Up" Places

Announcement is made of the consummation of negotiations whereby control of R-C Pictures Corporation and Film Booking Offices of America and their various subsidiaries is transferred by Lloyd's Bank and the Grahams of London, England, to Joseph P. Kennedy, Boston financier. The corporations involved are generally known in the motion picture industry as "F. B. O."

The ararngement under which the transfer is effected was concluded by Mr. Kennedy and Lord Inverforth, representing Lloyd's and Grahams, who came to New York recently from London with Major H. C. S. Thomson, president and managing director of the companies. Thomson, a member of Grahams, will continue as president and managing director. The executive and operating personnel will remain unchanged. W. W. Lancaster, representing Lloyd's in America, will continue as a director.

The policy of the companies will continue unchanged. A production policy for 1926-27 was adopted before the transfer. The corporations included in the transaction are R-C Pictures Corporation, Film Book Offices of America, Inc., Film Booking Offices of Canada, Ltd., and F. B. O. Studios, Inc.

Commenting upon the transfer, Major Thomson said: "Grahams and Lloyds have long felt that, because of the fact that their interests are almost entirely confined to England and that these companies represented virtually their only big business interest in America, that the development of the companies could best be carried out under resident control. The progress of these companies has been most decided during the last twelve months. Their operations are chiefly in the United States and American control was considered a progressive and sound business step."

Mr. Kennedy was formerly president of the Columbia Trust Company, of Boston, Mass.; was formerly connected with the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Company and with Hayden, Stone & Company, bankers and brokers of Boston and New York. He is a director and trustee of many important New England enterprises.

Truth Survives Annual Expose At the Astor

Allvine-Rothstein Presentation Is Huge Success

Truth underwent her annual expose on Saturday night, February 6, at the Hotel Astor, New York, and survived the ordeal pretty well while a record number of 950 guests had a huge time at her expense. This was the sixth annual Naked Truth Dinner, brain child of the advertising and publicity men. Even the young lady with the new rhinestoned slippers, while trying to protect them from patent leather pressure as three orchestras alternated in dispensing sweet music, voted a loud "aye" along with the other happy folk.

The guests were welcomed by Glendon Allvine, president of the A. M. P. A. Nat Rothstein was master of ceremonies. Their stock as entertainers rose appreciably. Johnny Hines was nominated "guests conductor of wise cracks" but did not actively "guest-conduct, in place of Texas Guinan, who defaulted. Nat Rothstein real telegrams from the Wampas and certain very humorous wires (alleged) from several other organizations and individuals.

The hit of the evening was Vic Shapiro's news reel. The Twelve Immortals were unveiled —in pastels by John Thomas Rawls.

"The Bugle," a burlesque trade paper dore by the editors of the Daily Review, Herald, News and Moving Picture World, was given each guest.

Research Work Requires All DeForest's Time

Steps Out as Head of His Talking Film Company

Dr. Lee De Forest, of radio fame and inventor of Phonofilm, has resigned the presidency of De Forest Phonofilms, Inc., to devote himself to further research work in connection with his invention.

As the result of De Forest's relinquishment of the executive reins some changes were made necessary in the management of the organization and several new directors were elected to the Board. Among these are Lorillard Spencer, noted engineer and corporation director; H. J. Frey, of Ray D. Lillibridge, Inc.; Robert E. Welsh, formerly editor of Moving Picture World, and William Wright, who has been prominently identified with the motion picture industry for 18 years.

In the new arrangement of administrative offices, Dr. De Forest becomes second vice-president and technical director and Mr. Wright is made first vice-president, treasurer and general manager. Mr. Welsh is secretary. A successor to Dr. De Forest in the presidency will be elected at the next meeting of the Board of Directors.

Fox House in St. Louis

St. Louis, February 6.

Final papers transferring the Humboldt Building, Midway Theatre and other property at the southwest corner of Grand and Washington boulevards, St. Louis, Mo., to the Theatre Realty Company, representing the Fox interests, passed this week. The deal involves about $2,250,000. Fox plans to build a 5,000-seat theatre on Grand boulevard.

Boston Theatre Hurt By Rumors It Is Not Safe

A reward of $10,000 has been offered by the management of the new Metropolitan Theatre in Boston for a clue that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who have caused the spread of a rumor that the big 5,000-seat house is unsafe and that those who enter it do so at their own risk.

The announcement of the reward in the newspapers created wide amazement and is the chief topic of discussion on the streets, in the subways, among theatre patrons and elsewhere.

A statement issued by the management of the Metropolitan, which is operated jointly by Publix Theatres and E. F. Albee, brands the rumor as "silly, ridiculous and in every particular absolutely and entirely without foundation."

The heads of Publix Theatres seek to discover the source of the slanderous rumor that there is some architectural defect in the building which endangers the safety of all who enter it. They have authorized the First National Bank of Boston to pay the $10,000 to anyone giving information which will result in the arrest and conviction of anyone responsible for the spread of the rumor.

Important Bill In New Jersey

Trenton, N. J., February 8.

A bill was introduced today by Assemblyman Siracusa, majority leader, at the request of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, in the New Jersey Legislature, providing for the supervision of theatres, carnivals and other amusements by the State Tenement House Department. This bill, it is hoped, will have the effect of eliminating unfair competition by the non-theatrical institutions with tax paying motion picture theatres.

This bill is in the nature of a code worked out by the State Tenement House Department and the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey, in compliance with the terms of Senate Bill 241 passed by last year's legislature.

Joseph M. Seider, president of the New Jersey unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, asserts there are at the present time, in communities with a population under 10,000 in the State of New Jersey, 195 theatres with a seating capacity of 185,807 and 65 halls with a seating capacity of 233,361. Thirteen of the 195 theatres are on the second floor, some of these with balconies. Twenty of the 65 halls are on the second floor and 3 on the third floor. Almost all of the 65 halls operate without fireproof booths and without proper exits.

Grainger Signs Hoblitzelle on Long Contract

Motion Picture Producers Will Aid Music Week

Plans for a national drive to increase appreciation for music in the United States were announced this week by the National Music Week Committee, of which Otto Kahn is chairman.

Under the plan proposed the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the Music Week Committee representing twenty-four national organizations with a membership totalling many millions, and the motion picture industry, will join forces for a musical demonstration in the motion picture theatres of the country, prior to and during Music Week, set for May 2-8.

Mrs. Max E. Oberndorfer, chairman of the music division of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, representing Mrs. John D. Sherman, president, presented preliminary plans for the campaign to C. M. Tremaine, secretary of the National Music Week Committee, and to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., both of whom promised the full cooperation and support of their organizations.

Barbara La Marr Is Laid to Rest

Los Angeles, February 5.

Barbara La Marr, screen star, who died January 30, at Altamont, was buried today in the Hollywood Mausoleum. The body of Miss La Marr rested on a golden, velvet bier, about which flowers were banked high. In her hand was a single red rose, from a little girl admirer, and with it a note which read:

"To my beautiful lady, Barbara, whom I longed to meet. May my life be as lovely and unselfish as yours."

On her breast were orchids, from Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks.

The funeral services were brief and simple, as had been planned by Miss La Marr before she died. A prayer was said, and the Christian Scientist burial service read. A girl, who asked that she be known "just as a girl friend of Barbara's" sang "Eternity."

Then through streets where police traffic reserves were on duty, the cortege passed to the Hollywood Mausoleum and Miss La Marr was finally laid to rest.

Bert Lytell, Alfred Green, Tom Gallery, Henry Hathaway and Victor R. D. Knickerbocker were the pallbearers.

With them were Paul Bern, John McCormick, Colleen Moore, Zasu Pitts, Bessie Love, Gladys Brockwell, Marshall Neilan, Blanche Sweet, Milton Cohen, Gloria Swanson and Claire Windsor as honorary pallbearers.

N. Y. and Detroit Offices for A. C. A., New National Group

Independents Among Exchange Men, Producers and Theatre Owners Merge Holdings; Pool Assets of $20,000,000

Detroit, February 3.

American Cinema Association, a national organization for the cooperative production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures, was formed here today.

In A. C. A. are allied foremost producers and exchangemen from the ranks of the motion picture industry, with whom are aligned 2,800 representative independent theatre owners of the United States.

The assets of the factors which have gone into the formation of the new national film organization are in excess of $20,000,000. The merging of those interests makes this combination, now incorporated and functioning as the A. C. A., one of the outstanding developments in the motion picture industry during the last year.

The members present at the first meeting were: David M. Hartford, and Edward Leszczynski, Trustees of the David Hartford Productions of Detroit; A. J. Moeller, President and Harry S. Manus, Treasurer of the Moeller Theatre Service, Inc., New York; Gene Marcus, of the 20th Century Film Company, Philadelphia; A. C. Snyder, Dependable Pictures Corp., Boston; Ben Levine, Oxford Film Exchange, New York, William Hulburt and Jack Saxe, Favorite Film Co., Detroit; Harry Grelle, Supreme Photoplay Productions, Pittsburgh; Ben F. Simpson, Pacific Coast Distributors, San Francisco; Joe Stern and S. Stern, Independent Film Company, Omaha and Des Moines, and representatives of the Allied Distributors of Chicago, Indianapolis and Milwaukee.

The Board of Directors of the A. C. A. is comprised of Gene Marcus, Philadelphia, William Hulburt, Detroit, Joseph Stern, Omaha, Ben Simpson, San Francisco, Leonard Leszcynski, Detroit, Joseph P. Wolff, Detroit, Adam J. Blake, Detroit; A. J. Moeller, Detroit; and Harry S. Manus, 2nd Vice President, Adam J. Blake, Secretary and Edward Leszczynski, Treasurer.

The distribution interests of A. C. A. are represented, through the members of the organization, by thirty-two branch offices in the principal cities of the country. These offices are now functioning.

Affiliated with the A. C. A. from the producing field is the David Hartford Productions and its allied interests of Detroit. Its productions are to be made by and distributed through the exchanges of the A. C. A. For the season of 1926-27, twenty-six features will be made under the general supervision of Mr. Hartford.

The executive offices of the A. C. A. will be in Detroit, and the general offices in New York. The New York office will be used as the headquarters for all details of distribution and as the centralization point of advertising and exploitation of all product.

Editorial headquarters will be established in Los Angeles and New York, the latter office under the direction of Arthur Hoerl, who was also appointed at the first meeting of the Association as Director of Advertising and Exploitation.

American Cinema Association, now a reality, represents the accomplishment of a long cherished ambition of two native Detroiters—A. J. Moeller, formerly general manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and David M. Hartford, President and Director General of the new organization, respectively.

BIRTHS

William F. Bork, Paramount manager in Buffalo, is celebrating the arrival of a new member of the family. She is Joyce Ardith Bork and "the prettiest baby in the world," according to Bill. Congratulations! Mrs. Bork is fine, thank you!

The household of Mr. and Mrs. N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, Ontario, has been blessed by the arrival of a baby girl. Mr. Nathanson is managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corp., Ltd., Toronto, and is one of the most influential figures in Canadian film circles.

The Universal family was increased by one this week when Mrs. Edward F. Todd, wife of Universal's chief comedy and serial cutter gave birth to a 7½-pound girl. Instead of the proverbial silver spoon in her mouth, the proud father asserts that she was born with silver shears in her hand.

Return From Tour

Ned Marin, western sales manager of First National Pictures, and C. W. Bunn, also of the Distribution Department, returned last week from a week's trip during which they visited Chicago, Milwaukee, Toronto and Montreal. In Toronto Messrs. Marin and Bunn were joined by C. M. Steele, another member of the Distribution Department.

Cecil B. De Mille's Theatre

Hollywood, Cal., Februray 6.

Another new theatre will be started here in the near future. It will be built by Cecil B. De Mille, the producer. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,100, and will be located on Vine street. Upon completion it will be leased to A. G. Wilkes for twenty years, at a rental of more than $1,000,000.

Tri-State Chain Takes All Wm. Fox Films For Five Years

Deal Follows Successful Tests in 1925-26

"Jimmy" Grainger, general sales manager of Fox Films, put over a "tenstrike" on Tuesday, February 9, when, as the climax to six months of negotiations, he secured the signature of Karl Hoblitzelle, president of the Interstate Amusement Corporation, controlling the Majestic Theatres in Dallas, Fort Worth, San Antonio and Houston, Texas; the Majestic in Little Rock, Ark., and the Lyric, Birmingham, Alabama, to a contract calling for 100 per cent. first run of Fox Films product for a period of five years, beginning with next season's releases. This means that the Hoblitzelle circuit will play every feature, comedy, variety and news reel released by Fox until 1931.

Early last spring Mr. Hoblitzelle purchased Fox Films product 100 per cent. for his entire circuit. The new contract is looked upon as convincing evidence of the satisfactory results he obtained from the initial booking.

Last October, when active theatre movements all over the country were very much in evidence, Mr. Grainger and L. B. Remy, Southern District Manager for Fox Film Corporation, approached Mr. Hoblitzelle with the proposal of a long term contract with Fox Films. The showman, pleased with the results obtained from the first group of pictures, asked to be allowed to see how the midseason product went over before closing the deal.

While Mr. Hoblitzelle was observing the results of the current season's product, he came to New York and went into the new contract thoroughly. He was accompanied back to Dallas by Mr. Grainger, where the situation was studied by both parties and the closing of the contract is the direct result of these studies, conversations and meetings.

Following the signing of the contract Mr. Hoblitzelle expressed himself as highly pleased with every detail of the arrangement and said he looks forward to five prosperous years as a result.

Ask More Money

Projectionists in Albany, N. Y., have jumped their prices for all work done after the regular shows. These men have been receiving 50 cents per reel for trade screenings at some of the theatres. The men met recently and have now demanded $1 per reel. Trade screenings have been held recently on Sunday nights at the Colonial Theatre, but with the stiff advance demanded these screenings have been canceled from now on. At the screening last Sunday night at the Colonial twenty-three reels were shown.

Industry Greets Laemmle at Hotel Commodore

This Outstanding Event Opens a Month of Celebrations

Crowds Cheer Founder of Universal

The month of celebration which will signalize Carl Laemmle's twentieth anniversary in the motion picture business, got off to a rousing start Friday evening, February 5, at a testimonial dinner and dance staged as a tribute to Laemmle by the hundreds of Universal employees in and around New York City.

The affair was held in the grand ball room of the Hotel Commodore and in color and magnitude was one of the most elaborate film parties ever given in the East. More than one thousand persons were present.

Prominent figures in the industry, stars, directors, representatives of the daily and trade press and celebrities of the stage and business world united with the Universal personnel in rendering tribute to the Universal chief, who beamed his gratification and surprise at the extent and spontaneity of the celebration.

The festivities of the evening were varied, and included, besides the dinner and dancing, entertainment and several delightful stunts. As the first public appearance of the Universal chief since his recent return from Europe, the affair developed into a monster demonstration on behalf of the film head and of his approaching twenty-year anniversary, February 26. It was on February 26, 1906, that he opened the little Whitefront Theatre in Chicago, his first venture into the motion picture field.

Chasteen Cheers Chief

A unique touch was given to the party by the unexpected presence of Charles A. Chasteen, now manager of the Forest Hills Theatre, Forest Hills, L. I., the first employee Laemmle ever had in this business. Chasteen was the first operator at the Whitefront Theatre. The former operator and the Universal president had a jovial reunion.

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, was the principal guest and seemed to enjoy the evening as much as Laemmle did. Among the prominent exhibitors present were Al Steffes, Frank Rembusch and other out-of-town theatre men then assembled in New York for conferences with the Hays organization.

The dinner was featured by several outstanding events, the first being the undraping of a twenty-foot portrait of the Universal chieftain, which brought cheers and applause from the assembled Universalites.

Another event which created great enthusiasm was the presentation of a silver loving cup to Laemmle by his employees in the Fort Lee laboratory. The presentation speech, felicitating the head of the Universal organization upon his twenty years' progress in the film world, was made by Ruby Hemstreet of Fort Lee.

Following this presentation, a man impersonating "The Phantom of the Opera," in scarlet garb and with the grinning features of Chaney's great characterization, strode majestically through the banquet hall and presented a box of flowers to Laemmle from the employees of the Big "U" or New York exchange.

"Therefore, Be It Resolved"

N. L. Manheim, head of Universal's foreign department, presented to Laemmle in behalf of the employees of that department, a handsome, hand-illuminated and leather bound resolutions, on his twentieth film anniversity.

The dancing was started by a grand march led by Carl Laemmle, Will Hays, Irving Thalberg and Miss Laemmle.

Among the other prominent motion picture personages present at the dinner were E. H. Cochrane and P. D. Cochrane, E. H. Goldstein, Irving Thalberg, Joe Seiter, Peter Woodhull, George Kann, Julius and Abe Stern, Meyer and Louis Schine, William Johnston, William J. Reilly, Joseph Dannenberg, Arthur James, Willard C. Howe, Merritt Crawford and many more.

Many of those present were accompanied by members of their family or guests. Among the personal friends or relatives of Mr. Laemmle present were Miss Rosabelle Laemmle, S. M. Einstein and Mrs. Einstein, M. I. D. Einstein, Justin Landauer and Mrs. Landauer, Beno Rubel and Mrs. Rubel and Julius Bernheim. Several other members of the distinguished Cochrane family also were present, including Negley Cochrane and members of his family, Witt K. Cochrane of Chicago, William Callahan and Mrs. Callahan and George Cochrane.

"U" Executives Present

Among the Universal executives present were Ralph Williams, Earl Kramer and Lou B. Metzger, Al Fair, C. P. Paine, R. V. Anderson, Irving Stolzer, L. W. Alexander, William C. Herrmann, George Brown, S. F. Hartman, N. L. Manheim, Paul Gulick, Julius Singer, H. L. Rosenquest, Leo Brecher, Joe Weil, V. R. Carrick, Sigmund Moos, Nat Rothstein, O. C. Binder, E. D. Leishman, S. S. Liggett, J. V. Ward, Sidney Singerman, Phelps Decker, Dave Brill, Sam Sedran, Fred J. McConnell, Harry Asher and Rebecca Joffe.

The dance music was supplied by Ben Bernie, in person, and his orchestra. An attractive program was prepared by Paul Perez.

Switch to Stock

Ralph Kettering says that the Ascher circuit will have 23 theatres in the Chicago territory by the end of the year, fourteen already in the circuit and others are building for opening this year. He also says that owing to the success of stock at the Chauteau, two theatres will be switched from pictures to stock.

Wilson Goes to Florida

Watertown, N. Y., Feb. 6.

J. Victor Wilson, former manager of the Robbins theatres, here, went to Miami, Florida, yesterday, to take charge of the theatres operated by the Motion Picture Corporation of Florida. The Strand will open February 15, and two other theatres are being rushed to completion.

Pommer Arrives

INCORPORATIONS

Albany February 8.

Three motion picture companies were incorporated in New York State during the past week. Papers filed with the Secretary of State revealed the incorporation of the Gromor Amusement Corporation, capitalized at $100,000, with H. L. and William Grosman, of New York City, and H. H. Frieder, of Jersey City, as directors. The Mechanicville State Theatre, of Mechanicville, capitalized at $60,000, was also formed by William E. Benton, Frank P. Williams and Irene D. Benton, of Saratoga Springs. The capitalization of the Winkler Film Corporation were Margaret J. Winkler, Charles B. and Nathan L. Mintz, of New York.

THE BIG EGG MAN WITH BUTTER ON HIS VEST—This is an Educational picture—"For Sadie's Sake," with Jimmie Adams and Molly Malone—and is typical of the superb way in which short comedies are mounted nowadays.

For You—"Short Feature Magazine"

OVER the whole face of the Short Feature field has come a remarkable change within the past year. The full length picture, during 1925, stepped out with a full stride. The Short Feature kept pace with it, and in the matter of relative change, eclipsed the performance of its big brother.

Seeing the need and merit of consecutive and constructive attention to the Short Feature we began immediately upon assuming the editorial direction of Moving Picture World to build up the department devoted to the Little Celluloid Brother of the big picture.

We tossed the pebble of Laugh Month into the film pool. Its ripples are still breaking over the surface of the great picture pond.

Now we come to "Short Feature Magazine." Experience has shown us that the exhibitor wants a complete trade paper every week, with no monthlies or quarterlies thrown in as fabricated side show adjuncts to the Big Top.

That is why we keep the service departments of Moving Picture World between its own covers every week. The Big Top remains the Big Top, with no acts divorced from the bill.

"Short Feature Magazine," edited by Charles Edward Hastings, gives the exhibitor a magazine within a magazine, completely informing him on a most vital part of his entertainment.

This department will continue to reflect for you the progressiveness and the sanity which mark production and merchandising operations in the Short Feature field. Concentrated in this field is a great deal of the best showmanship talent in the business. Short Feature producers are spending a great deal of money well. Study the advertising in their productions and you will find a sane, analytical approach to your exhibition problems.

Great things will be done in the Short Feature field in 1926. "Short Feature Magazine" in Moving Picture World will help you cash in on the healthy, bed-rock manner in which operations in this sector are cast.

We have shortened the range on "Short Feature Magazine" this week. You will find it in this issue, within easy range on page 703.

RICHARD A. ROWLAND

General Manager,
First National Pictures

Until the day he made this caricature Covarrubias had never laid eyes on Richard A. Rowland. In a few moments and with a few lines he made a complete analysis of Mr. Rowland's personality. The attitude in which Dick Rowland sits at his desk in this character portrait is immensely typical. For Rowland meets issues with you squarely. He is open, direct, human. And aggressive in his treatment of any problem. A big leaguer who has not lost his sense of proportion or his sense of humor. These are the qualities revealed by Covarrubias, whose pen is more searching than the camera. Under Rowland, First National in January of this year celebrated the biggest month's business of its history. Further, the organization in January started on the erection of a studio which will be the largest and best equipped studio in the world. Which is saying a lot for any "lot" these days. And which is indicative of the manner in which Rowland, who directed the purchase of the 75-acre tract just outside of Los Angeles, is looking ahead for First National.

New Exhibition Contract Is Triumph of Right Principles

----By Bill Reilly

LAST week Frank Rembusch issued a call to exhibitors to convene at French Lick Springs to frame an acceptable form of exhibition contract. A state convention may be held at French Lick, but not for the purpose of drawing up a rental contract. A new Standard Exhibition Contract has already been created and officially approved by officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

The battle ground was suddenly shifted from French Lick to the office of Will Hays. It was there, Friday and Saturday of last week, and the early part of this week that the General Staffs of the opposing forces met and fought their battle.

Seider's Work Invaluable

Mr. Rembusch's call, a spectacular one, undoubtedly had a good effect in precipitating final action and in marshaling exhibitor strength from all parts of the country at the New York conference board. Action at French Lick would have been valueless without co-operation from the Hays office. In anything said or done about the Standard Contract from the exhibitor point of view the heavy duty done by Joseph M. Seider, as Business Manager of M. P. T. O. A. and as Chairman of its Contract Committee cannot be overestimated.

The new form of Standard Exhibition Contract is printed in full on pages 700, 701 and 702 of this issue. It will be put into use just as soon as its physical production will permit.

It is built upon the old contract, but with noteworthy additions, amendments and revisions. Briefly the changes are as follows:

The second clause of the contract shows a revision which gives every exhibitor a definite contract year, this year to begin on the first day he shows a picture under the contract.

Second Run Designation Obligatory

A paragraph is inserted in Clause 5 to make clear the practice of daily check-up of box-office figures when pictures are played on percentage.

Clause 6 specifies that payment, if any, made by the exhibitor on signing the contract shall be deemed payment on account of amounts due under the contract.

Clause 9, a new provision, makes obligatory on the part of the distributor the designation of second and subsequent runs. This will prevent the abuse of compelling the exhibitor to go into the open market for productions when those contracted for proved to be unavailable.

Clause 10, another new provision, fixes the liability of damage suffered by a theatre for the failure of a print to arrive upon the exhibitor who tardily forwarded the print to the damaged exhibitor. This applies only when film is shipped directly from one theatre to another.

Clause 11, dealing with damaged prints and claims relating thereto, reduces the fixed cost from six to four cents per foot, and moves the time extension from 30 up to 60 days. It also provides that an exhibitor receiving a damaged print must so telegraph the exchange prior to the second public showing of the print.

No Substitution Permitted

Clause 12 carries the important amendment that the distributor has the right to change the title of any picture specified in the contract, but not the right to substitute or change one picture for another.

Clause 14 is amended to prohibit a second or subsequent run exhibitor from advertising a picture until the completion of the first run on that picture in his city or town.

Clause 15 is new, warranting that productions contracted for shall contain no advertising matter for which compensation has been received.

Clause 16 is also a new one, stipulating that the exhibitor pay on demand to the distributor any tax imposed on the delivery or exhibition of film.

Clause 17, another new provision, prohibits free exhibitions by stipulating that all pictures booked under the contract shall be shown at a minimum admission charge of ten cents.

Clause 18, new too, gives either party the right to cancel the contract providing that specified delay in fulfillment of the contract continues for a period of three months.

Clause 22 carries an amendment to the effect that the contract shall not become binding until accepted in writing without alteration by the two contracting parties.

Important Arbitration Changes

Several important changes are made in the rules governing the operation of Arbitration Boards. The first of these is the naming of two alternates for each member of the Board, giving an exhibitor or distributor before the Board the right to challenge. The second makes a right instead of a matter of courtesy the adjournment of a case to the next regular meeting of the Board, when such adjournment is requested. The last change provides that if an exhibitor have a case against a distributor and win it, he shall receive transportation costs, if any, and in addition a sum not to exceed $10.

The entire instrument is a triumph of right principles. Both sides of the controversy deserve credit for the quick and comprehensive manner in which they executed the new contract once they got down to brass tacks last Friday.

1926 Opens Well For Exhibitor

Exhibitors should feel especially proud of the strong manner in which their interests were represented in the final deliberations. Will Hays and Gabriel Hess, representing the producers and distributors, co-operated to the fullest.

The contract as it stands is a lengthy document. Necessarily so, because it had to take care of the vast number of ramifications in picture rental and exhibition, covering all parts of the country and all classes of exhibitors.

There are some clauses in the contract which will not concern the first run exhibitor, and some which will not concern the second or subsequent run theatre. That is because the instrument had to be universal in scope and application, instead of local.

It is significant of relations between exhibitor and distributor that 1926 opened early with this battle won—a victory for the exhibitor; an indication of the right attitude on the part of the Hays organization—to promote the best interests of the industry.

Hamilton Helping Meyer Celebrate Palace Birthday

NOW is the time when all good people of Hamilton, O., come to Fred S. Meyer and help him celebrate the anniversary of his Palace Theatre.

This year it is the sixth birthday which Hamilton is helping Fred Meyer commemorate. Now, a theatre birthday may go unheralded and unsung. Or it may be an event heartily celebrated, depending on the standing of the theatre in its community, and the good will which the showman behind it has fostered.

One look at the 84-page Anniversary Edition of the Palace Monthly Magazine will convince you that all of Hamilton knows the theatre, likes the theatre, is proud of the theatre. There is hardly a merchant in town who is not represented in its advertising pages. Meyer is without question a real showman—a good will showman.

Without good will, a theatre is a block of real estate. With good will, it is a friendly institution.

Looking Them Over—With Gray Strider

Reviews from the Screen Angle of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

"The Great Gatsby"

SOMEBODY most surely ought to make F. Scott Fitzgerald's book "The Great Gatsby" into a picture. Owen Davis has worthily dramatized it and William A. Brady has magnificently produced it at the Ambassador Theatre. Of course this play has to be juggled around but it must be picturized for it is a stupendous drama, all the more gigantic because it is absolutely true to life.

The poor, ignorant, pathetic, slumgullion clamdigger of a boy raises himself from an abyss of poverty, ignorance, hopelessness, namelessness and misery to the great Gatsby, a financial robber Baron, with a palatial home on Long Island. He accomplishes it by sheer merit and bravado to make himself worthy of a little chit of a society girl from Louisville who isn't worth one of his least expensive collar buttons.

This girl marries another man while Gatsby is at the front. She hasn't the character to withstand the persuasions of her family. She is lower than the cheapest denizen of the streets. She doesn't know whom she loves—her husband or Gatsby. She has no stamina, no loyalty, no heart, no soul in her. She amuses herself at Gatsby's expense until he falls murdered at her feet—unable even in death to reach her—to touch her. And her husband—responsible for this crime—is the one to whom she turns and says: "Take me away. I don't want to be mixed up in this." Little coward, little sneak, little gutless animal!

One way to make this into a screen production is to have the husband justly shot and let Gatsby get the wife. This is unworthy of Mr. Fitzgerald's genius but since you can't permit a screen audience to accept an unhappy ending, what else is to be done?

James Rennie didn't act the part of Gatsby. He WAS Gatsby. To me he will always be Gatsby and if this drama is picturized the movie audiences of America should be permitted to see him as Gatsby since his performance cannot be surpassed.

The value of this play as screen material is unlimited. Because of the unanimously favorable publicity which both the book and the play have enjoyed, the picture would stand on its own feet and require no coddling or trick publicity schemes.

"The Jest"

Arthur Hopkins is reviving "The Jest" (translated from the Italian of Beuelli) at the Plymouth Theatre with a superb cast. It has already been made into an opera—last year in Milan and there is no other single drama that has such screen potentialities. But here I am—up against the same thing—an unhappy ending. Must this superb bit of Florentine love and lust, blood and harlotry be scrapped because of its murderous climax? Surely there is somebody with a brilliant, scenario imagination who can turn it into an acceptable picture.

Just imagine SPRING in Florence; two brothers in love with the same lovely wanton—Neri, the mighty captain, and Gabriello, his romantic young brother; a third lover, a painter, who plots a revenge indescribable in its cruelty and picturesqueness. Imagine a blind woman in a dungeon, pigmy-like in stature but colossal in vengeance, Neri had destroyed her youth and caused her blindness. Imagine this puny wreck with a gold hair pin in her hands—Neri's gift to her in her girlhood—creeping up the chest of this bound giant, reaching, groping to put out his eyes. The play is prolific with magnificent sequences. There is a comedy woman-in-waiting whose rough wit makes the sides break, a dolt of a doctor whose funny stupidity helps to break the strain of tragedy. There is in it everything—everything necessary to enthrall, terrify, and amuse a picture audience.

In production, in cast, in setting it is the finest drama I have ever seen. Alphonz Ethier as Neri and Maria Ouspenskaya as the blind ones, were flawless. Basil Sydney, Violet Heming, and my old favorite, Ferdinand Gottschalk, gave outstanding performances.

SURELY THERE IS SOMEBODY WITH A BRILLIANT, SCENARIO IMAGINATION WHO CAN TURN "THE JEST" INTO AN ACCEPTABLE PICTURE.

"The Great God Brown"

Eugene O'Neill's new tragedy "The Great God Brown" which is being presented at the Greenwich Village Theatre brings to the stage our old friend Peer Gynt, in the guise of Dion Anthony, a talented, sensitive, pitiful artist who fights his best friend from the cradle to the grave, both in the love of his life and in the work of his heart.

Mr. O'Neill has gone back to the Greeks and borrowed their use of the MASK. To reveal the character Anthony is forced to show his wife and the world in general he covers his face with a mask. But when he stands alone, his real self unmasked, unguarded from the hurts of the world, his wife doesn't know him, doesn't understand him, doesn't love him. It's only her own conception of him that she adores. So he creeps away to Cybel of the red kimona, of the tin-pan player piano, and to drink and forgetfulness. The mask has come to stay. O'Neill's revival of it is tremendously significant, but for it to be come really important for stage and screen it must be much better done than in Mr. O'Neill's somewhat heavy handling.

"Shanghai Gesture"

John Colton's colorful "Shanghai Gesture" which A. H. Woods is introducing at the Martin Beck Theatre is unfortunately not suited for the screen as it deals exclusively with the Shanghai underworld and features Mother Goddam, keeper of the world's largest brothel, and portrays to a fine degree white degeneracy of the worst phase.

"Don Q, Jr."

"Don Q. Jr." which is being produced at the 49th Street Theatre tries unsuccessfully to snitch a few stars from Douglas Fairbanks' crown. In it, William T. Tilden, of tennis fame, is quite unnecessarily cast. If you will go back to your childhood and drag out Horatio Alger's favorite plot of the poor but honest little newsboy who wins everybody's heart you have the whole idea. It's grand fodder for grammar school boys.

"The Love City"

Sessue Hayakawa in Hans Fackwitz' "The Love City" is superb.

This drama deals too extensively in harlots, opium, and plain talk to be entirely comfortable for the movies but it should be considered for the screen regardless. It is a deep thrilling tragedy that puzzles your mind, sickens your soul and repels your heart. But it fascinates, and fascinates, and fascinates!

"Shelter"

If Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer would like to find a remarkable vehicle for Lon Chaney say for about $9.98, all they have to do is to step down to the Cherry Lane Theatre and see "Shelter." Under one of the docks of the North River a hunchback has established a little kingdom. There he lives surrounded by five of the lowest types of humanity: a consumptive, a girl thief, a rabid female socialist, a drunkard, and a shell shocked soldier.

It's good old fashioned melodrama of the rarest order. And the girl's virtue is saved—just in the nick of time.

If you can keep from laughing for two hours, overlook the worst case of miscasting you have ever seen, when you get half-way home you will realize that with all its faults and amateurishness a clever scenario writer could bewitch this stupid "incident in three acts" into something worthwile.

"The Dream Play"

Strindberg's Dream Play which is being presented at the Provincetown Theatre is too frankly experimental to be of any use in Pictures.

The Distributor shall not in any wise be liable for any breach of the provisions of the immediately preceding paragraph contained in any other Standard Exhibition Contract with any other Exhibitor.

WARRANTY AS TO ADVERTISING.

Fifteenth: The Distributor warrants that the photoplays herein provided for will not contain any advertising matter for which compensation is received.

"Laugh Month" Committee Chairman Reports January Drive a Success

Showmen Who Exploited Their 'Shorts' Found Business Greatly Stimulated as Result of Pressure on the Public Through Various Advertising Mediums

By GORDON S. WHITE
Chairman, "Laugh Month" Committee

THE first "Laugh Month" is over and a review of the accomplishments of this campaign seems to be in order with a view to reaching a decision as to whether "Laugh Month" shall be continued as an annual celebration by our industry.

The main objects of the "Laugh Month" campaign as view by the National "Laugh Month" Committee made up of representatives of all the big national organizations handling short features were:

1.—To conduct a tremendous national publicity campaign which would bring forcefully to the attention of the public the importance of the comedy in motion picture entertainment.

2.—To encourage exhibitors through their local advertising, publicity and exploitation to harness the great weight of this national publicity for their own benefit, in this way bringing about a practical demonstration by the exhibitor himself of the real value of exploiting short features for greater profits to the theatre.

The question of extra bookings of short features was merely incidental and was given little attention by the "Laugh Month" Committee except as it endeavored to encourage occasional all short feature programs. In other words, the Committee sought to show exhibitors how much more could be done in profitable exploitation with the short features already booked in the usual course of business.

Of course, our reports from exhibitors and branch exchanges are by no means completes at this early date, but still we are enabled to see very clearly what the principal results of this big campaign have been.

As to the national publicity obtained for "Laugh Month," the fondest hopes of the Committee were far exceeded. The idea of a National "Laugh Month" proved to be a "natural." There are mighty few newspapers of any consequence in the country which have not carried mention of "Laugh Month," running all the way from one or two announcements to practically daily mention of the event. Magazines, too, joined the band wagon in large number. The radio has broadcast the message of Laugh Month to millions, while mayors, other municipal public officials and one governor ("M" Ferguson of Texas) have issued social proclamations inviting the citizens of their communities to start the year right with a month of laughter.

Results Squarely Up To the Exhibitor

From the standpoint of box-office results for the individual exhibitor, the results of "Laugh Month" have been up to the showman himself. This will always be the case in any great national campaign of this sort. The greatest national publicity still requires harnessing by the exhibitor before it will pull them in at the box-office. Where this harnessing process was carried out by the showman, the results have been such that these showmen without exception have reported such favorable business at the box-office that they desire the continuation of the "Laugh Month" plan as an annual event. For example, Roy Tillson, who won the first prize in the "Laugh Month" exploitation contest for the first week with his remarkable campaign at the Fuller Theatre, Kalamazoo, Michigan, reports: "Box-office pepped up at least twenty-five percent," and expresses the greatest enthusiasm over the "Laugh Month" idea.

F. V. Kennebeck, of the North Star Theatre, Omaha, the second prize winner for the same week, declares: "We have found that the business during this period has shown a good increase."

The numerous other entries in the contest, which are still coming in to the Laugh Month Committee, show that the large number of exhibitors in all parts of the country who have put on real live wire local campaigns to tie up the big "Laugh Month" publicity for the benefit of their own box-offices, have met with good success in every instance. There is not on record one single report of any exhibitor who has put forth efforts to boost "Laugh Month" for his own theatre who has expressed dissatisfaction with the results. In other words, the vote among exhibitors who have exerted their own efforts to profit by "Laugh Month" is unanimously in favor of the idea.

The Only Adverse Feature

The only adverse feature of the celebration of "Laugh Month" was simply this: that the exhibitors who used this great box-office weapon logically and to the limit were in the minority instead of the great majority of theatre owners and managers.

Several factors have entered into the cause of this situation and it is entirely reasonable to believe that in the "Laugh Month" campaign which will undoubtedly be conducted next season, this will be entirely changed. The "Laugh Month" campaign was begun with only a short period of time for preparation. Undoubtedly, the great majority of exhibitors had their January bookings pretty well set before they began to think about "Laugh Month." Where the comedy element on the January programs was completely overshadowed by heavy dramatic or even tragic subjects, the exhibitor as a general rule hesitated to talk about "Laugh Month" while knowing the bulk of his program was anything but laugh producing.

Many other exhibitors undoubtedly considered this "just another month" until, with the month of January already well under way, they began to see that instead of a routine sales "month," it was in reality a celebration backed up with a tremendous weight of publicity, which has probably never been equalled by any other national publicity drive. These exhibitors constitute the large number of doubting "Thomases" who have to be shown, and in this case by the time they were shown, it was pretty late for them to start their own local exploitation.

Next year many hundreds of these doubting "Thomases", having had the value of the "Laugh Month" drive so clearly demonstrated, will be waiting and watching for the "Laugh Month" celebration of 1927, and the exhibitor campaigns should be many times as numerous as they were this year.

It required several years to build up the Greater Movie Season idea to a comprehensive national campaign after its original beginning on the coast. It is the conviction of the "Laugh Month" Committee that one year and one campaign conducted more or less as an experiment will be sufficient to establish "Laugh Month" as a national celebration of such importance that the exhibitors, themselves, will demand its continuance and enlargement from year to year.

General Sales Manager of Pathe Starts on Another Business Tour

Harry Scott to Work Shoulder to Shoulder with Men In the Field; Will Visit Western District Embracing Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake, Portland and Other Points

HARRY SCOTT, general sales manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., who recently concluded a record-smashing business tour of fifteen exchange centers within the brief period of twenty days, left the Home Office in New York City on Sunday, February 7th, for another extensive trip of five weeks' duration to visit all the firm's Western branches and study at first hand the problems of the local exchange executives and exhibitors, in keeping with the established Pathe policy of exhibitor service. Frank Harris, Western District Manager of Pathe, is accompanying Mr. Scott on his tour of the West.

Although he is starting on a long and arduous trip, Mr. Scott evinced great enthusiasm for the undertaking, in talking to a representative of this paper. "So, that I may have a better understanding of latest developments and problems in the field, it was agreed that I should visit every branch office and work shoulder to shoulder with the men." He stated: "My recent trip was the first lap of my branch visitations. Now I am on the second lap."

"I believe that to function properly a sales executive must become familiar with conditions facing each of the managers in the branch offices. This can not be accomplished by sitting comfortably before a mahogany desk in the Home Offie. It requires actual trips to the field and close cooperation with the local branch managers. It is with this end in view that the several Pathe Sales Managers make frequent trips to the field to assist the local men in serving exhibitors with the particular brands of product within their jurisdiction. As General Sales Managerager of Pathe, I deem it my duty to also make excursions to the branches so that I mya have a comprehensive and sympathetic understanding of the problems facing the various Sales Managers, as well as the Branch Managers and the retailer of our product—the exhibitor.

"Pathe believe that exhibitor service extends far beyond the mere bookings of film and it was in furtherance of this cooperation that the Public Relations Department, under the direction of Miss Regge Doran, and the corps of Field Exploitation Men, under the supervision of S. Barret McCormick, were established. Both of these departments render practical service to the exhibitor with the active assistance of the Branch Managers throughout the country."

Mr. Scott's itinerary is as follows:
Butte, February 10th and 11th;
Seattle, February 13th and 14th;
Portland, February 15th and 16th;
San Francisco, February 18, 19 and 20th;
Los Angeles, February 21st and the rest of the week;
Salt Lkae City, March 1st and 2nd;
Denver, March 4th and 5th;
Omaha, March 7th.
He is expected to return to the Home Office on March 10th.

Cranfield and Clarke Increase Capitalization; To "Cover" World

To Produce Twelve Two-Reel Comedies; "Make Me Laugh"; Frank B. Rogers Assumes Chargeo f C.-C. Productions; Mr. Cranfield Will Open London Office in April

WITH an increase of capital up to $100,000.00, Cranfield Clarks, Inc., are broadening out in the short subject field, and strengtheing their position.

Cranfield & Clarke, Inc., have been known as the short subject specialists, and have to their credit a wonderful series, put out under the name of "Gems of the Screen," and a special, "Through Three Reigns," which was the runner-up for the Riesenfield Gold Medal for the best short subject of 1925. Then came their Holland Flower Show films, which caused such favorable comment throughout the trade.

The lineup of short subject for immediate release has not been quite completed, and a further announcement will be made later. The following are ready: The "Molly May" Series, twelve 2-reel comedies, featuring iolet Mersereau, produced by the well known song writer, Arthur J. Lamb, and directed by Joe Levering; 12 2-reel De Luxe dramas, inspired by World famous paintings, directed by Arthur Maude, and featuring the following well known stars: Margaret Morris, Gladdon James, Grace Carlisle, Richard Headrick, Donald MacDonald and Phillip de Lacy; Cranfield & Clarke's International 12, which are single reel interest pictures taken in all parts of the world, making a very fine group of "box-office" offerings.

Production commences next month of twelve 2-reel comedies under the title of "Make Me Laugh" comedies, also produced by Arthur J. Lamb.

The personnel of the Company remains as heretofore, with the addition of Rudolf Beyer as director, George F. Merrell, secretary and treasurer, and William Brotherhood, production manager.

Frank B. Rogers joined the company as manager of Distribution and a member of the executive committee, and will also act as vice-president to take effect on the completion of the company's reorganization. Mr. Rogers will be in charge of product.

The present offices will be retained for the time being, and Mr. Rogers will make his headquarters in Loew's State Bldg., 1540 Broadway, with J. J. Murphy.

An office will be opened in England, in April, the president of the company going to London for that purpose.

"Whoa Emma" with Trixie Has Many Horse Laughs

Horse laughs will abound in a new Jimmie Adams comedy "Whoa Emma," which is now being filmed on the Christie ranch forty miles north of Hollywood. The company has secured the services of Trixie the trained horse that sit down, shakes "hands," laughs heartily and cuts up other didoes for the benefit of the movie camera.

"Whoa Emma" will come in right on the heels of a Christie Comedy which features another remarkable animal. This is the comedy "Run Tin Can" in which a wonderful police dog is featured with Neal Burns and Vera Steadman. Tin Can does about everything that a performing dog can be expected to do, saves a little puppy from drowning, leaps into haymow doors from the barnyard, leaps over flivvers or big cars, it's all the same to Tin Can.

Reviews of Little Pictures with a Big Punch

"Buried Treasure"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

ANOTHER "Our Gang" comedy is always good news to the fans and exhibitors. This time, Hal Roach's little rascals start on a treasure hunt in a strange craft that certainly lives up to the descriptive subtitle "not as big as the Leviathan but more original." They land on a California island which is being used by a picture company in taking a cannibal treasure picture and there is great excitement when they find the cannibal village and finally the buried treasure. Then the picture people prepare to scare the kiddies but they turn the table by driving away the cannibals and fake animals with roman candles. As usual, little Farina contributes most of the laughs. The sequences of this clever little one with a chimpanzee is a scream and there are a lot of amusing situations and novel touches that will please audiences. The boat is certainly an ingenious creation and there is a lot of good fun and amusement in this offering.—C. S. Sewell.

"Run Tin Can"

(Educational-Comedy-Two Reels)

WHILE Neal Burns and Vera Steadman are featured in this Christie Comedy, a police dog whose name is a burlesque of that of a popular canine star, is really the center of interest and furnishes the title of the picture. This is a travesty on the rip-roaring type of melodrama. Neal is a boob who owns a supposedly worthless oil well which suddenly begins to flow. His rival, Eddie Baker, seeks to buy it for a song but Neal's sweetheart Vera outwits him. They begin a race to the tax office to prevent the sale of the well, with Eddie and his henchman using all kinds of villainy to prevent this. Here is where Run Tin Can figures. He aids Neal to escape and holds the villains at bay and Neal of course wins out. Neal has been given a lot of amusing gags, some of which, especially where he battles the villains with a post tied to his back are very amusing. The dog does a lot of clever and amusing stuff. The action is fast and funny and this two-reeler is a good attraction for the fans.—C. S. Sewell.

"Hair Cartoons"

(Red Seal-Cartoon-One Reel)

EVEN MORE clever and interest than usual is issue No. 4 of this series for Cartoonist Marcus by his familiar hair manipulation does not take conventional characters but likenesses of real persons and change them into others. W. H. Taft becomes General Joffre, Napoleon is changed to J. P. Morgan and Sessue Hayakawa to Nikolai Lenin, there is also a cartoon of La Follette. Probably the best one that Marcus has ever done is changing a nightingale into Galli Gurci. C. S. Sewell.

"The Big City"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

EDNA MARIAN scores very distinctly in this Century subject as a gawky country girl visiting the city. She empties her carpet bag in a cop's arms while searching for an address, falls off a bus and lands on a scooter which, gaining momentum down a hill, hurls her through a door and into the arms of her aunt. The aunt, a superior person, makes her the maid and instructs her not to touch the canary. The bird escapes and Edna wrecks the house in her earnest endeavors to capture it. This comedy moves swiftly at all times and contains a larger percentage of good laughs than most two-reelers. Miss Marion does good work with good material, and theatre patrons will enjoy her in this.—Sumner Smith.

"Egypt Today"

(Fox—Variety—707 Feet)

ALL that is left today of Egypt's former glory furnishes the material for this Fox Variety. Beautiful and massive ruins of temples, and tombs, the gigantic pyramids and the sphinx, built to please the vanity of former Pharaohs, the work of tens of thousands of slaves, and now only a mass of ruins abound in great profusion. Most impressive are the pyramids and that eternal riddle the sphinx and the enormous temple at Karnak. Among the subjects is the Valley of Kings in which was found King Tut's tomb.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Wicked City"

(Pathe-Cartoon-One Reel)

PAUL TERRY in this cartoon has the mouse taking his sweetheart to a cafe and being set upon by a villainous cat. Notwithstanding the difference in their sizes and the fact that the cat wears a magic cloak that enables him to go through openings in walls and sidewalks that mysteriously appear and disappear, the mouse trails him all over the city and finally gives him a good licking, rescuing his sweety. An imaginative and amusing offering.—C. S. Sewell.

"In the Air"

(F. O. B.-Comedy-Two Reels)

HERE is the very best of the series of F. B. O. comedies featuring Director Joe Rock's "Ton of Fun" comedians, Fat Karr, Kewpie Ross and Fatty Alexander. The correspondence school idea is amusingly burlesqued by showing this trio getting their diplomas as hobos and starting out to follow their chosen calling. They get in Dutch with a sheriff and make a hit with his pretty daughter. He chases them and they escape. Two of them disguise as a horse and chase around in a pasture with a real horse. This sequence is a scream and when the fake horse climbs over a fence and tries to scramble up a tree, it is a riot, one of the most spontaneously funny situations we have seen in a long time. Finally they are arrested and jailed, but they push the jail until it falls over a cliff and lands on real criminals, and they are greeted as heroes. The horse stuff alone is enough to put this comedy over with the majority of patrons. It will surely get the laughs.—C. S. Sewell.

"Sea Scamps"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

A KIND-HEARTED lady takes a bunch of mischievous kids from an orphanage for a day's outing on an excursion boat. This is the idea around which this Juvenile Comery is built and you can imagine the havoc and excitement that resulted. In the first place one of the kids, the clever little baby, Big Boy, gets left. The others run the chauffeur almost crazy. Arriving at the pier they get hold of a motor baggage truck which runs wild, upsetting everything and everybody. On board the boat they play with the compass and the steering apparatus and almost upset the boat, then a flying fish furnishes more excitement and finally they set off a suitcase of fireworks. There is plenty of action and humor and this subject should prove especially pleasing to the kiddies, but will amuse the grown-ups also.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Big Game"

(Universal-Comedy-Two Reels)

ANOTHER burlesque western comedy released under the Mustang brand, featuring Pee Wee Holmes and Ben Corbett, with the action involving the rivalry between the towns of Pipe Rock and Paradise. This time a basketball game played on horseback with the ball landing in all sorts of funny places and Ben making some boob plays furnishes the chance for the rival cowboys to give vent to their feelings. The ball is chased to a neighboring ranch and lands on a steer's horn, another time Pee Wee grabs the ball and a donkey sits down on him, finally he is thrown in the goal basket with the ball. There are quite a lot of laughs in this comedy and it is well up to the standard of this series.—C. S. Sewell.

Not So Much DANGER After All

Under the caption "DANGER" Danny says in Film Daily:

There is much hullabaloo and fuss these days. Over "presentations," special acts, "revues," etc., for motion picture houses. One first run house vies with the other. In trying to present a bill to aid in putting over the feature. One tries to outdo the other. Just where it will end is questionable.

Presentations, special features, all such trimmings are fine. But don't overlook this, please: that people who go to picture houses want to see pictures. That is why they go to such places.

And Arthur James writes in Motion Pictures Today:

Presentation, prologue, preliminary and all the rest of the names given to that which precedes the showing of the feature motion picture on the screen, has about reached the height of its foolishness. By example and by promotion the idea of a big show spread from Broadway to Chicago, from Chicago to the West Coast and then all over our motion picture theatre map.

. . . . It still is an important factor in—and only in—the largest houses. . . . .

The picture now, as always, is first and last the attraction. Short lengths, novel in character and with picturesque or comedy values, help tremendously, but they, also, are pictures.

But don't you think you are unduly worried, Danny; and you, too, Mr. James? You know that nothing can, that nothing will, ever take the place of pictures.

If the "presentation craze" were spreading to any extent into the second, third and subsequent run houses, Short Features would be the first pictures to show it through diminished bookings.

But RIGHT NOW one hundred new exhibitors every week are joining the thousands of showmen running Educational Pictures.

"THE SPICE OF THE PROGRAM"

Pathe Short Subject Manager Back from Exchange Tour

W. A. V. Mack Returns from Trip to Ten Exchange Centers and Reports "Shorts" Is No Longer Rated As Filler but as Important Part of Program

A two weeks' tour during which he visited exchange centers in ten cities has convinced W. A. V. Mack, Short Subject Sales Manager of Pathe, that at last the so-called "short" has stepped out of the filler and chaser class and is now considered by exhibitors in its true guise as an important unit of the theatre's screen program.

In conjunction with the recognition of the short feature subject as an entertainment asset, Mr. Mack noted greatly increased advertising on this part of the program. This he attributes to the excellent "missionary" work of the Pathe Field Exploitation Men and the complete advertising and exploitation aids provided in the press books furnished by Pathe on every two-reel comedy subject from the Hal Roach and Mack Sennett Studios.

When Editor Emanuel Cohen of Pathe News compiled the "Flashes of the Past" reel in honor of the Fifteenth Anniversary of the pioneer newsfilm little did he realize that this subject would figure in theatre anniversaries through the country. Numerous cases came to Mr. Mack's attention where exhibitors, in celebrating the tenth or fifteenth anniversary of their theatres, had booked "Flashes of the Past" as a fitting highlight of the program. Reviewing as it does the most dramatic and historical events of the past fifteen years, this Pathe News Special has an historical significance that lends dignity to any theatre screen. When the Mark Strand Theatre in Albany played "Flashes of the Past," the local press declared it the hit of the bill.

Mr. Mack found exhibitors very much interested in the "Famous Melody Series" of single reel subjects, which are wholesome little romances based upon the old folk and "Songs of Ireland" etc. The chance for complete musical accompaniment through the use of the special score prepared by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld appealed to the showmen.

"The Amundsen Polar Flight" continues as a timely attraction through the daily news reports of the forthcoming Detroit Polar Expedition appearing in the national press. Those who are reading about the new airplane flight to the pole are a ready-made audience for "The Amundsen Polar Flight" which depicts the official picture-log of the Amundsen-Ellsworth expedition.

Another short subject that is finding a ready market is the "A Pilgrimage to Palestine" series, showing in absorbing scenes the sacred spots in the Holy Lands as they are today. Even though all the rest of the world has progressed, Palestine seems to have remained practically the same since it was early in the Christian era. The new Pathe pictures serve to attract the "church element" and foster goodwill for the theatres screening them.

Mr. Mack left New York on January 15th and returned on January 29th. He visited Philadelphia, Albany, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Memphis, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta, Charlotte and Washington, holding sales conferences in each city with all the salesmen called in for the meetings.

JACKIE MORGAN

One of the most interesting "Kids" in motion pictures is this youngster, who plays "Chester Gump" with Joe Murphy and Fay Tincher in the Universal release, "The Gumps," a splendid comedy series.

Century Announces Four Comedy Pictures for February Release

Two-Reelers Starring Edna Marian, Al Alt and Eddie Gordon and a New Buster Brown Subject Are on Schedule; All Had Pre-release Try-Out

HE Stern Brothers announce a strong group of two-reel comedies for release through Universal exchanges during the month of February. All four have reecived pre-lease tryouts and have shown that they have great audience appeal and box-office value.

In the order of their release, they are "The Big City," starring Edna Marian; "Crowning the Count," featuring Eddie Gordon; "Accidents Can Happen," featuring Al Alt, and the new Buster Brown Production, "Buster's Nose Dive."

"Buster's Nose Dive," the outstanding picture of the group, is the sixth two-reeler of the popular Buster Brown series. It was directed by Gus Meins and rceently has a pre-release showing on Broadway, where it was exceptionally well received by the audience. It features Arthur Trimble as Buster, Doreen Turner as Mary Jane and Pete the dog, as Tige, in the latest escapade of Buster and his pals. It will be released February 24th.

"The Big City," marked for release February 3rd., is another of the popular Edna Marian comedies, in which she is seen as a comic country girl with big town aspirations. It was directed by Francis Corby and includes a rapid succession of funny situations and gags. Miss Marian, as the country flapper whose escapades as a big town vamp get her into one mix-up after another, does very good work in this characterization.

The February 10th release, "Crowning the Count" was directed by Jess Robbins, which is the surety for a good comedy. In this two-reeler, Eddie Gordon is supported by Larry Richardson. The most is made of Gordon's unique comedy flare and his acrobatic training. The story has to do with the showing up of a bogus count, played by Gordon. It is reported, by those exhibitors who have shown it, as a good audience picture.

The Stern Brothers release for February 17th, "Accidents Can Happen," is the latest Al Alt comedy. He is again seen supported by the fat comedian, Hilliard Karr, in a series of mishaps, the nature of which have made these two comedians popular with comedy-lovers. The comedy was directed by Charles Lamont, regarded as one of the aces in the two-reel field.

Earle Foxe in "Van Bibbers"

Earle Foxe is very happy these days as he is again portraying the role he likes so well. Once more Mr. Foxe is "Van Bibber" in the Fox Films' latest Van Bibber comedy, "The Reporter," fifteenth picture in this series. Production on the Van Bibber comedies was suspended for several months, in which time Mr. Foxe had an important role in "Wages for Wives," and then played the leading male role in the first Charles H. Hoyt comedy drama "A Trip to Chinatown." Lou Seiler is directing "The Reporter."

Roach on Way Home

Hal Roach, Pathe comedy producer, who started the vogue for casting well known feature players in the supporting casts of his Pathe comedies, left New York, Tuesday February 2, following a business trip of several weeks' duration in the East.

WHY

MOVING PICTURE WORLD DOES NOT CLAIM "14,000 CIRCULATION"

We thought the cave-man days of publishing were over.

Those good old days when a publisher got away with murder by having the advertiser accept some wild circulation figures he'd sucked out of his thumb——those days of loose, unfounded circulation claims that literally forced advertisers to create the AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULATIONS for their own protection.

But apparently not.

That ancient pastime of naming your own circulation still persists with papers that are weak.

Wild, unproven circulation claims and READER WEAKNESS are certainly the Siamese Twins of the publishing business.

The EASIEST thing to do in this motion picture trade paper business is to claim circulation figures.

The HARDEST thing to do is to have the AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULATIONS PROVE YOU HAVE THE HIGHEST NET PAID EXHIBITOR CIRCULATION.

If any paper in this field really had anything approaching 14,000 exhibitor circulation, it would also have corroborating A. B. C. Audit.

DON'T BE KIDDED.

Universal's 1926-27 Schedule to Be Known As "The Greater Movie List"

Entire Schedule of Universal Jewel Productions for the Coming Screen Year Made Public Upon Arrival of Carl Laemmle. Super Pictures, Reginald Denny Productions, Twenty-eight Jewels and Twenty-four Blue Streak Westerns Listed—To Be Marketed Under a Golden Rule Contract

WITH the return of Carl Laemmle to the United States, Universal announced its entire production schedule for 1926-1927—The Greater Movie List—an ambitious schedule of Jewels and special pictures which far transcends anything ever before atempted by Universal.

Besides the several super pictures being undertaken by the Universal forces, including such big screen projects as "The Flaming Frontier", "The Midnight Sun", "Uncle Tom's Cabin", "Gulliver's Travels", "Les Miserables" and similar-type pictures, Universal plans the release of five or six special Reginald Denny Productions, to be marketed separately, twenty-eight Universal Jewel pictures, twenty-four Blue Streak Westerns made with outstanding stars and casts as well as a splendid schedule of serials and short product.

The Universal 1926-1927 output will be known as "The Greater Movie List."

An unprecedented array of authors is included in the list of writers who have contributed to the material for the new Universal output. Among them are Edgar Franklin, Don Marquis, George Ogden, Dana Burnett, Gertrude Atherton, Johnstone McCulley, John Emerson and Anita Loos, James Oliver Curwood, Frank Spearman, Peggy Gaddis, Arthur Somers Roche, Andrew Soutar, Gabriel Reuter, Lucile Van Slyke, George Weston, John Taintor Foote, Nellie Revell, William Johnstone.

Universal has marshalled an unusually strong corps of directors to guide the destinies of its forthcoming product. On this list shine such names as William A. Seiter, Harry Pollard, Edward Sloman, Edward Laemmle, King Baggot, Edward Sedgwick, Lois Weber, Herbert Blache, James Spearing, Melville Brown, Lynn Reynold.

The stars, many of them long popular in Universal pictures, and others among the leading screen favorites of the day specially engaged for Universal pictures, number such photoplay idols as Reginald Denny, Laura LaPlante, Edward Everett Horton, Mary Philbin, Hoot Gibson, Pat O'Malley, Norman Kerry, House Peters, Viola Dana, Jack Daugherty, Kenneth Harlan, Jean Hersholt, Mae Busch, Francis X. Bushman.

As a new departure, pictures made by Reginald Denny will be marketed separately as Reginald Denny Productions. Five or six Denny productions will be released.

The twenty-eight Jewels scheduled for release between September 1, 1926 and August, 1927, will include four Laura LaPlante pictures, seven Hoot Gibson pictures, two with Mary Philbin, two with Norman Kerry, one with House Peters.

Universal will start off the new motion picture year with "Poker Faces," a Harry Pollard Production, adapted from a novel by that prince of farce comedy, Edgar Franklin. Edward Everett Horton and Laura LaPlante are co-starred in this picture, which already is nearing the final stages of completion at Universal City.

The next Universal release will be "The Old Soak," adapted by Edward Sloman from the universally liked Broadway play by Don Marquis, the noted columnist and author. This picture, which will be released September 12, is now being made with an exceptionally strong cast headed by Jean Hersholt. Included among the players are June Marlowe, George Lewis, William V. Mong, George Seigmann, Gertrude Astor, Lucy Beaumont, Zasu Pitts and Ada Gleason.

The next release, scheduled for September 26, will be a Hoot Gibson Production, entitled "The Texas Streak." This is a screen adaptation of the well-known George Ogden story, "Cow Jerry."

In October of this year, Universal will release two Jewel pictures, "The Star Maker" and "Perch of the Devil." "The Star Maker" is a screen adaptation of Dana Burnet's Saturday Evening Post story, "Technic" and will be made with Mary Philbin in the starring role, supported by Francis X. Bushman, Mildred Harris, Warner Oland and Grace Darmond. It will be a Lois Weber Production, and will mark her return to Universal.

"Perch of the Devil" will be a King Baggot Production, adapted from Gertrude Atherton's strikingly powerful novel of that name. It will be made with Mae Busch and Pat O'Malley in the featured roles, and with a cast including Jane Winton, Theodore Von Eltz, Anna Mae Wong, George Kawa, Mario Carillo, Lincoln Stedman, Gertrude Oakman and Martha Franklin.

In November, 1926, two more Universal Jewels will be released, "The Ice Flood," and the previously mentioned Hoot Gibson picture, "The Prairie King." "The Ice Flood" is from the Johnstone McCulley novel, "Crashing Timbers," and will be directed by James O. Spearing, noted scenarist and former movie critic of the New York Times. It will feature Viola Dana and Kenneth Harlan, with Henry B. Walthall, Billy Kent Schaefer, DeWitt Jennings and Fred Kohle.

December will see three Universal Jewels released. They will be "The Whole Town's Talking," "Prisoners of the Storm" and "The Big Night." The first, to be released December 5, will be an Edward Laemmle Production, from the play by John Emerson and Anita Loos. It will feature Edward Everett Horton, and the strong cast will include Virginia Lee Corbin, Otis Harlan, Trixie Friganza, Delores Del Rio, Margaret Quimby, Malcolm Waite, Hayden Stevenson and Robert Ober. It will be a screamingly funny comedy-drama with an elaborate society background.

"Prisoners of the Storm" to be released December 19, is a Lynn Reynolds Production, starring House Peters in a great romance of the snow country. It is being adapted from "The Quest of Joan," by James Oliver Curwood. It is rugged in character, with Curwood's dramatization of the wilds, and will be one of the most virile pictures offered next year.

"The Big Night," for release the day after Christmas, is based on the magazine story, "Doubling for Lora," by Peggy Gaddis. It will be a Laura LaPlante starring vehicle and will be directed by Melville Brown. Tully Marshall, Cissy Fitzgerald, Mack Swain of Sennet and Chaplin fame, Lee Moran, William Austin, Tom Ricketts and Einer Hanson will be in the cast. This is promised as an ideal LaPlante picture filled with sparkling humor and high comedy situations of the most entertaining kind.

In addition to the Gibson picture "The Buckaroo Kid," Universal's January (1927) releases will include the Universal Jewel, "The Runaway Express," a thrilling railroad drama, adapted from Frank Spearman's famous story, "The Nerve of Foley," and made as an Edward Sedgwick Production, with Jack Daugherty heading the cast. Others among the players in this special will be Blanche Mehaffy, Tom O'Brien, Charles French, Harry Todd, Madge Hunt, and William Steele.

Three Jewels for February, 1927

In February, 1927, Universal will release three Jewels, the Hoot Gibson picture, "Riding Like Fury," "The Mystery Club" and "Butterflies in the Rain." "The Mystery Club" will be a Herbert Blache Production based on the Arthur Somers Roche Saturday Evening Post story, "The Crimes of the Armchair Club."

An exceptionally strong cast will mark this thriller. Heading the players will be Matt Moore, Edith Roberts, Warner Oland, Mildred Harris, Charles Puffy, Earl Metcalf, Nat Carr, Charles Lane, Jed Prouty, Henry Herbert, Alfred Allen, Alphonse Martell, Frank Finch Smiles, Sidney Bracey, Monty Montague and Adrienne Dore.

"Butterflies in the Rain" will be a screen drama adapted from the internationally popular story of that name from the pen of Andrew Soutar, which has appeared serially in many newspapers in the United States and England.

UNIVERSAL

Does It Again!

In March there will be three more Universal Jewels, "Too Many Women," "Brides Will Be Brides," and "Taxi Taxi." "Too Many Women" is from the sensationally successful story by Gabriel Reuter and will be used as a starring vehicle for Norman Kerry, with May McAvoy, probably, in the co-featured role. "Brides Will Be Brides" is another Laura LaPlante picture, adapted from the widely known newspaper serial stories by Lucile Van Slyke. "Taxi Taxi" will be adapted from the popular Saturday Evening Post story from the pen of George Weston.

Another Mary Philbin Starring Production

The April list of Jewels will include, besides "A Hero on Horseback," the Gibson picture previously noted, two other pictures, "Another Woman's Life" and "Down the Stretch." The first is an anonymous story of great dramatic qualities which will be used as a starring vehicle for Mary Philbin. "Down the Stretch" will be a Jewel adaptation of John Taintor Foote's popular racing story, "Blister Jones."

The May Jewel list will include "Spangles," "Take It From Me" and the Gibson picture, "The Silent Rider." "Spangles" is a colorful circus story by the world-famed Nellie Revell, noted as a circus press agent, and now one of the most widely read columnists in the United States. This will be an Edward Sloman Production with a big special cast. "Take It From Me "will be based on the great musical comedy success of that name by William Johnstone, Sunday Editor of the New York World. The star and cast have not yet been selected.

In June, Universal will release the following Jewels: "A Savage in Silks," "The Love Thrill" and "The Big Gun." "A Savage in Silks" is by the widely known authoress, Winifred Eaton Reeve, now in an executive capacity in the Universal scenario department. It will be made as a Laura LaPlante picture.

"The Love Thrill" probably will be another Laura LaPlante picture. It will be adapted from the great automobile racing romance by Byron Morgan—the man who wrote "Sporting Youth" and "California Straight Ahead."

"The Big Gun" to Be Kerry Picture

"The Big Gun" will be a Norman Kerry picture, directed by Edward Sedgwick, from the Argosy-All Story magazine romantic thriller by Richard Barry.

The Hoot Gibson picture, "Ace High," set for July 11 release, marks the final Jewel in Universal's 1926-1927 Greater Movie List.

Universal's Greater Movie List also will include other Western pictures—twenty-four Blue Streak Western features, made with such popular cowboy stars as Jack Hoxie, Art Acord and Fred Humes. Each star will contribute six pictures to the year's output. The features will be released in the weeks in which Universal Jewel pictures are not scheduled.

In addition to the Greater Movie List, Universal's output for 1926-1927 will include six high-class short comedy series put out by the Stern Brothers, including the Buster Brown Comedies, the "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" Comedies, the "What Happened to Jane" Comedies are other series, an array of five Popular Author Serials, 104 issues of the International Newsreel, a series of weekly issues of short western dramas and other special short product.

Lichtman Enters Production Field; "Charley's Niece," First Picture

Universal to Release Initial Film; Knoles Will Direct With Well Known Cast; Work to Be Done at Tec-Art Studios With Producer Supervising

AL LICHTMAN, one of the best known executives of the film industry, has joined the ranks of producers and has announced plans for his newly organized company which will be known as Al Lichtman Productions.

As his initial offering, Mr. Lichtman will present a super-comedy entitled "Charley's Niece," on which shooting started Monday, February 8, at the Tec-Art Studio, New York City. Not only this first release, but all subsequent productions will be made in the east under Mr. Lichtman's personal supervision.

Mr. Lichtman has been prominent in the progress of the film business for more than fifteen years. He was at one time general manager of distribution for Famous Players, Lasky Corporation and more recently held the same post for Universal. He retired from that organization eighteen months ago following a breakdown but has now completely recovered his health and is back with an ambitious program of activity for the future.

"Charley's Niece" which is the opening attraction on this program will be released by Universal as the result of a distribution contract just consummated between Al Lichtman and Carl Laemmle.

A cast of distinguished players has been signed for the featured roles, Madge Kennedy will enact the feminine lead supported by Ethel Shannon, Little Billy, Creighton Hale, Flora Finch and David Butler. Harley Knoles, the author of the story, will also direct it.

Immediately following the completion of "Charley's Niece," Mr. Lichtman will make an elaborate screen version of "The Cherry Tree," featuring a well known cast headed by George Jessel. This young actor is a sensation success of the current theatrical season in the title role of "The Jazz Singer."

The office headquarters of Al Lichtman Productions are 1650 Broadway.

"Sea Beast" Opens in Seattle And Plays to Capacity Business

First Public Presentation of Big Warner Picture Outside of New York City; John Hamrick, Manager of Theatre, Says Picture Is Year's Greatest; Playing in Five Cities

RIGHT on top of the big success of "The Sea Beast" at the Warner Theatre in New York City, come clippings and messages from Seattle stating that the production opened at the Metropolitan in that city on January 30 at $2.00 top to capacity business and is repeating at every performance. The newspapers also gave the John Barrymore picture wonderful notices and predicted for it a big box office success wherever it plays.

This was the first public presentation of the big Warner special outside of New York City where it is now entering on its fifth week. It was also the only place outside of New York where it has played at $2.00 top, indicating that wherever the production plays at popular prices it should prove a turn-away performance.

Following the opening of the picture in Seattle, John Hamrick, manager of the Metropolitan, sent the following enthusiastic telegram to the Warners New York office:

"My dear Harry, Abe, Sam and Jack, and you, too, Sam Morris. My sincere congratulations and my hat is off to you for making one of the season's very greatest pictures in 'The Sea Beast.' John Barrymore lives and breathes his very soul into his character and never has anything on stage or screen surpassed his marvelous acting in 'The Sea Beast.'"

Five cities are now playing the attraction or will be playing it within the next week. It opened at the Rialto, Providence, last Saturday night; plays Miller's Figueroa, Los Angeles this week, also goes into the Orpheum, Chicago this week for a run and follows immediately into the St. Francis in San Francisco. With the exception of the Seattle engagement all of the others are at popular prices.

In other cities where the production has been screened privately it has been received with such acclaim that Warner's New York office has been flooded with telegrams of congratulations. It is freely predicted that "The Sea Beast" will be running for several years and will likely be one of those pictures that never die.

Completing "Men of Steel"

One more week should see the completion of filming on First National's big steel special, "Men of Steel," which was started November 2. Milton Sills wrote the story from a suggestion received from R. G. Kirk's short story, "United States Flavor," and has the starring role. George Archainbaud is directing and the production is being made under the supervision of Earl Hudson.

Fox Films Task Difficult in Casting Famous Stage Plays

Roles Created by Stage Stars Present Difficult Problem to Producer When Plans for Screen Production of Plays Are Made; Walsh Picking Cast for "What Price Glory"

WHO will be elected as the Music Master of the films? Suggestions are being invited from everyone throughout the country. Is there another man who can present on the screen the same fine characterization which David Warfield created for the stage? Those who saw this David Belasco play will never forget the role of the "Music Master," one of the most poignant, human, lovable characters that was ever given body and breath on the stage.

Into such a splendid part Warfield fused the simple human traits and ability of a natural actor, which resulted in his lasting fame. Now the officials of Fox Film Corporation are searching for an actor who will give the screen a portrayal equally fine and as humanly lovable.

Two other Belasco plays, "The Auctioneer" and "The Return of Peter Grimm" offer a similar problem to the picture producer.

In preparing "What Price Glory" for its screen transition, Raoul Walsh, chosen to direct the dramatic success, has come to New York from the coast to cast the players who will portray the three central characters around whom the turmoil seethes.

Another of the modern plays about which there has been much conjecture, concerning who will portray the film roles, is "The Cradle Snatchers."

The laugh provoking characters in "Is Zat So?" "Hap" Hurley, the fight manager, and "Chick" Cowan, pugilist, need more than a little attention to their casting.

Going a bit further back in the theatrical world, we come to Clyde Fitch's last play, "The City," which gained him a permanent niche in the dramatic hall of fame. The power of the play was greatly heightened by the excellence of the cast and to find players who will give a highly satisfactory screen interpretation is, in itself, a task of sizable proportions.

Those who remember the Fox production of A. S. M. Hutchinson's "If Winter Comes" will recall how unusually well Percy Marmont personified "Mark Sabre." The author of the book was greatly surprised at the fidelity of Marmont's characterization. In the screen presentation of Hutchinson's latest novel, "One Increasing Purpose," to be produced next season, there are three important characters—the brothers Paris; Sim, Andrew and Charles. To find the actors best fitted to exemplify the author's conception of these brothers will be one of the tasks of the director, Frank Borzage.

When Murnau, the German director who made "The Last Laugh," comes to America to direct "Down to Earth," the cast, yet to be chosen, will be announced.

ETHEL SHANNON
Who has just signed a long-term contract with Sam Sax to appear in Gotham Productions.

Ethel Shannon Signed To Big Contract By Sax

THE excellent work by Ethel Shannon in the latest Gotham Production "The Speed Limit" has won for this dainty bit of Titian haired femininity a long term contract with Gotham Productions.

Miss Shannon is en route to New York to fulfill a prior engagement to play opposite George Jessel in "The Cherry Tree" and upon completion of this engagement will return to California at once to start work on the new 1926-27 series of Gotham Productions to be produced by Mr. Sax.

In "The Speed Limit" Ethel Shannon had a light comedy role and it is the intention to give her something more for her next subject which will be probably in "The Golden Web," the E. Phillips Oppenheim story.

Dorothy Phillips Returning To Screen with M-G-M

Dorothy Phillips' comeback has been materially aided by the decision of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer company, to whom her services are contracted, to cast her in the leading feminine role in "Toto," opposite Lew Cody. "Toto" is a John M. Stahl production of the famous stage play by Achmed Abdullah.

This role marks the beginning of Miss Phillip's return to her former enviable position among screen stars, which she forsook by voluntary retirement on the death of her husband, the late director Allen Holubar.

"Toto" has been continuitized by Benjamin Glazer, and beside Miss Phillips and Cody, the cast, so far, includes Virginia Bradford, Carmel Myers, and Antonio D'Algy. Miss Phillips' role is that of "Claire," wife of "Toto," played by Mr. Cody.

F. B. O. Coast Studios Completing This Season's Films

F. B. O'S West Coast studios are rapidly bringing to completion the current season's schedule of Gold Bond specials, star features and short subjects. Three more Gold Bond specials remain to be made. Emory Johnson is shooting sea scenes for his big naval melodrama "The Non-Stop Flight," which dramatizes the dash of the U. S. Navy aviators across the Pacific to Hawaii last summer. The story is by his mother, Emilie Johnson.

"The Isle of Retribution," a novel by Edeson Marshall and "A Poor Girl's Romance" by Laura Jean Libbey also are scheduled to go into production in the early future.

Among the star features yet to be filmed for the current season's program are "Secret Orders," starring Evelyn Brent, and written by Martin Justice. F. Grubb Alexander and Enid Hibbard are at work on the continuity and Chet Withey will direct.

Tom Tyler, F. B. O.'s new Western star will start "The Arizona Streak," an original by F. A. E. Pine, for which Lanier Bartlett wrote the continuity.

Fred Thomson is shooting "Hands Across the Border," another Thomson special by Frank M. Clifton.

Bob Custer and Richard Talmadge also are at work on action features.

April will see the completion of this year's line-up of attractions, according to F. B. O. executives, and immediately thereafter actual shooting of next year's product will get under way.

Frank Lloyd Signed By Paramount to Long Term Contract

FRANK LLOYD, one of the foremost directors in the motion picture industry, has been signed to a long term contract by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, according to an announcement by Jesse L. Lasky.

"I am extremely happy," said Mr. Lasky in announcing the contract, "that Paramount has had the good fortune to obtain the services of Mr. Lloyd, whose capabilities in the handling of big productions have won for him the esteem of the entire industry."

Mr. Lloyd will join Paramount at the termination of his present contract. He has now in production his last picture under the terms of this agreement.

To Direct "The Rainmaker"

One of the choicest plums from Paramount's directorial tree dropped into the hands of Clarence Badger when B. P. Schulberg, associate producer, announced that Badger has been given the important assignment of directing "The Rainmaker."

"The Rainmaker" was adapted from Gerald Beaumont's story, "Heaven Bent," which ran serially in Red Book Magazine. The scenario was prepared by Louis Lighton and Hope Loring.

Paramount to Distribute English Production of "Nell Gwyn"

AMERICAN distribution of Herbert Wilcox's English production, "Nell Gwyn," starring Dorothy Gish, went to Paramount, after bids on the part of several companies, according to a joint statement by S. R. Kent and J. D. Williams.

The consummation of the contract followed the trial showing of the picture in regular theatres in three towns. The splendid audience reception accorded the picture in each case, so impressed representatives of several interested distributors, that Paramount lost no time in obtaining the American and Canadian rights to this English picture.

George T. Eaton, president of British National Pictures, Ltd., immediately cabled the important news to his company's London office, together with the following message to English producers: "British National Pictures, Ltd., assures British producers that the American public welcomes fine pictures and that the market is wide open to British productions of quality."

Officials of First National—which company holds the foreign rights to "Nell Gwyn"—and Producers Distributing Corporation expressed gratification that the competition for the American distribution was proof positive that American audiences and distributors are not only willing, but anxious to welcome fine pictures from overseas.

No arrangements were made for the distribution of the series of three Dorothy Gish productions to be directed by Herbert Wilcox for British National this year. J. D. Williams is confident that Miss Gish's fine performance—hailed by all critics as far excelling anything she has yet done—will enhance the box office value of her forthcoming vehicles as to make it undesirable to set a value on them at this time. It is understood that "Nell Gwyn" will be released next August as one of Paramount's fall group.

Commenting on the "Nell Gwyn" deal, Will H. Hays said yesterday:

"We want in America the very best pictures wherever they are made. Too, the American motion picture industry wants only from foreign countries that fair treatment which the merit of our pictures commands. It is splendid to have our good pictures in every country and it is splendid to have the good pictures of every country distributed here."

Marcus Returns to N. Y.

Lee Marcus, general sales manager of F. B. O. returned to New York after a whirlwind trip across the continent.

Mr. Marcus covered the six Coast offices of the company, including Los Angeles, San Francisco, Denver, Portland, Salt Lake and Seatle as well as Minneapolis and Chicago.

Adamae Vaughn Signs

Adamae Vaughn, the lovely blonde sister of the piquant Alberta, has signed a long term contract with F. B. O. and will be featured in full length productions. Adamae, who is two years older than Alberta, is a veteran of 21.

"Born to Battle" Completed

Tom Tyler has completed "Born to Battle" for F. B. O. under the direction of Bob De Lacey. The story, by William E. Wing, treats of the cowboy character in an original manner and is said to get away to a great extent from the stereotyped Western story. Tyler will shortly begin "The Arizona Streak" for F. B. O.

To Direct Negri Picture

Malcolm St. Clair, one of the most successful young directors in motion pictures, has returned to Los Angeles from New York to direct Pola Negri's next Paramount starring vehicle.

First National Sales Drive Is Won by Oklahoma City

Oklahoma Jumped into Lead at Beginning and Held It Safely Until Close; New Jersey and Washington Gained Second and Third Places; Big Returns from All Districts

AFTER the most spirited sales drive in the history of First National Pictures, extending over a period of eleven weeks, terminating January 30th, Oklahoma City was declared a winner, according to figures just compiled and made public by the sales cabinet of that company. New Jersey and Washington, with only the fraction of a point separating them, gained second and third places. When the contest was first announced, it was estimated that $8,000 would be sufficient to cover the prize awards, but when the smoke cleared away, Comptroller Boothby found that nine ambitious branches had tapped the well-known till for a total of $12,705.

Oklahoma City jumped into the lead the opening week of the drive and up to the close held first place by a safe margin, leaving the other branches to battle it out for second and third positions. Here, right up to the closing day it was a toss-up between New Jersey and Washington with Dallas close on their heels. Had the contest lasted another week, Charlotte might well have been a strong contender for third prize money. During the last seven days of action, the North Carolina forces jumped ahead of San Francisco and Atlanta and ended four points behind Dallas.

E. D. Brewer, manager of the Oklahoma City Exchange, will receive $700, J. C. Vergesslich, manager of the New Jersey Exchange $500 and Robert Smeltzer, manager of the Washington Exchange $350. Other awards will be divided as follows: Assistant Manager of Record, first branch $400, second $300, third $200; each salesman, first branch $300, second $200, third $150; head booker first branch $250, second $175, third $125; head cashier or bookkeeper, first branch $200, second $150, third $100. Other employees in the first branch will receive a sum equal to three weeks' salary, second branch a sum equal to two weeks' salary and the third branch a sum equal to one week's salary.

In addition to the three winners, six other branches came in for a share of the profits because they exceeded their quota. They are Dallas, Leslie Wilkes, manager; Charlotte, F. P. Bryan, manager; San Francisco, Charles H. Muehlman, manager; Detroit, F N. North, manager; Atlanta, C. R. Beacham, manager and Boston, Thomas B. Spry, manager. In each of these exchanges, one week's salary will be given to the manager and to the members of the staff.

While conspicuously fine showings were made by the exchanges leading at the end of the drive, the final figures show an unusually well balanced performance in all parts of the country. Some territories were shown to be particularly strong but none were weak in the handling of the Winner Group which exhibitors have declared to be the strongest line-up of pictures ever offered by First National.

Samuel Spring, secretary-treasurer of First National, Ned Marin, Western Sales Manager, Ned E. Depinet, Southern Sales Manager and A. W. Smith, Jr., Eastern Sales Manager, extended their congratulations to the entire sales force on the wonderful showing made through the weeks of the drive.

Syd Chaplin Denies Rumor

Denial by Syd Chaplin that he had any intention of leaving Warner Bros. was made this week following a story printed in a daily paper that the star was about to quit the Warner studio and head his own production company.

The story stated pointedly that Chaplin after finishing his third picture for the Warners would form his own organization and release his future comedies through United Artists.

Wallace Beery Signs New Contract with Paramount

WALLACE BEERY has signed a new two years contract with Paramount. Announcement was made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of Famous Players Lasky Corporation in charge of production.

An announcement was made at the same time by Hector Turnbull and B. P. Schulberg, Mr. Lasky's associate producers in Hollywood, that Beery had been cast for three outstanding roles of the year. One is in "Old Ironsides," James Cruze's production, dealing with the most glorious chapter in the history of the American Navy. Probably an even greater role will be that of the picturesque and beloved showman, P. T. Barnum in "The Greatest Show on Earth," which Paramount will produce after the completion of "Old Ironsides." Beery is at the present time preparing for a great role in "Beau Geste," P. C. Wren's powerful story of the French Foreign Legion in Algeria, which Herbert Brenon has gone West especially to direct.

Benjamin Glazer Signed by M-G-M

Benjamin Glazer, the noted continuity writer, has signed a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to collaborate with Irving G. Thalberg on a continuity for the forthcoming production of Robert W. Service's "Trail of 98," announces Louis B. Mayer, vice president in charge of production at the M-G-M studios.

REX INGRAM
Director of "Mare Nostrum."

Ingram to Start Work On "The Magician" February 15

REX INGRAM will start the filming of "The Magician," his newest picture for Metro-Goldwyn on Monday, February 15th. On this same day his production of "Mare Nostrum" (Our Sea) will have its premier presentation at the Criterion Theatre.

As in the case of "Mare Nostrum" this new Ingram picture will be produced abroad. The interiors will be made at the Ingram studio at Nice, France, and the exteriors call for locations in Switzerland, England, Germany and northern France.

Alice Terry and Paul Waegner will head the notable cast Ingram has assembled for "The Magician." They will be supported by a number of leading Continental actors and actresses. Waegner is one of the foremost actors of Europe and will be remembered in America for his performance in "The Golem."

Miss Terry is in Paris at the present time having her gowns and costumes designed by leading dressmakers of the French capitol. Waegner is already in Nice and will appear in the early scenes of the Somerset Maughan story.

Elaborate preparations have been made by Metro-Goldwyn for the presentation of "Mare Nostrum" at the Criterion. A great interest in this new Ingram picture has been shown in the trade and practically all the stars and executives of the industry will attend the first showing.

Virginia Morris with Lichtman

Virginia Morris has resigned from the publicity department of Fox Films to become director of publicity for Al Lichtman Productions, 1650 Broadway, New York City.

Irving G. Thalberg, associate studio executive for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; King Vidor, the director, and John Gilbert, the star, who were closely associated in the making of "The Big Parade" and Lillian Gish's forthcoming production of "La Boheme."

Thalberg Arrives in East for Conference with M-G-M Officials

Producer States Plans for Fifteen Big Specials Being Perfected; Director King Vidor and John Gilbert, M-G-M Star, Accompany Him; All Will Stay in New York City for Several Weeks

THE Twentieth Century on Friday, February 5, brought Irving G. Thalberg, associate studio executive for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; King Vidor, director of "The Big Parade" and "La Boheme," and John Gilbert, the M-G-M star, to New York for a stay of a few weeks. Thalberg comes East for conferences with Marcus Loew, Nicholas M. Schenck and other M-G-M officials, relative to the most pretentious production schedule ever planned for any one studio.

He stated on his arrival that plans are being perfected for the production of no less than fifteen specials, pictures of the same great popular appeal as "The Big Parade," "The Merry Widow" and "Ben Hur." This is far in excess of any list of specials Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; have ever put into production. It is one of the most important announcements made to the trade in many months and means that M-G-M will continue to do big things.

Seated in his room at the Ambassador, Irving G. Thalberg appears little more than a boy but in talking with him one easily understands why his career has been so spectacular and why he has been the producer of such excellent pictures. He has a personality that at once commands attention with a keen insight into human nature and a faculty for bringing out the best in every one with whom he comes in contact.

It was Thalberg who first saw the great possibilities in "The Big Parade" and he worked with King Vidor, the director, Laurence Stallings, the author and John Gilbert, the star, like a Trojan until the picture developed into a most sensational hit. He can take credit for developing Norma Shearer into the popular star she is to-day and the same applies to John Gilbert.

King Vidor has but recently completed "La Boheme," one of the M-G-M Thalberg units, with Lillian Gish and John Gilbert which is soon to have its world premiere at the Embassy theatre, following the sensational run of "The Merry Widow" at that house. Messrs. Thalberg, Vidor and Gilbert will remain in the East for the premiere.

Metropolitan Completes Three Pictures; No Lull at Studios

"Paris at Midnight," Whispering Smith" and "Forbidden Waters" Are the Productions Finished; New Features Already Under Way or in Preparation Assure Continued Activity

ALTHOUGH actual production on three Metropolitan Productions was completed this week, preparations for future pictures have been going along at such a rapid pace that there will be no lull in activity at this prominent Hollywood film plant.

"Paris at Midnight," the Frances Marion adaptation of Balzac's "Pere Goriot" was brought to a spectacular conclusion with a colorful reproduction of one of the famous Parisian Beaux Arts balls. Jetta Goudal, Lionel Barrymore, Mary Brian, Edmund Burns and Emile Chautard portray the leading roles in this Metropolitan feature, with E. Mason Hopper directing.

An equally spectacular finish, although of an entirely different nature, was the concluding scene of "Whispering Smith," which George Melford is directing from the well-known Frank H. Spearman novel. This sequence pictured the burning of a freight train as the aftermath of a daring train robbery. H. B. Warner, Lillian Rich, John Bowers and Lilyan Tashman portray the principal roles in "Whispering Smith."

Final scenes of "Forbidden Waters," Priscilla Dean's second Metropolitan subject, transpired at a duck club at Cuyamaca Lake, a settnig as unusual as the story of this bright comedy-drama of a divorcee and her husband's love affairs. Walter McGrail, Dan Mason De Sacia Mooers and Casson Ferguson surround Miss Dean in "Forbidden Waters," and Alan Hale is credited with the direction.

Among the new pictures which will be put into production immediately, are "Shipwrecked," in which Seena Owen and Joseph Schildkraut are starred, a new Priscilla Dean feature, Marie Prevost's first Metropolitan film, and "The Last Frontier," the western epic which Thomas H. Ince conceived and which Metropolitan will produce.

Hanson With Lillian Gish

Irving G. Thalberg announced late last week that Lars Hanson, the Swedish actor brought to this country by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, will play the role of Reverend Dimmesdale, opposite Lillian Gish, in Vincent Seastrom's production of "The Scarlet Letter," by Nathaniel Hawthorne. Karl Dane, famous for his characterization in "The Big Parade," will be seen as Giles. Mary Hawes has been cast as Patience and William H. Tooker as the Puritan Governor.

"U" Scenarists Start Work As Directors

Two prominent scenario writers made their bow as feature directors at Universal City this week.

Melville Brown, prominent writer of screen farces and comedies, stepped into the ranks of the megaphone cowboys with "The Big Night" as his story. Laura La-Plante is starring in the picture with Einar Hanson, Zasu Pitts, Tully Marshall, Cissy Fitzgerald, Waletr McGrail and others in the supporting cast.

James O. Spearing, for the last three years a screen writer, and before that a New York Times dramatic critic, started his directorial career by starting on a location trip to Klamath Falls, Oregon, where he is filming exteriors for "The Ice Flood." Viola Dana and Kenneth Harlan are the featured members of the cast, with Henry B. Walthall in a prominent supporting role.

Wyler Directing Acord

Willy Wyler who has just been promoted to a full directorship at Universal, will direct Art Acord in "Lazy Lightning," as his first feature length photoplay.

Wyler directed a number of two-reel Western on Universal last year program and has been selected for promotion by Isadore Bernstein, supervisor of Westerns.

In the cast of the picture which starts this week, will be Fay Wray, Bobby Gordon, Arthur Morrison, George French, Rex Roselli and Vin Moore.

"Irene" Will Be Given Great Send-Off Through Radio Contest

First National Production Starring Colleen Moore to Be Exploited Via Radio on February 18; Present Successful Experiment with Air Prompted Exploitation Stunt for "Irene"

ONE of the most far reaching exploitation stunts ever put over in behalf of a motion picture is that which has just been launched for "Irene," John McCormick's special production starring Colleen Moore which First National will release shortly. The stunt introduces for the first time, the radio in its fullest pulling power and is calculated to draw listeners throughout the entire United States, into the theatres to see "Irene."' Station WJZ of the Radio Corporation of America, New York City, and its subsidiary, Station WRC, of Washington, D. C., are the media whereby this will be done.

For the past several weeks, First National has been broadcasting dramatized highlights of its productions over these two stations on each Thursday evening at 8:30; that is, the radio version of the picture that was to be released the following Sunday—not a complete drama, but just enough of it to lure the radio fans into the theatre to get the rest of it. The experiment has proven a huge success as is testified by several thousand letters from listeners in all over the country begging for more.

Upon its success the exploitation stunt for "Irene" was based. This picture will be "radioized" on February 18th and will be released for theatre exhibition February 21st.

A week ago WJZ and WRC submitted to their listeners in the following question propounded by Colleen Moore:-

"Do Clothes Make the Girl?"

The announces supplemented the question with others tending to explain the original. Do clothes help the girl in her business life? Do they make a better position in life for her? Do they benefit her in marriage prospects?

He went on to explain to the radio fans that in the photoplay "Irene," is shown one of the most gorgeous fashion shows ever put on the screen and through the medium of the beautiful costumes she wore, Colleen, in the title role, stepped from the lowly position of a milliner's messenger into the heart and home of a young millionaire. In other words, clothes had quite a bit to do in the making of the future of "Irene."

Prizes to the value of $2,250 were oqered by Miss Moore for the best 300 word answer to her question "Do Clothes Make the Girl!" The elaborate toilet set, heavily inlaid and couched in a beautifully carved, wooden case which she used in "Irene," is offered as the major prize. Jewelers have valued it at $1,250. Other prizes offered are:

Second prize—$500.
Third prize—$250.
Fourth prize—$100.
And fifteen minor prizes of $10 each.

The only stipulations of the contest are that the answers be limited to 300 words and that they be sent to Colleen Moore in care of Station WJZ, New York and received there before midnight of Februray 28th.

Following the initial announcement of the contest, Stations WJZ and WRC broadcast a committee of prominent persons as the ones who will judge the answers and nominate the prize winners. This list includes, Mrs. Oliver Harriman, New York society and civic leader and president of the Camp Fire Girls of America; Mayor James J. Walker of New York, tentative; Miss Neysa McMein, noted magazine cover illustrator; Hewitt H. Howland, editor of Century Magazine; and Miss Mary Nash, dramatic star and fashion designer. Further broadcasts of the contest followed and the entire detail of it will be repeated with the broadcast of "Irene."

Already thousands of answers have been received from all points of the United States—New Orleans, Denver, Chicago, Portland, (Maine) Philadelphia, New York, Miami, and communities between. The radio officials are preparing to handle at least 50,000 answers before the conclusion of the time limit fixed.

If 50,000 radio fans join actively in the "Irene" contest, the figure estimated conservatively, then at least 5,000,000 will have heard of it and will be interested in its outcome and in the picture to follow. This estimate is on the proven assumption that to every person who takes the trouble to write in, there are at least one hundred others who will hear of the stunt either over the radio, or by word-of-mouth advertising.

Christie Buys "Up in Mabel's Room"

THE screen rights to "Up in Mabel's Room," the combined work of Wilson Collison and Otto Harbach, among the most prolific and successful writers of stage comedies and musical show librettos, were secured by Al. Christie this week, for production on an exceptionally lavish scale, with Marie Prevost in the role made famous on the stage by Hazel Dawn.

"Up in Mabel's Room" is recorded in theatrical history as one of the greatest farce hits of the decade. As an A. H. Woods stage production featuring Hazel Dawn and an all star cast. it was given its premiere in January, 1915, at the Eltinge Theatre in New York City, where is created a furore and, after a long run on Broadway it repeated its triumph in Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles and practically every American City of the first class.

Associated Exhibitors Sign Bill Cody for Western Unit

THE first masuline star signed by P. A. Powers for his new Associated Studios in Los Angeles is Bill Cody, the young Western player who in the past few months has been forging rapidly forward in the realm of outdoor drama. Negotiations were completed recently between Powers and Bert D. Carber, whereby Carber is to produce a series of western features for release through Associated Exhibitors with Cody as the star.

Cody made his theatrical bow as a member of a middle western stock company. This was followed by a vaudeville tour. Following this he turned his attention to motion pictures, and, having the requisite nerve and other requirements for that hazardous occupation, became a stunt-man, doubling for many of the screen's leading male stars.

His success in pictures was instantaneous and he was soon engaged to star in a series of independent pictures. This engagement completed, he was signed up by Carber and the releasing arrangements with Associated Exhibitors followed.

Frank Beresford has been engaged by Carber to do the continuities for the Cody series as well as to write the original stories. No expense is to be spared by Carber to make each picture an example of perfection in outdoor drama.

"Sea Beast" Breaks House Record

Following the opening of "The Sea Beast" at the Rialto, Providence, R. I., last Saturday night in what is described as the worst storm that has struck the city in years, the following telegram was received at Warner Bros.' New York office—"Sea Beast opened Rialto today breaking all house records. Street cars and automobiles held up by biggest storm in five years."

Anniversary Will See Completion of Full De Mille List

THE approach of Cecil B. De Mille's first anniversary as an independent producer finds the De Mille Studio humming with the activity of filming three pictures—the last of the twelve scheduled for the first year of production.

Two of the nine already completed have been personally directed by De Mille, "The Road to Yesterday," and "The Volga Boatman," the latter not yet released. At present Leatrice Joy is starring in her fourth De Mille feature, "Eve's Leaves," a picture with China for a setting which Paul Sloane is directing. Rod La Rocque is likewise in "Bachelor Brides," William K. Howard directing, while Rupert Julian is engaged in the production of "Silence," Max Marcin's great play of the underworld, with H. B. Warner featured.

That he could completely organize a new studio, obtain established players and competent associates, and turn out twelve pictures within twelve months, is a tribute to the capability of De Mille.

No announcement has been made concerning the production schedule of the De Mille Studio for the ensuing year, but it is understood that an even more ambitious program is to be launched, including double the number of pictures, with one great Cecil B. De Mille personally directed feature.

Paramount Completes Cast of "Blind Goddess"

With the signing of two additional players, the cast for Victor Fleming's Paramount production, "The Blind Goddess," has been completed, according to an announcement by B. P. Schulberg, associate Paramount producer.

The principal featured players are Jack Holt, Esther Ralston, Ernest Torrence and Louise Dresser. The supporting cast includes such names as Ward Crane, Richard Tucker, Louis Payne, Charles Lane and Charley Clary.

Studio officials are planning "The Blind Goddess" as one of the most dramatically spectacular productions of the year.

The story of "The Blind Goddess" is from the famous novel of the same name by Arthur Train. It was scenarized for Paramount by Hope Loring and Louis D. Lighton.

"Three Faces East" Is Given Brilliant New York Premiere

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld Stages Big Presentation at Plaza Hotel Under Auspices of Film Mutual Benefit Bureau; Prizes Awarded for Best Impersonations of Screen Stars

"THREE FACES EAST" is a great picture;—Such is the proclamation of fastidious ultra-fashionable, New York society and the critical, technical, and commercial opinion of the critics, film executives, circuit managers and foremost exhibitors of New York City.

This united and unanimous stamp of approval was placed upon the production at its premiere presentation under the direction of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld at the motion picture carnival in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Plaza in New York City, last Wednesday evening (Feb. 3rd.) under the auspices of The Film Mutual Benefit Bureau.

The Film Mutual Benefit Bureau is sponsored by prominent society leaders, and its annual carnival is patronized by the elite of the metropolis. Each year the Bureau selects one of the outstanding productions of the current season as its main carnival attraction, and this year the choice fell upon the Cecil De Mille offering "Three Faces East."

The picture was projected at 9 p. m. to one of the most brilliant audiences ever assembled for a motion picture presentation. In the throng that filled the vast main floor and tier boxes and overflowed into the corridors of the hotel, were personages of exceptional prominence in social, financial and industrial spheres; stars and directors from the stage and screen, authors, critics, film executives and exhibitors of the highest standing in the industry.

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld staged the production in a personally arranged and conducted musical setting that proved a perfect accompaniment for the subtle dramatic modulations of the picture, and before the final scene had fully faded from the screen the audience expressed its approval in a spontaneous roar of tumultuous applause.

The work of Jetta Goudal, Clive Brook and Henry B. Walthall was accorded the highest praise and Rupert Julian was commended in no uncertain terms, both for his masterful impersonation of the Kaiser and his superb direction of the production.

Following the screening twenty-six society debutantes appeared in a series of individual impersonations of screen stars.

Prizes were awarded for the three best impersonations and again Producers Distributing Corporation carried off the honors when the first prize was awarded to Miss Jane Kirkland impersonating Jetta Goudal in "Three Faces East" and the second prize was carried off by Miss Nancy Glave impersonating Syd Chaplin in "Charley's Aunt."

Practically every big circuit was represented at the showing. In the audience was noted: Harold B. Franklin of Famous Players, Arthur Whyte of United Booking Offices, Al. Suchman, Julius Joelson, Jack Hattam, Joseph Quitner, John Bennis, Bernard Grobe, Jack Springer and Joe Seider, among bookers and managers from practically every big theatre in New York.

"Roxy" Signs for Fox News

WITH the beautiful new Roxy Theatre rapidly nearing completion, S. L. "Roxy" Rothafel, its managing director, recently signed a contract for Fox News. The contract was signed in Mr. Rothafel's office before a notable audience of film folks. James R. Grainger, general sales manager; Fred C. Quimby, short subject sales manager, and Truman Talley, managing director of Fox News, represented Fox Film Corporation at the ceremonies.

The acquisition of Fox News constitutes the only official announcement to be made thus far by Mr. Rothafel concerning the motion picture portion of his program.

Mr. Rothafel, following the blotting of the signatures, said: "My act in making Fox News the object of the first motion picture contract for the Roxy Theatre is my tribute to the value of motion picture news reels in the making up of a motion picture theatre's program. The importance of the news reel in a program is not exceeded by any other unit, with no exceptions. Imagine, if you can, a motion picture program without a news reel. It cannot be done."

Get Set For M-G-M's March Duo; Soon Here and They'll Be "There!"

"Beverly of Graustark" with Marion Davies; "Monte Carlo" with Best Light Comedy Cast; Both Stand Up as Part of "The Quality 52"

BEVERLY OF GRAUSTARK," starring Marion Davies, and "Monte Carlo," with the best light comedy cast in years, are the two splendid productions that will be released by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer company in March.

These two features will be worthy successors to the brliliant bevy of pictures that the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer corporation have released since the beginning of the year, "Soul Mates," "Mike" (held over at the Capitol for a second week), "Dance Madness," "The Auction Block," "Ibanez' Torrent," "The Devil's Circus," "The Barrier" and the two great pictures released in legitimate theatres, "La Boheme," starring Lillian Gish and John Gilbert, and Rex Ingram's "Mare Nostrum," filmed in Europe with Alice Terry and Antonia Moreno in the leading roles.

"Beverly of Graustark" is a Cosmopolitan production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, directed by Sidney Franklin. It has been adapted from the George Barr McCutcheon novel by Agnes Christine Johnson, and is a tale of the mythical kingdom of Graustark which has been read by hundreds of thousands all over the country. Antonio Moreno plays the male lead opposite Miss Davies, and these two are supported by a fine cast of romantic types. In the cast are, Creighton Hale, Roy D'Arcy, Albert Gran, Max Barwyn, Paulette Duval and Charles Clary. Hundreds of extras are employed in the courtroom scenes which were shot in the technicolor process.

"Monte Carlo" was written for M-G-M by Carey Wilson, and is directed by Christy Cabanne. Lew Cody has the featured role of "Tony" for which his late triumphs as a comic actor make him especially suitable. Pretty Gertrude Olmsted plays the part of an American girl, "Sally," in this satirical comedy depicting the drolleries of Americans at the great European gambling capitol. Roy D'Arcy, Harry Myers, Karl Dane, Caesare Gravina, Trixie Friganza, Zasu Pitts, Andrey Lanoy, Arthur Hoyt, and Gene Borden make up the finest comedy cast that has ever been assembled.

These two features, done so excellently that they are sure to meet with approval from critics, public, and exhibitors, the previous releases of the year, as mentioned above, and the record established by M-G-M in having four great pictures playing in four legitimate houses on Broadway at the same time surely prove the truth of the slogan, "The Talk of the Industry."

The four legitimate houses playing M-G-M features are, the Embassy where "La Boheme" replaces the popular picture, "The Merry Widow," the Cohan Theatre where "Ben Hur" is doing an unprecedented business, the Astor where long lines form every afternoon and evening to see "The Big Parade," and the Criterion Theatre where "Mare Nostrum" will be shown.

Arrow is sending to the trade brightly colored plumes on which appears a tag with the wording "Feather Your Nest! 'In Borrowed Plumes' A Bird of a Comedy."

"THE RECKLESS LADY" pours tea—and Ben Lyon and James Kirkwood wait while Lois Moran does it—and First National distributes (the picture, not the tea).

Beauty Winner Gets Prominent Role In "U" Western

AN amazing rise from a Hollywood school girl to a leading lady, a change which took place almost overnight is the story of Barbara Kent, pretty Universal contract player who is to play the leading role in a Western feature, "Prowlers of the Night," with Fred Hume.

This picture is also featured by the fact that it is Hume's first feature length starring vehicle for Universal and Ernst Laemmle's first feature length directorial vehicle. Both men made a series of two-reel Westerns on Universal's recently completed 1925 program.

Miss Kent, whose name was changed from Cloutman for screen purposes, was the winner of the "Miss Hollywood" beauty contest in the preliminaries of the "Miss America" contest.

In "Prowlers of the Night" she will have her first screen experience—as leading lady.

Creighton Hale Signed to Long Contract by Associated

CREIGHTON HALE, one of the most popular and successful of free lance players, has signed a long term contract to star in the productions of Thomas L. Griffith, which are to be released through Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

Several producing organizations have sought the exclusive services of Creighton Hale, but after considering all angles and the possibilities afforded by an Associated Exhibitors release, this popular player decided to cast his fortunes with Griffith and Associated.

The Hale series is to be produced from original stories written expressly with the star's talents in view. The first is "Tardy Tolliver," an original story from the pen of J. Stewart Woodhouse. The story, a comedy-drama, is said to be exceptionally suited to Hale's talents, and should prove a most suitable vehicle with which to make his debut as an Associated Exhibitors' star.

Judy King, who is also under contract to Associated, is to play the leading feminine role in Hale's support.

Paula Gould Leaves F. B. O. Goes to Universal Corp.

Paula Gould, for the last four years general press representative for F. B. O. in the east, has resigned, to join the publicity department of Universal. Miss Gould will assist Nat Rothstein on 'The Flaming Frontier" campaign, and will, at its conclusion, be assigned to special work in the publicity department.

Although Miss Gould is one of the youngest of the women publicists in the industry, she made an enviable reputation for herself when two years ago she was placed in full charge of all F. B. O. trade paper publicity, in addition to fan magazines and newspaper work, and acquitted herself creditably.

Perfect Prints!

WHEN an exchange salts away an exhibitor's contract for so many pictures, does it consider its obligation to the public fulfilled by delivering any old kind of film?

Not Paramount! The exchanges of this organization have installed expensive equipment designed to deliver—and delivering!—flawless prints.

The story—told by the branch managers—can be found on page 747 of this issue.

Exhibitor Service Is Keynote of F. B. O. Sales Policies

General Sales Manager of Company Brings This Point Out in Talks to Exchange Managers; Showmen in Big and Small Cities Report Theatre Attendance Show Increase

SERVICE to the exhibitor has always been the keynote of all F. B. O. production and sales policies. This fact is being stressed by Lee Marcus, general sales manager of the company, wh ois on a tour of the exchanges for the express purpose of conferring personally with branch managers and important exhibitors in the localities visited, and to lay before them details of the company's plans.

Mr. Marcus is now on the return stretch of his whirlwind trip across the continent. He wires that meetings of branch managers and exhibitors were held in Denver and Salt Lake City, and that the keenest enthusiasm characterized these meetings. A spirit of extreme optimism pervaded.

Exhibitors reported that theatre attendances show a steady increase and that prosperity is general, in both the big cities and smaller towns.

In his talk with managers, salesmen and exhibitors, Mr. Marcus laid special emphasis on F. B. O.'s determined effort to give the exhibitor service, to produce and sell pictures possessing story, star and exploitation values. As an example of the product which F. B. O. is producing and distributing, Mr. Marcus outlined the subject scheduled for distribution during March. They are:

"The Non-Stop Flight," a dramatization of the navy's recent non-stop flight to Hawaii. Two of the five heroic birdmen who made the famous hop to Hawaii last summer in the historic attempt of the U. S. Navy to bridge the Pacific by air, will appear personally in the cast of Emory Johnson's latest production, which the young producer-director is now filming at San Diego. Skiles Ralph Rose, aviation pilot, and Otis G. Stantz, chief radio operator, will assume the precise roles in the Johnson melodrama that they actually took in the flight itself. The balance of the cast will be made up of well known players. The success of recent Johnson offerings, such as "In the Name of the Law," "The Third Alarm," "The Mailman," and others has made Johnson's name a power with which to be reckoned at the box office, as a consequence of which "The Non-Stop Flight" is being eagerly awaited by exhibitors.

"The Arizona Streak" a western action drama, starring Tom Tyler, F. B. O.'s "surprise" western star, is another subject scheduled for March distribution. This boy Tyler is proving a sensation in the theatres in which his pictures are being shown. He and his gang, consisting of Frankie Darro, a pony and the dog "Beans" are winning an enviable place in the hearts of all screen fans.

"Secret Orders" a melodrama starring Evelyn Brent, is also scheduled for March release. The cast is being selected, and announcement of the director and supporting company will be made shortly.

"The Night Patrol" a fast action comedy drama starring Richard Talmadge will be included among the March releases, Mary Carr, Rose Blossom, Josef Swickard and Grace Darmond are some of the well known thespians who will support Mr. Talmadge in his latest starring vehicle.

TAKING STEPS to get action—Pete Morrison, of course, in Universal's "Triple Action."

Two Pictures In Work At First National's Eastern Plant

TWO pictures in production and preparations for another under way tells the story of activities at First National's New York studios. "The Savage," with Ben Lyon and May McAvoy in the featured roles, and "Men of Steel," with Milton Sills starred, are the two pictures in production. Fred Newmeyer is directing "The Savage" and George Archainbaud the Steel picture, both of which are being made under the supervision of Earl Hudson.

A. L. Rockett is preparing to start "Puppets" with Sills in the stellar role about February 15. John Fish Goodrich is writing the script under Rockett's supervision. This will be Rockett's first picture for First National since his recent elevation to the position of a production supervisor.

Mitchell Joins Ginsberg

Henry Ginsberg and George E. Kahn, in keeping with their plans to expand the distribution activities of their newly-formed partnership in the Henry Ginsberg-George E. Kann Distribution Corporation, have engaged L. K. Mitchell as director of publicity and advertising, effective this week.

Mr. Mitchell has been engaged in motion picture publicity for the past six years, having had charge of trade journal publicity for Goldwyn Pictures and for First National. He has been general press representative for Winthrop Ames and for Guthrie McClintic, theatrical producers, and has been on the city staff of the Evening Journal and New York Globe, and dramatic editor of the New York World. He is the author of several books—"Bobby in Search of a Birthday," "The Circus Comes to Town," "Here, Tricks, Here!"—and has a new one, called "One Boy Too Many," coming from the presses of the Century Company in the fall.

Apply Inter-Conference System To De Mille Production Activity

Daily Department Head Gatherings Started; Destined to Keep Executives in Close Touch; Greater Production Efficiency Visualized

THE system of daily "department head conference," which has for some years, been a vital force in the largest commercial manufacturing corporations, is being given its first real trial in the motion picture industry at the Cecil DeMille Studio.

William Sistrom, General Manager of the DeMille and Metropolitan Studios, has established three regular daily meetings, which interlocked, bring every department head in intimate contact with every other department and minimizes the misunderstandings which often occur through abstract written memoranda.

The meetings consist of a technical conference, headed by Art Director Max Parker, a Departmental conference, headed by Business Manager George Volck, and an Executive conference, in which William Sistrom, George Volck, L. M. Goodstadt, and E. O. Gurney consolidate the information gained from the "departmental" and "technical" conferences.

The technical conference provides for the foremen of the Electrical, Carpentering, Trick Photography, and Painting Departments to report the progress upon the sets in work and armed with this information Mr. Parker reports to the main departmental conference where the technical facts regarding physical construction are matched with the latest information of the directors and the production editors.

The minutes of this conference are then taken up by the Executive Committee, which decides the major points of policy.

The three conferences described meet daily at a specified hour and William Sistrom, Studio General Manager, says that the system does away with hundreds of inter-departmental memos, eliminates the delays possible in the transmission of such memos, and does away with all possible misunderstandings between departments. "A conference system of this sort" says Mr. Sistrom "prevents executives in a large organization from losing the personal touch with each other, which is so important, in developing an efficient organization."

Present subjects of the De Mille Studio Conferences are the last three pictures of the twelve to be made by Mr. De Mille during the current season. These are Rupert Julian's production, "Silence," Leatrice Joy's, "Eve's Leaves," and the Rod La Rocque offering "Bachelor's Brides."

Two Big Theatres Open In Chicago with Fox Pictures

FOR the second time in less than one month a Fox production was chosen to open a new theatre in Chicago. The magnificent North Center Theatre, seating more than 3,000, was opened on Wednesday, February 3, with the Fox picture, "The First Year."

This production, directed by Frank Borzage and adapted from John Golden's stage hit, gave the house an excellent kick-off with the hilarious comedy provoked by its leading players, Matt Moore and Kathryn Perry. A first night crowd, won over by the many screaming laughs in the production, went away disseminating highly favorable word-of-mouth advertising—the cheapest and yet the most valuable in the showmanship world.

The North Center Theatre is operated by the Woodlawn Theatre Company, of which Andrew Karzas is the president. The new theatre compares favorably with any in the city, as to beauty and size.

The other new theatre, the Terminal, controlled by the Ascher Brothers, opened on January 9th with the Fox production "The Gilded Butterfly," starring Alma Reubens.

Bess Meredyth to Remain With Warner Bros.

With two big successes to her credit since she joined Warner Bros. organization and at work on what promises to be another production of equal importance, Bess Meredyth has been re-signed by the Warners and will remain a member of their producing staff for another year. Jack Warner announced that he had taken up the option on Miss Meredyth's services after she had been about one year with the organization.

When Farren Books Powers' Features Old Times Recalled

THAT old saying about "no sentiment in business" receives a violent setback every so often and the picture industry furnishes frequent example of sentiment being combined with good business judgment. A letter recently received Mr. P. A. Powers, head of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., from J. J. Farren, manager of the Rochester Theatre Company, indicates the power of "auld acquaintance" when combined with meritorious product and also recalls several interesting incidents in the early days of the now stupendous moving picture business. At the time referred to in the letter, Mr. Powers and many other now powerful factors in the industry, were just starting out on their careers and it is doubtful whether the present Associated head dreamed that before many years he would be guiding the destinies of a two million dollar organization.

The letter, addressed to Mr. Powers at the New York offices of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., was written from the Victoria Theatre, Rochester, on January 15, and will no doubt prove of interest to many exhibitors whose memory goes back to the events chronicled therein. The letter follows:

Dear friend Pat:

Your Buffalo representative, Mr. J. M. Sitterly was in my office today and I am sure after you see the list of pictures that I have booked for use at the Victoria Theatre, Rochester, you will agree with me that instead of the Victoria sign being in front of the house, it should be an ASSOCIATED sign.

The reason I am writing this letter is mostly to bring before you olden times, especially the incidont where I purchased the film you had, when you started the exchange in Rochester when Mr. Mock was the manager, and I was, at that time, connected with the old Bijou Theatre, which was under the management of Harry Davis. Another incident which I wish to recall to your mind is the time I put it over on you and Mr. Mock when I rented the Jesse James picture from you at a rental of $25 while all the time, I had such a film in my possession, using the two films in consecutive form in a house that seated but 224 people.

You will note that we have booked one of your features every week beginning with the week of January 17, 1926, right through to the last week in December, 1926.

With all good wishes and regards.

Very truly yours,

ROCHESTER THEATRE COMPANY,
J. J. Farren, Sec'y and Mgr.

Reginald Barker To Do "Flaming Forest" for M-G-M

Reginald Barker, one of the best directors of outdoor subjects, who was recently placed under contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, will direct an adaptation of James Oliver Curwood's popular novel, "The Flaming Forest" for that company. This was announced by Louis B. Mayer, vice-president of M-G-M, in charge of production at the studios.

The production of the novel, with a continuity by Waldemar Young, will be made by Hunt Stromberg as a Cosmopolitan Production.

Stills That Pack the Fox Punch

WHEN Fox Films started production on "Sandy," the serial story by Elenore Meherin which is being run in more than 100 newspapers throughout the United States, special thought was directed to the development of exploitation ideas which would give exhibitors the utmost results. In order that an advance newspaper publicity campaign could be planted nationally before the picture was started, it was necessary to have photographs of the big situations in the play.

To that end the director, Harry Beaumont, had the leading players in the cast pose the punch scenes of "Sandy" before a foot of film was cranked. He went over the script with them, planned the scenes as they would be done in the production, and then told the photographer to shoot the birdie. The scenes were posed by the principals—Madge Bellamy as Sandy, Leslie Fenton as Douglas Keith, deeply devoted to Sandy; Gloria Hope as Sandy's friend, Judith; Harrison Ford as Ramon, Sandy's madly jealous admirer; and Bardson Bard as Murillo.

Goldwyn Gets Rights To Big Wright Novel "Barbara Worth"

SAMUEL GOLDWYN announces that he has just purchased Harold Bell Wright's celebrated story, "The Winning of Barbara Worth" by special arrangement with Sol Lesser.

"Barbara Worth" was first published in novel form by Appleton in 1914 and republished by A. L. Burt in subsequent editions. To date over 2,800,000 books have been sold. The story is a romance dealing with the reclamation of the Southwest.

Samuel Goldwyn will produce "Barbara Worth" as the first of three productions which will comprise his contribution to the United Artists schedule for 1926. Henry King has been assigned to direct the production. Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky will be featured. Frances Marion will write the scenario. Production will start the beginning of April.

Sol Lesser in transferring title and interest of "Barbara Worth" to Samuel Goldwyn stated he did so to concentrate all his resources on exhibitor problems of the West Coast Theatres Inc.

Concurrent with the signing of "The Winning of Barbara Worth," Samuel Goldwyn further announced that his 1926 program will make the most ambitious production effort of his independent career. Only three pictures will be produced, all of which will be released by the United Artists corporation.

The first "Barbara Worth." The second the George Fitzmaurice production "Beauty and the Feast" which has been adapted by Frances Marion from the serial story by Kathleen Norris. Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky will again be seen in the leading roles.

The third production will be a filmization of "The Garden of Allah" to be produced in association with the Joseph Schenck organization. The latter will reimburse Norma Talmadge as star and the rights to the Sidney Hawkins celebrated novel, while Samuel Goldwyn will contribute Henry King to direct, Ronald Colman as featured star and Frances Marion's scenario.

Players Chosen for Next Laura Laplante Feature

With production scheduled to begin this week, Melville Brown has hired the cast of "The Big Noise," his first directorial venture for Universal, in which Laura LaPlante is to be the star.

Edgar Hansen, Swedish film star, who last starred a long term contract with Universal, will play the leading male part and Miss LaPlante, as the supporting roles will be filled by Lee Moran, Jean Price, Mack Swain, Sally Weichell, Tom Kennedy, Cissy Fitzgerald, Walter McGrail, William Austin and others.

Brown, formerly a scenario writer, will make his first as a director with his own story.

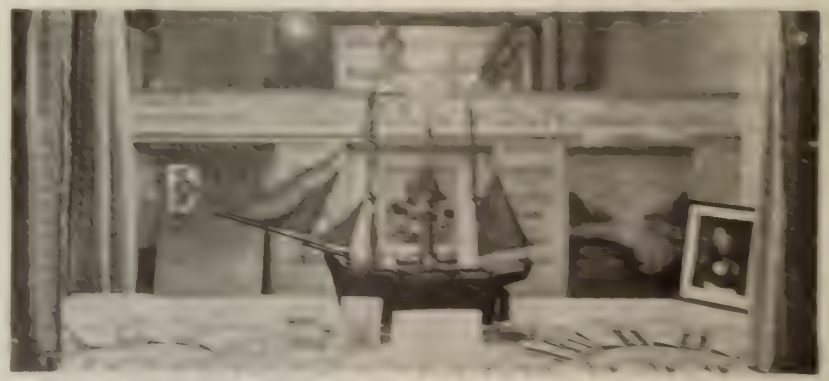
The huge mechanical electric sign in front of the Warner Theater, New York City, that advertises John Barrymore in "The Sea Beast" and can be seen for blocks

Easy Exploitation for Showmen Behind "The Sea Beast"

MOST any exhibitor will find John Barrymore in "The Sea Beast," the Warner picture now entering its fifth week on Broadway, easy of exploitation. Warner Bros. put it over in New York by using ordinary exploitation, but lots of it. John Barrymore does not require sensational stunts. Neither does the picture. Warners got across in New York by means of tie-ups, plenty of posters, window displays, splendid advertising in front of the theatres, and an avalanche of publicity space.

In connection with the Wanamaker Department Store "Moby Dick Week," a circular was distributed at the store, mentioning the theatre and picture—this also in advance of the opening of "The Sea Beast."

Thomas Cook & Son used a similar advance circular making the same mention of the picture, distributing it at the same time to their own prosperous clientele. Their Fifth Avenue window display of a miniature whaler and Barrymore portraits "went in" a week before the opening of the picture.



One of the effective window displays used by Warner Bros. to put over the run of John Barrymore in "The Sea Beast" at the Warner Theatre in New York City. Several other variety of a smaller nature attracted considerable attention.

Based on novel by Laura Jean Libbey.

NATACHA RAMBOVA—Mrs. Rudolph Valentino—makes her screen debut in the stellar role of "When Love Grows Cold," an F. B. O. Gold Bond Special, directed by Harry O. Hoyt and adapted from a popular novel by Laura Jean Libbey.

The hero of the story is Jerry Benson an inventor who marries a popular dancer. Through her aid he gets a hearing for his invention and finally wins great wealth. Success turns his head and he finds companionship with other women. His partner Graves, hoping to win Mrs. Benson's love plays the part of the sympathetic friend and pays Gloria an adventuress to lure Benson away from his wife. She succeeds, but Benson finally begins to wake up and she confesses Graves plot. Benson rushes to kill Graves but Graves tells him that while he did seek to win Mrs. Benson, he failed and that she still loves Benson. Just as Benson is about to enter his wife's home, their little boy rushes out in the street. Benson saves him from under an auto's wheels and this draws husband and wife together and she forgives him.

It will be seen that this plot follows the general type of Laura Jean Libbey's stories which achieved great popularity especially withe feminine readers, and it should still prove interesting to photoplay patrons. Mrs. Valentino gives a pleasing performance as the faithful wife. Her fame as an artist and designer is revealed in her strikingly individual gowns and manner of dressing her hair which will particularly interest and fascinate the women. The supporting cast is entirely satisfactory with Clive Brook giving an excellent performance as the hero and Sam Hardy as the rival.

This picture has been produced on a high-class scale, finely mounted and capably directed by Harry O. Hoyt so that it proves pleasing entertainment. Due to the wide newspaper publicity Mrs. Valentino has received, this picture should enable exhibitors to cash in on the desire of the public to see her.

Based on magazine story "The Spoils of War" by Hugh Wiley.

Directed by Edward Sutherland.

PARAMOUNT has hit the comedy mark for a third time recently and the last shot is even more squarely in the center of the bull's eye than were "Woman-handled" and "Hands Up." Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton have done much finer character bits, but never in their screen lives have they been so constantly, consistently and uproariously funny as in "Behind the Front."

The first four or five scenes are "library stuff" of departing troops, to establish the atmosphere, then the comedians enter the picture and from there until the final scene they constantly hold the centre of the stage with every inch of film packed with comedy.

Hatton is a sneak thief who grabs Beery's watch. As Beery is a detective this is the unforgivable insult, and a chase results. Mary Brian coaxes them to enlist to fill her quota of twenty-five men, and gives each her portrait.

In France they become buddies, and the discovery that they have been bilked by Mary only draws them the closer. Then they come back home to discover that she is being married to the fabricator of the hard-tack on which they have both broken their teeth and their spirits, and they polish off the bridegroom to their liking. Then they drop their dearly beloved top Sergeant into a coal hole and are supremely happy until Beery asks Hatton the time. He recognizes his own watch and the picture ends just where it began. The chase is on again.

That's the barest outline. It would take pages to tell all of the comedy complications. Nothing short of the published scenario would do the continuity justice, for the comedy is continuous. Every scene runs from one to a dozen laughs according to its length. Even the sub-titles are uproars, and when the two comedians get out in No Man's Land and lose their landmarks, charging both the Allied and the German lines, their query as to "Whose enemy are we?" is a roof raiser.

Everything has been subordinated to the creation of comedy situations, and yet the story is held always in mind, and this is in no sense a series of gags loosely strung together. It is a real story, constantly advancing, but advanced in such rapid se-

Wonderfully Gripping and Sustained Suspense Make This Splendid Audience Entertainment

Spy Mystery Drama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

EXCEPTIONALLY gripping hair-trigger suspense that holds the spectator on nerve's edge from the first flash to the final fade-out is the distinguishing characteristic of Producer's Distributing Corporation's "Three Faces East" adapted from Anthony Paul Kelly's succesful stage play of the same title.

Spy activities during the great war furnish the plot of this picture with most of the action taking place in the home of the head of the British Secret Service and the story hinges on the attempts of the Germans to get hold of a report as to the effectiveness of new British anti-aircraft guns before making a big dirigible raid on London. A fake report of the failure brings about the raid and the German aircraft squadron is destroyed. The interest centers around a woman spy introduced as in the employ of the Germans and actually receiving a decoration from the Kaiser. Reaching England she is greeted as an English spy and detailed to aid her chief at his home where she identifies and works with the butler, a German spy, even to advising him of the arrival of the report. The audience is kept in suspense all through the picture, up to almost the final flash as to whether she is really an English or German spy. There is a mild romance, for she falls in love with the butler, and a good dramatic kick when she proves the cause of the death of the man she loves.

Naturally, this is the leading role transcending all the others in interest, and in this person, Anthony Paul Kelly has created one of the most dramatic and fascinating characters of fiction. There is not a single situation in this picture that is not surcharged with dramatic interest and we have never seen more intense suspense developed, and certainly no production where the suspense is maintained at such a terrific height It holds your attention and interest in a vice-like grip never allowing them to waver for a second. With the disclosure of the real identity of the woman spy comes a succession of melodramatic surprises and an effective battle between dirigiles and land guns, all making a whirlwind ending, although some of the "happy enders" may be disappointed when her sweetheart, the Germany spy is killed. There is however, the hint of romance to come with an agreeable young chap who loves her.

Director Rupert Julian's direction is in keeping with the magnificent acting of the entire cast. He has skillfully kept the spectator guessing by playing up one angle against the other, as soon as you feel sure she is a German spy she does something to indicate she is really British, and vice versa. There are other lesser characters whose identity is shrouded in mystery, for instance, is the butler or the gardener the noted German spy Boelke? Although the critical may be inclined to pick flaws in the development of one or two important situations, they certainly provide tense melodrama that will go over with a bang with the masses.

Especially fine is Jetta Goudal's portrayal of the leading role in which she does the best work of her career. In type and in personality she is ideal for the character. The way in which she keeps from giving even a hint or a fleeting expression that would give her away in the crucial situations is superb. Clive Brook gives an excellent performance as the butler-spy. Henry Walthall as the head of the British Secret Service is very effective and Robert Ames is fine as his son. These two put over one of the best moments in the picture, a fine example of heart-stirring emotion and family love when they meet after a long absence.

Intensely exciting, gripping and dramatic, "Three Faces East" offers splendid entertainment for any type of spectator.

Well-Handled Story of Temptations and Romance of Small-Town Girl on This Famous Thoroughfare

Human-Interest Drama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

NO STREET in the world so fascinates the imagination as New York's famous Fifth Avenue, and under this alluring title, Producers Distributing Corporation is offering an exceptionally interesting human interest document of what happened to one little girl from the outside who sought fame and fortune along this celebrated thoroughfare.

En route from Alabama, Barbara met Mrs. Kemp who seemed to take an interest in her and invites her to stay with her until she got located. Barbara accepted and was pleased when Mrs. Kemp's name got her a flattering reception from Heffner a big business man, but when he came to dinner and began to make advances, she fled in fear and opened a shop for repairing old laces, but no customers appeared. One day, Heffner's nephew Neil came to Barbara's place and she mistook him for a burglar. He was amused and continued the deception and they became fast friends and finally he proposed, and so great was her love and faith she accepted without knowing his name. Confronted by the elder Heffner, he refused his consent and accused her of not being the right kind of girl, because of the reputation of the house in which he met her. Mrs. Kemp, however, came to Barbara's rescue and Heffner gladly withdrew is opposition to the marriage and begged her forgiveness.

Coupled with the sure-fire appeal of the small town girl who almost becomes engulfed in the big city is the fascination resulting in the use of authentic backgrounds and the story effectively brings out the contrast in the glare and glitter of the upper avenue with the quiet and repose of staid old Washington Square. The story has been developed along rather different lines and due to Director Vignola's smooth and skillful direction engrosses the interest and proves absorbing entertainment. There are good touches of humor, a pleasing story, a bizarre fashion parade to appeal to the women and the popular angle of the temptations to which the girl is subjected because of her beauty. Some of the situations stretch the credulity but they have been so smoothly handled that they are nevertheless good entertainment.

Marguerite DeLaMotte is excellent as the girl and Louise Dresser does a finished piece of work as the keeper of a rather questionable establishment. Allan Forrest is a likeable hero.

The average patron will thoroughly enjoy "Fifth Avenue."

Romance and Heart Interest Story of Boy Who Was Ridiculed But Saved the Day in a Crisis

A CHARACTER study of a shy, retiring, brow-beaten boy who went to college and finally became a hero by winning a crucial baseball game is "The Pinch Hitter," an Associated Exhibitors production starring Glenn Hunter and featuring Constance Bennett as the girl whose love inspired him.

Joel, a farmer lad, was persecuted by his uncle who called him worthless. When he went to college he became the butt of all the upper classmen's jokes and the laughing stock of the crowd. The fact that his uncle allowed him no spending money and he was known as a tightwad added to his humiliation. Falling in love with a waitress, she pitied him and urged that he try for the baseball team. The coach took him on as the mascot to amuse the others. Now, knowing this, he practiced at hitting a curve ball and in the big game, when they had to put him in, he made a home run with the bases full. Acclaimed as a hero, he bucked up enough courage to tell the girl of his love and took her in his arms.

Story by C. Gardiner Sullivan.
Directed by Joseph Henabery.

This story by C. Gardiner Sullivan was used some years ago for Charles Ray and proved one of his biggest successes. With Glenn Hunter, it has lost none of its appeal although Hunter plays the role along somewhat different lines, there is less of the hick and boob in his performance and the human interest angle of the character is stressed more. Hunter gives a fine performance and makes this bashful and diffident lad thoroughly human, bringing strong sympathy for the manner in which he is hounded and kidded by the other students.

While the climax is a familiar one, it is well handled and there are a number of good comedy scenes. Altogether, "The Pinch Hitter" is a realistic character study of a real type of boy, presented with fine insight into the feelings of such a lad, and it offers pleasing entertainment for the average patron.

Constance Bennett does good work as the girl, and the college students are all good types. Director Henabery has nicely established the atmosphere of the college campus.

May McAvoy and Leslie Fenton in Romance of Girl Who Went Blind and Regained Her Sight

WITH May McAvoy in the leading role, and Leslie Fenton playing opposite, the William Fox production directed by Howard Hawks unfolds the story of a speed-mad girl and the bitter road she followed before finding her real self and happiness.

Judith loved fast auto driving and while with her sweetheart David they met with a bad accident. Judith's head was injured but she neglected it. Later her father, whom she adored was killed in an accident and the doctor informed her she would go blind. Hiding it from David she turned him down and hid in a mountain lodge, becoming bitter against humanity and losing her faith in God. A faithful servant notified David, who came to her and was badly injured during a severe storm when a tree fell on the house. In her anxiety she even prayed for him and later while at his bedside found she could see. The doctor told her it might have been the shock, or an even greater power that restored her sight.

Judith Allen	May McAvoy
David Hale	Leslie Fenton
James Allen	Ford Sterling
Del Cole	Rockliffe Fellowes
Aunt Selma	Milla Davenport
Butler	John MacSweeney

Scenario by R. G. Rigby.
Directed by Howard Hawks.

May McAvoy gives a good performance as Judith but the manner in which she rebels at her troubles alienates a lot of sympathy from the character, though it adds to the drama. Leslie Fenton makes David a thoroughly likeable chap and Rockcliffe Fellowes handled with his usual force the mildly heavy role of the rival suitor.

The automobile accident is exceptionally well handled and provides a thrill and the storm scene is effective. This picture is more of a character study than a drama and will probably prove of average entertainment value.

AN amusing and interesting "inside" story of the motion picture industry that burlesques and pokes good-natured fun at the production of screen offerings especially the making of a "popular" star is "The Beautiful Cheat" a Universal-Jewel production starring Laura LaPlante.

Goldringer makes one picture and it is an awful flop. His backers tell him what he needs is a foreign star. He shows them a picture of a pretty Irish salesgirl who has taken a correspondence course in acting and tells them she is a Russian star. He send her to Europe to learn French and temperament. Her press agent Austin falls in love with her. Goldringer goes broke. Austin tells him to go ahead with the picture as he believes he has a live-wire in Lady Violet reputed to be wealthy. To impress her they get hold of a Long Island estate which is supposed to be the star's home. The owners return suddenly and is about to put them out when it develops that one of the extra's is his son. The owner agrees to finance the picture and Austin wins the hand of the "celebrated" star.

Based on magazine story by Nina Wilcox Putnam.

Directed by Edward Sloman.

The opening situations are especially bright and clever with a lot of good stuff built around Mary's home life. The comedy angle is played up all the way through and many of the subtitles are bright and witty. Edward Sloman has given this story good direction so that it proves decidedly pleasing. There are a number of good laughs and it looks like first class tonic for the average box-office.

Laura LaPlante is both pretty and pleasing in the leading role, and effective comedy is supplied by Alexander Carr as the Hebrew producer, Harry Myers as the "peppy" press-agent, and Walter Perry and Kate Price as the star's Irish mother and father.

Farley, owner of a chain of houses in Schenectady, Catskill and Yonkers, returned from Miami, last week and alighted in sixteen inches of snow in Albany, with traffic paralyzed and with zero weather prevailing. It was no wonder that Mr. Farley remarked that Miami was very nice, with accent on the "nice." Mrs. Farley and daughter are still in the South and Mr. Farley will probably return within a couple of weeks. On the way down Mr. Farley met Harold Franklin. In commenting on the situation in Florida, Mr. Farley said that many new motion picture theatres are being erected, and that meals and loding were not nearly as expensive as many had imagined.

What Next!

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

Simply because a good part of his patrons come in the afternoon, bring their lunch in their pocket, and then proceed to remain throughout the evening, all for ten cents, Louis Cappa, owner of Dreamland in Albany, N. Y., is now keeping a weather eye open for another house, probably in Schenectady.

When Mr. Cappa buys another motion picture theatre, he will first size up the neighborhood patronage, he says, something that he forgot to reckon with when he acquired Dreamland. Not only do many of the patrons remain for hours, but some of them even indulge in a little snooze after they have had their bite to eat in lieu of supper.

Mr. Cappa is learning a great deal about his neighborhood, declaring the other day that dramas do not draw at all, and that the majority of his patrons not only demand wild and wooly westerns but at least four persons must be killed off in the first reel if the picture is to score a hit.

Ohio Exhibitors Stage Fiddlers' Contest

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

PROOF that the exhibitors are not slow to "cash in" on current fads and fancies is found in the fact that the Temple Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, recently conducted an old fiddlers' contest in connection with the Fox picture, "Thunder Mountain." There were twelve contestants, and they instantly registered a tremendous hit. At Cleveland, Ohio, Loew's State Theatre recently staged a similar contest with nearly 100 of the old boys chasing the bow across the cat gut. Associated Exhibitors

WHITE SHADOW. Star, Betty Compson. This was an old one and it measured up pretty punk. Don't rave about it if you must show it and don't show it if you don't have to. Work of Betty Compson in dual role all that saves the film from absolute flop. Average tone. Sunday and special, no. Appeal eighty-five percent. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

F. B. O.

ALL AROUND FRYING PAN. (5,519 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Good Western that will please every one. Fred is coming to the front. Silver King does his usual stunts. Has good following here. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty percent. Farmers and laborers town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (200 sets), Hunter, Arkansas.

ALL AROUND FRYING PAN. (5,519 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. This is ninety percent better than his previous picture "Ridin' the Wind." If they give Thompson pictures like this he will build himself a steady patronage. All that is wrong with this show is that it has a poor title. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

HIGH AND HANDSOME. Star, Lefty Flynn. Lefty Flynn is fast growing popular and if they give him more stories of this type he will prove a good box office bet. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

KEEPER OF THE BEES. Star cast. Here is one of the big pictures of the year and I don't think that F. B. O. has to get behind anybody with this picture. Will do for anybody's house and better than most of the so-called big ones. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (167 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

LAUGHING AT DANGER. Star, Richard Talmadge. Have seen some worse shows, but that doesn't say that this isn't third class. An absolutely stupid character for the leading man and a collection of unreal situations. Will go some places for it has flashes of action. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Attendance, eighty-five percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. H. W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

MIDNIGHT FOLLY. (6 reels). Star cast. Good crowd and all pleased as far as I hear. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Oil class town of 250. Admission 10-15. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (350 seats, Wirt, Oklahoma.

MIDNIGHT FLYER. Star, Cullen Landis. One more bull's eye for F. B. O. This is the sixth gold bond special I have run and not a poor one amongst them. For medium and small sized towns, these pictures cannot be beat for pulling power and entertainment. Tone, fine. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre, Port Orchanrd, Washington.

O. U. WEST. (5 reels). Star, Lefty Flynn. This is a good program picture and should please most any audience that like Westerns. Had one bad night on account of the weather, so didn't make any money. General class town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

TEXAS BEAR CAT. Star, Bob Custer. A fine western picture. Played it to a good crowd. Made money for me. Good tone. Sunday and special, no. Oil and farmer class town of 250. Admission 10-15. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (350 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

RIDING THUNDER. Star, Yakima Canutt. I received several comments on this picture. Just as good as any other western stars. Miners and farmers town of 1,500. Admission 15-30, 10-20. A Catalano, Victory Theatre (200 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

WILD BULL'S LAIR. Star, Fred Thomson. It will please the western fans. Miners and farmers town of 1,500. A. Catalano, Victory Theatre (200 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

First National

AS MAN DESIRES. (7,650 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Played Christmas Eve and satisfied the majority. It's a good picture but the hoochie-koochie dance on the South Sea Island may be objected to by some of the more discriminating patrons. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Strong appeal General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HALF WAY GIRL. Star, Lloyd Hughes. Fairly a good picture. Enough thrills for any audience. Burning of ship genuine. Well worth your efforts. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred percent. Rural class town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Hamburg, Pennsylvania.

ISLE OF LOST SHIPS. (8 reels). Star, Milton Sills. This is another good program picture fromm First National and prints in good shape. The weather was bad both nights, so just made a little above expenses. Most everyone was well pleased and good comments on same. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. General class town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

JOANNA. (7,900 feet). Star, Dorothy Mackaill. A picture that the rough-house boys who missed seeing it asked where the film was shipped. No tone. Sunday and special no. Appeals to rough class. Town of 5,000. Admission 10-25. W. F. Jones, Criterion Theatre. Frederick, Oklahoma.

LOST WORLD. Star cast. This is a masterpiece. Personally, I consider it the most entertaining picture I have ever shown. The animals are good. One species is somewhat clumsy, but the balance are good. The double exposure work looked a little bad to me, but the picture holds the attention and entertains from start to finish. The story, acting, scenery, direction, etc., is wonderful. This picture has everything. I think that with the animals out it would be a far better picture than the other specials of last year. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30, 40-50. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

SCARLET WEST. Star cast. This picture was made near here but the idea of a white girl falling in love with an Indian does not go in this Indian country, as they don't do it. It will go in the East or where they do not have any Indians. Fair tone. Sunday, yes. Not a special. Railroad class and miners' town of 3,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

SUNDOWN. (9 reels). Star, Ray Stewart. A good picture, but too long drawn out. Should be cut to six reels. Print, new. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Fox

DESERT'S PRICE. Star, Buck Jones. The best thing Jones has turned out in two years. This is a high class western. Suitable for any night in a small town. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. Farmers' town of 1,380. Admission 10-25. Jas. B. Trout, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Leonard, Texas.

DICK TURPIN. Star, Tom Mix. Play, okay. Prints in bad shape, but somehow or other Tom did not look good in this one. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, no. Good appeal. Oil field class town of 500. Admission 15-35. H. W. Guinan, John Sexton Amusement Co. (300 seats), Cotton Valley, Louisiana.

EAST LYNNE. Star Cast. They come out to see this one and everyone smiled when they came out. The sob stuff went over well. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five percent. Farmers' town of 1,380. Admission 10-25. Jas. B. Trout, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Leonard, Texas.

FOOL. Star, Edmund Lowe. An excellent feature that fell down at the box office. It hasn't a universal appeal. Rather preachy, but a good picture well directed, with a message to convey. Great division of opinion here; those that did like it liked it a heap, and on the contrary those that didn't spoke their piece. Your town should be sized up carefully before purchase; it would be fine if you could see it. Not a thing to find fault with from my personal standpoint, but as before it depends on your clientele. Hard to define this. It should be a special. Poor attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York

GOLD AND THE GIRL. (4,512 feet). Star, Buck Jones. An excellent western that would have been still more excellent had Jones been in the saddle more. However, it pleased one hundred percent., and its value as entertainment was enhanced by the splendid condition of film and the wonderful outdoor photography. The dog in the picture almost snatched the honors from Buck and had the kids yelling their heads off. Tone, okay. Okay for Sunday. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred percent. Mixed class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

GOLDEN THOUGHT. Star, Tom Mix. Very good western picture. Pleased my folks, and that suits me. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Oil class town of 250. Admission 10-15. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theater (350 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

HUNTED WOMAN. (4,954 feet). Star cast.

Fairly good offering and a Curwood story that will please the majority. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy-five percent. Farmers' and laborers' town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (200 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

IRON HORSE. Star, George O'Brien. A classic. Now then exhibitors knowing what to do with a feature of that classification, get busy. Attendance, fine. A special, every inch of it. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MAN WHO CAME BACK. (8,273 feet). Star, George O'Brien. A good picture in nine reels. Will please anywhere. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, eighty percent. Farmers' and laborers' town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (200 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

Metro-Goldwyn

CONFESSIONS OF A QUEEN. (5,809 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. With an Alphonse Daudet story and a mythical kingdom bunk this Seastrom man has reeled off a pretty good show. The best part of it is probably the fact that he doesn't use twelve reels to tell it. It could be worse, but it's a costume picture. Tone, none. Sunday, no. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

GREAT WHITE WAY. (10 reels). Star cast. A picture sold as a special but did not register as such. It is a novelty, inasmuch as well known personages of Broadway appeared briefly. The story, however, is ordinary, and the picture is really but a program affair as far as my town is concerned. Anita Stewart heads the cast. Special, no. Possibly suitable for Sunday. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

LADIES OF THE NIGHT. Star, Norma Shearer. A bit out of the ordinary in theme with a pretty bare sort of story, the big thing in this picture is the work of Norma Shearer. George K. Arthur is an absolute sap and looks it, and his finally marrying the underworld counterpart of Norma while the inventor marries the righ Norma doesn't give satisfaction here. Tone, not so good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SIX DAYS. (8,010 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. Corinne Griffith featured in another Elinor Glyn story that was censor proof, as far as the print I got was concerned. It really is funny to see some of the people come out to see a Glyn picture, threatening drastic action if it is off color, and leaving the theatre disappointed because they saw nothing wrong. It's a good program picture. All right for Sunday, but not a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

SO THIS IS MARRIAGE. (6,300 feet). Star cast. A fair program picture. You can run it for two days, but no longer. Will not hurt business. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty percent. All classes. Admission 15-25. David W. Struyer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

TESS OF D'URBERVILLES. Star, Blanche Sweet. This is a fine production, especially for a Sunday show. Parts well acted; pleased our audience ninety percent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30 regular. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

TESS OF D'URBERVVILLES. Star, Blanche Sweet. Thomas Hardy's tragic story of a wrong done an innocent country girl who is overwhelmed by a cruel fate. A morbid theme that leave a depressive impression on your patrons. As an emotional drama it is masterly and the scenes of the English countryside are admirable. Get it if you like. Draw from tourist class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

WIFE OF THE CENTAUR. Star, John Gilbert. This man didn't know what he wanted. He got lots of it; seven reels, to be exact. If your audience likes a piflicated show like this it's all right, but the action is not there. Poor for the big three. Tone, bum. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown Pennsylvania.

YOLANDA. (10,250 feet). Star, Marion Davies. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25 regular, 15-30 specials. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

Paramount

ADVENTURE. (6,002 feet). Star, Tom Moore. A dandy picture for the small town. All the stars do good work. Pauline Starke is a delight. The Beery-Hatton team furnish excellent comedy relief. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Farmers town of 110. Admission 10-25. W. B. Russell, Benton Community House (120 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

AIR MAIL. Star, Warner Baxter. Actually one of the best pictures I have ever seen and that is saying a great deal. Boys, get this picture and you will not be disappointed, as it has everything in it to be a good picture. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Fine appeal. All classes town of 500. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

ANCIENT HIGHWAY. (7,506 ft). Star, Jack Holt. This is a very good picture. Pleased a majority of the patrons. No kicks. Did better than the average. Film in good condition. C. W. Fisk, Orpheum Theatre, Proctor, Minnesota.

ANCIENT HIGHWAY. (7,556 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Very good out-door picture. Some good log drives and rough water scenes. Fight scene not so good, somehow it lacks something. Did not seem sincere. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Fair appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

A SON OF HIS FATHER. (7 reels). Star, Warner Baxter. Buy it and get behind it will please them and make you money. Several said it's the best picture from Harold Bell Wright's novels. Appeal, ninety percent. Jos. L. Delisi, Liberty Theatre, Saltsburg, Pennsylvania.

A SON OF HIS FATHER. (6,925 feet). Star cast. An ordinary western sold at a fancy price. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, South Dakota.

BEST PEOPLE. (5,700 feet). Star, Warner Baxter. Just a light comedy drama, of society life. Didn't go over in my town Title hurt and paper no good. Print fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Didn't appeal to our patrons. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

BEST PEOPLE. Star cast. A very good society drama and one of Paramount's real clever pictures. Marguerite Morris a newcomer in the lead and she does fine. Kathlyn Williams, Warner Baxter, and others helped put over a very entertaining story. General class city of 15,000. Admission forty cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre (1,000 seats), Bellaire, Ohio.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star cast. A picture that has plenty of action and good scenery good for any day in the week especially Saturday. Fair tone. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety-five percent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. This was a better comedy than the name suggests, and was very pleased with it. Don't be afraid of this one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 500. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

COAST OF FOLLY. (7,000 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. While there was not much fault to be found with the picture it caused no unsual comment, nor did it draw usual business. We have concluded that this star is slipping. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Fair appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

COBRA. (6,895 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. Terrible. No appeal. City of 10,000. Admission 15-35. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt Vernon, Ohio.

COBRA. 7,000 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. A love drama but not suitable for Valentino. Valentino fans won't think it bad, but it won't appeal, much to others. Picture for a special is very light. Soft focus picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

DEVIL'S CARGO. (7,080 feet). Star, Pauline Stark. Only a program offering, although classed as a special. Had some walk out on it. Pauline Stark and William Collier are good, but Beery is the outstanding figure of the production. Not a Sunday picture, nor a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). Star cast. Played two days to poor business just before Christmas. It should have had bigger crowds to see it as it is a good picture. Tone and appeal, good. Special, yes. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

FORTY WINKS. (6,203 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. A good comedy spoiled by about two hundred feet of missing film at the end. It was a disappointment that Theodore Roberts did not have more of a role. He is the only one of his kind and a prime favorite here. Suitable for Sunday. Not a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

FORTY WINKS. Star, Raymond Griffith. Fine picture. Good comedy all the way through. Everyone liked it. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, fifty percent. Oil field class town of 500. Admission 15-35. H. W. Guinan, John Sexton Amusement Co. (300 seats), Cotton Valley, Louisiana.

HANDS UP. Star, Raymond Griffith. Just fair. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, not what we expected. City of 10,000. Admission 15-35. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

HE'S A PRINCE (REGULAR FELLOW). (5,027 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. Good picture, but for some reason or other we did not do any business. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. All classes town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. E. W. Fischer, Rialto Theatre (500 seats), Oakdale, California.

KISS FOR CINDERELLA. (10 reels). Star, Betty Bronson. For a fairy tale it's there, but a bit too long. Done in the usual Paramount style. Played this during the holidays, and pleased the better class. Had a few kicks that they fell asleep on it, but they are the ones that want action pictures every night in the week. Print, new. A Paramount classic of laughs, tears and heart tugs. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

KISS FOR CINDERELLA. (9,621 ft.) Star, Betty Bronson. A good picture. Pleased women and children, men walked out. Tone, fine. Sunday and special, yes. Town of 10,000. Admission 15-35. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

LORD JIM. (6,702 ft.) Star, Percy Marmont. Joseph Conrad's immortal classic of the sea. The book was read by quite a few in my town so they turned out to see it. Print new. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

LOVERS IN QUARANTINE. (6,576 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Good South Sea story, plenty of action, good work by Ford. Satisfactory at box office. Daniels is a good bet for this town. More of these pictures and it would be better for Paramount. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. E. W. Fischer, Rialto Theatre (500 seats), Oakdale, California.

LOVERS IN QUARANTINE. (6,570 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. This was liked by our Sunday patrons; something different, but nothing extraordinary. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

LUCKY DEVIL. (5,935 ft.) Star, Richard Dix. This is a very pleasing picture and will please your audience, however, not a big picture but well worth advertising. Richard Dix is very popular here and I think his popularity is more or less general all over the country. He is the nearest to Wallie Reid on the screen today. Tone, good. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

LUCKY DEVIL. (5,935 ft.) Star, Richard Dix. Good. One of the best from Paramount in some time. Lots of comedy and excitement what the average show goer wants. Book it by all means. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Bathchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

MANNEQUIN. (6,981 feet). Star, Alice Joyce. Good. Tone, fair. City of 10,000. Admission 15-35. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

MANNEQUIN. Star, Alice Joyce. One of the most interesting pictures ever made. Also a good box office bet. I rate this as one of the ten best of the year. It isn't big but it is a fine story and a fine cast and fine direction and with the national publicity it is a fine box office bet. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Small town class town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

NIGHT CLUB. (5,721 feet). Raymond Griffith. A newcomer comedian, who is making friends with every picture. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Miners and farmers town of 1,500. Admission 15-30, 10-20.

Back From Coast

ONE of "Our Gang" who has sent contributions laid off for a while and nobody knew what was the excuse.

But now we know. Look him over—he doesn't show any marks, does he? But he's been out where the wild films live—out where the bathing beauties pose for the sinless cinema.

Jim—James D. Kennery, Apollo Theatre, Indianapolis, Indiana, is the contributor you've just looked at. Now that he's back from his West Coast trip, let's hope we will get some more of his good tips. They are bound to be good—he's been in the show business seventeen years.

A. Catalano, Victory Theatre (200 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

NIGHT CLUB. (5,721 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. Pleased everybody on a Saturday night. A good comedy. A little suggestion for you Ray, don't overdo the slapstick stuff. His best for us. Tone, good. Special, no. Good appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Jack Holt. This is what I call an extra good show. One person said it had the "Covered Wagon" beat, and some said just as good as the "Covered Wagon." Had very cold weather one night, so did not make much money. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Country and town class town of 900. Admission 10-25. Orew J. Spalti, Strand Theatre (235 seats), Pleasantvile, Iowa.

ONLY 38. Star, Lois Wilson. This is a dandy little picture that I dug up out of the past and pleased my crowd in good shape. If you haven't run this get it and pay old prices for it and you will take in new money at the box office. Print was in good shape and I have yet to get a bad Paramount print. This holds for four years. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Not a special. Small town class town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. A picture that is different, wonderfully done, but will appeal more to the children than the adults, yet the adults will wonder how it was done. Rich in scenery. Tone, good. Special, yes. Fair appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Wonderful capacity business. A credit to the business. Long live Brenon and Bronson. Business class. Jack Prendergast, Palladium super cinema, Lancaster, England.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,928 feet). Star, Ricardo Cortez. A fine picture, also not a "Covered Wagon." Had fierce opposition and bad weather, and they came out as well as could be expected. This review is not from an attendance viewpoint. It's fine stuff but don't pay "Covered Wagon" prices, give a fair price and with conditions right you'll get some change, with the advance work properly worked up. You've got to go after this; for "The Covered Wagon" had the publicity, which you cannot compare with what this film received. It's a gem. Lots of comedy, plenty of action. Get busy. Special, yes in every way. Fair attendance only, due to poor attendance conditions. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,929 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Wonderful production. Good drawing card. Pleased a majority. Better than the "Covered Wagon." Town of 3,000. Admission 10-25, Chares Fisk, Orpheum Theatre, Proctor, Minnesota.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,928 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Not as good as "Covered Wagon." About on a par with "North of 36." Business was very good for two days, Friday and Saturday. People praised it. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes town of 2,900. Admisison 10-25, regular, 15-30, specials. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,928 feet). Star cast. This is a fine picture, but as I have stated several times before in reports these western features have about played out for me. It seems to me that since the "Iron Horse" now speeds over the plans all these "Pony Expresses" and "Covered Wagons" should be discarded for something a little more modern in plain. I think most exhibitors are ready for something different. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE. Star, Douglas MacLean. An attempt at a big time comedy that is not what its producers claim for it. MacLean is good, not a knockout and nothing to rave about. Paramount rates it eighty per cent. too high General class city of 15,000. Admission forty cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre (1,000 seats), Bellaire, Ohio.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,621 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Any of you boys who have not played this one should do so. A nice offering from any angle and will please a large percentage. Don't be afraid to advertise, it is there. Tone, and appeal, good. Special, no. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

SPANIARD. (6,676 feet). Star, Ricardo Cortez. There are two big bull fights in this picture and a strong love story with a sheik. It seemed to please a large percentage of our patrons. Cortez does some wonderful acting in this picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes, here. Special in some towns. Appeal, seventy per cent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30 regular. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

STAGE STRUCK. (6,691 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A fairly good picture. The colored scenes were fine. But somehow Gloria fails to register here now. I believe "Madame Sans Gene" and her other unpopular pictures have about killed her. By heavy advertising, promising Gloria in the best picture of her career I managed to get average business the first night. But the second dropped just half. Frankly, I don't understand just why Gloria is not popular anymore when she was once my best box office bet but the other day a bunch of young folks (16 to 20 years), were given a theatre party and told to pick their picture. Finally the choice simmered down to "Stage Struck" or Wild, Wild Susan." Then they decided in this manner, "Oh, let's go see Bebe Daniels, Gloria Swanson is too old." Personally I don't think Gloria Swanson has made a box office picture since "The Humming Bird." Tone, okay. Appeal, fair. Sunday, okay. Special, no. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-30, 40-50. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Star cast. Showed this last August during hottest weather to full houses. I believe as big if not the greatest production ever shown upon the screen. Pleased one hundred per cent. All classes town of 600. Admisison 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Onida Theatre (225 seats), Onida, South Dakota.

THAT ROYLE GIRL. (10,253 feet). Star, Carol Dempster. Very good picture. The cyclone scene was very good. Big tornado in this show. Should go over anywhere. At the box office it was a complete failure for us. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. All classes town of 2,000. Admission 15-50. E. W. Fischer, Rialto Theatre (500 seats), Oakdale, California.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A very good picture of the olden times when buffaloes roamed the Western prairies. Took very well here. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Fine appeal. All classes town of 500. Admission 10-25. Jack Stanton, Movies Theatre (200 seats), Onamia, Minnesota.

WELCOME HOME. (5,909 feet). Star cast. About as much entertainment in this as a funeral. No audience appeal, but to the few husbands and wives that had to go through the same thing. A terrible movie. Good tone. Poor appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WOMANHANDLED. 6,765 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Here is really a good picture should go anywhere. Plenty of good comedy and action. Good story. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Pathe

GIRL SHY. (7,457 ft.) Star, Harold Lloyd. Paid too much. After I finish playing "Freshman" and "Hot Water" then no more Lloyds till the price comes down. Fair tone. Not a special. B. F. Schimke, Philip Theatre, South Dakota.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

FRIENDLY ENEMIES. (6,388 ft). Stars, Weber and Fields. Fine and we have had many compliments on it. Help build up a show. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine appeal. Farmers town of 412. Admissio 1 10-25. Johl Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

MAN FROM RED GULCH. Star, Harry Carey. Only fair. Harry had better not sacrifice too much action for humor, as he tries to do in this picture. Does not resemble Bret Harte's story at all and is rather slow. Appeal, sixty-five per cent. Mixed class town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. A. M. Rosenbloom, Home Theatre (350 seats), Rochester, Pa.

ROAD TO YESTERDAY. (9,580 ft.) Star cast. Good picture, wonderful settings, but rather drags for small town audience. P. J. Poag, Princess Theatre, Del Rio, Texas.

United Artists

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY. Star, Mary Pickford. Some liked this better than "Pollyanna." Personally I thought it was a little too long. Hasn't the drawing power of "Pollyanna." If you haven't played it, do so. Ten reels. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Farmers town of 110. Admission 10-25. W. B. Russell, Benton Community House (120 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

Appreciation

"Here's wishing your Straight From the Shoulder Gang the very best wishes for the New Year.

"I find your reports useful and d——— good reading. You must have some hard boiled exhibitors on your side of 'rum row.' Cheerio!" Jack Prendergast, Palladium Super Cinema, Market Street, Lancaster, England.

LOVING LIES. Monte Blue. Good feature story with a good star. Pleased everyone. A story of this type is bound to please. Something different than the ordinary story. Tone and appeal good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

LOVING LIES. Star cast. A Peter B. Kyne story based on "The Harbor Bar." Quite a few new faces to see this one. Although old the print was good and the picture as a whole was very satisfactiry. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Mill and farming class, town of 1,000. Admission 25 cents. L. E. Parsons, Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

SALVATION HUNTERS. Star cast. Here is a picture that is the opposite of the jazzy kind. It has a message for the "down and outs" and shows a stratum of society seldom shown in pictures. Mill and farming class town of 1,000. Admission twenty-five cents. L. E. Parsons, Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

SALVATION HUNTERS. Star cast. If you have bought it, don't show it. If you haven't bought it, don't. Absotively no good. At the bottom of the bay is a good place for all prints of this picture. Farming class. C. Van Leuven, Molson Theatre, Molson, Washington.

WILD JUSTICE. Star, Peter the Great (dog). As good a dog picture as any with a very good story well acted and directed. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Railroad class and miners town of 3,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

Universal

CALGARY STAMPEDE. (5,804 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. This picture is in a class of its own. It's a circuit. It has the Western atmosphere with plenty of rodeo stunts. It will keep your audience attentive all the time. Tone and appeal, good. Working class city of 200,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

CALIFORNIA STRAIGHT AHEAD. (6,238 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. If they like comedy give them this one and they'll eat it up. A very good Saturday show and any other day. It's the type of picture that sends them out happy. Appeal, one hundred percent here. Jos. L. Delisi, Liberty Theatre, Saltsburg, Pennsylvania.

CALIFORNIA STRAIGHT AHEAD. Star, Reginald Denny. One of the very finest comedies I ever used. It kept the house in a continuous up-roar. More funny twists and situations than most any picture I ever used. As amusement value, the rental should be higher than on "The Freshman," in fact, I used it in opposition to "The Freshman" Thanksgiving and the day following. I gave it lots of gas for I knew what I was up against and I showed it to four to one against "Freshman" both afternoon and night and it came back the second day with unusual business. I rented it for about one-eighth what was wanted for "Freshman" with a high percentage hooked on. Yes, I have a larger and better house than where the "Freshman" played. "The Freshman" was screened here, I saw them both. W. E. Fields, Rylander Theatre, Americus, Ga.

DON DARE DEVIL. Star, Jack Hoxie. Very common western and did not come up to expectations. Some good scenery but my western fans look for action and thrills which this picture failed to furnish. First Hoxie I have played this season. Tone fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. Farmers and laboring class town of 350. Admission 10-25. Ed. F. Cox, Princess Theatre (400 seats), Bristol, Colorado.

Independents

AFTER BUSINESS HOURS. (Columbia). Star, Lou Tellegen. Not so bad. That is it could be worse. Should a wife have money to spend or should her husband pamper her with a thousand a week pin money? Can a woman be trusted with large sums of money? Ask the average husband and save five reels of film. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pa.

ALWAYS RIDING TO WIN. (State Right). Star, Pete Morrison. Fairly good western with light comedy that will please in small town. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Farmers' and laborers' town of 342. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (200 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

DYNAMITE DAN. (State Right). Star, Kenneth MacDonald. A very mediocre picture, has the making of a good one but the director or someone is at fault, action too slow, actors afraid to hit; in other words a punk picture. Tone and appeal, no. Sunday and special, no. All classes. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS' REWARD. (State Right). Star, Ken Maynard. Here is one real western actor, the first I have seen in some time. Plenty of action and a real cast behind him. Keep it up. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (167 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

MORALS FOR MEN. (Tiffany). Star, Conway Tearle. They must have been in a kissing contest for kissing ruined what would have been a good picture. Town and country class town of 5,000. Admission 10-25. W. F. Jones, Criterion Theatre, (300 seats), Frederick, Oklahoma.

ROMANCE AND RUSTLERS. (Arrow). Star, Yakima Canutt. This fellow is good but can't get good prints. He is a real western actor. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

SOULS FOR SABLES. (Tiffany). Star, Eugene O'Brien. Very good picture that isn't very strong at the box office. Too much kissing. Town and country class town of 5,000. Admission 10-25. W. F. Jones, Criterion Theatre (300 seats), Frederick, Oklahoma.

TWO FISTED JUSTICE. (State Right). Star, Dick Hatton. Too much fighting, gets monotonous. Not much story and somehow I haven't been able to get my western fans sold on Hatton. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, sixty-five per cent. Farmers and laboring class town of 350. Admission 10-25. Ed. F. Cox, Princess Theatre (400 seats), Bristol, Connecticut.

Lining Up Clergy on The Fool Campaign Results in Hearty Aid of Thirty Ministers

EDGAR HART, of the Colonial theatre, Portsmouth, N. H., played The Fool lately, and like a lot of other managers he sought to put it over with the ministers, as advised in the Fox press book.

Of course Edgar did not have to wait to read about it in a book. You don't have to tell an old campaigner about a little thing like that. The point we want to make is that the idea is in the press book for everyone to use, and that each user got out just what he put into it.

Edgar is comparatively a newcomer in Portsmouth. He has been there less than a year, but he's no stranger, and when he found that he would run The Fool he had no difficulty in arranging to appear before the Ministerial Conference, which includes all clergymen of the Protestant denominations —about 30 in all.

EDGAR HART'S LABELS

He gave them a straightforward talk on the picture, telling them of the sensation it has made in New York and Boston, and pointing out that it handled things with a frankness that is not always possible in the church, which is dependent upon the affluent for its main support.

He put it in a nice way, that wounded nobody's feelings, but which none the less meant that the film could say what no clergymen of the Protestant denominations And they knew that he was hitting the nail on the head.

Their reception of his talk was such that he was encouraged to arrange for a special showing of the film about two weeks in advance of the opening.

The showing was attended by every member of the Alliance and as a result of the showing he was able to arrange for the appearance of the choir of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church at each showing.

He did not use this for a prologue, but used a set house to one side of the screen. When Gilchrist is writing his sermon on the screen, the choir is faded in through the scrim, the lights not being bright enough to detract from the brilliancy of the picture, and through the four minutes this sequence runs the choir sang a Christmas carol.

This sequence, if you know the picture, is somewhat lacking in action, and the choir not only did not interrupt, but it very greatly enhanced the value of the scene.

When Gilchrist is conversing with the Stranger, Edgar hushed the orchestra and played Adeste Fideles on a Victrola, the thin tones harmonizing with the scene.

Put It Over

The result was that the patrons liked the picture more than they would have done had it merely been played, and the moral effect of the use of the choir of a fashionable church is not to be figured in dollars and cents, since it lasts well beyond the showing.

It brought out hundreds of church goers who do not usually attend the pictures, and they found it pleasant entertainment. They would not have come without the church appeal.

It is sound work and one of the best things that Edgar has contributed since his baby show down in El Paso.

And Edgar springs a new one in an advertisement. The one we reproduce is a spoiled sample, but all he had to send. He wanted something that would give him a paneled effect without the cost of art work, so he bought some blank labels and had them printed locally. Your druggist probably can show you catalogues or at least tell you where to send.

This label is about three inches in diameter, done in blue and gold and printed in black. Printed up in quantities, they cost little more than white stock.

One of these was folded into every issue of the local paper, and the overplus was placed at the plates of the Rotary lunchers and on the tables of a local hotel. They are far better than a hearald for a change, and they look a lot more than they cost.

Portland Offers Real Fan Sheet

Not since Jensen and Von Herberg discontinued their very snappy house weekly have we seen a better house magazine than The Strand Magazine, which comes from Portland, Maine. Though the house organ of the Strand theatre, it is published by a separate company and is supported by the advertisements of local concerns who have the discernment to realize that it is the sort of thing that will eagerly be read.

The first issue is 24 pages of white coated paper, with a colored cover, or 26 pages in all, and the editor Philip B. Sharp, writes that the quality of the stock will be maintained, with a larger number of pages in the early future.

It differs from the usual house organ in that it is not devoted to the direct interests of the house. The leading films are cared for, but the material is readable news stuff and not straight press agent material. There is a large proportion of general film miscellany and the sheet is fully as readable as the fan magazines and better edited than most.

The distribution is largely through the mails and is cared for by the theatre, the initial run being 5,000 copies.

To a great many managers it would seem that a booklet with so little direct theatre advertistment would fall short of its object, but we believe that this magazine fills its purpose better because it does not openly advertise coming releases. Instead it creates an interest in these which makes it easier to sell through the regular advertising channels.

Got Splendid Returns on a Classified Hook-up

Played the Works on Classified Ad Idea

Many theatres have worked in with local newspapers in putting over Corinne Griffith in Classified, but the campaign of Loew's State theatre, Los Angeles, on this picture goes beyond anything along these lines. They even shot a couple of substitutes in the picture to suggest that at the close the leads are about to leave for California as the result of a classified advertisement in the Examiner. If you can beat that, don't write, wire.

Fifty windows took pictures of Miss Griffith with a copy of the Examiner in her hand as another special stunt, and the theatre bannered the house front for Examiner Classified Ad Week. A girl was installed in the lobby to accept classified ads, and the ushers wore ribbons to advertise the week. In return the Examiner's telephone department mentioned the picture and the State in 5451 telephone conversations. Each person who was called up on classified ad business was told of the picture.

From a third to a column news story was run daily for two weeks, four of the stories carrying photographic layouts. Ten boxes a day for two weeks were given for the your-name-in-the-ads stunt and in addition there were 14 spaces four columns by fifteen inches for a best letter contest on "My most interesting experience with classified ads." One day Charlie Murray acted as nominal manager of the classified ad. department and helped run the business up. In addition to heavy posting 63,000 pieces of distributed matter were put out and there were two midnight matinees; one for the employees of the Examiner's classified department and the other for the Record.

Both the theatre and the newspaper used their radio stations. Sol Lesser, A. M. Bowles, A. and M. Gore, H. W. Wright and Bob Doman worked the units.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

FIVE musical presentations were offered on the program with Richard Barthelmess in "Just Suppose." In addition, there was the usual Mark Strand Topical Review, running 8 minutes, making a total show of 1 hour and 50 minutes. Of this time 1 hour and 8 minutes was given to the feature picture itself. This left 34 minutes for the musical numbers.

Through an arrangement with the Holy Trinity Church of Brooklyn 4,000 tickets were disposed of by the church at an advance over the box office price, the difference going into the church fund.

The overture by the Famed Mark Strand Orchestra was Mayhew L. Lake's "Evolution of Dixie." Special art film titles were run on the screen as an explanatory accompaniment to the musical work. The overture is a fantasy depicting the gradual evolution of "Dixie" slowly through the "creation," then "Dance Aborginal," the "Minuet" and then the "Dixie" that we all know. This in turn became a "Waltz," then "Ragtime" and finished by being "Grand Opera." The lights for this presentation: two Mestrum floods of flesh color on the orchestra and drapes from the dome; X-ray foot lights on production stage and sides pink; two 1,000 watt blue spots reflecting on the cove piece over the orchestra; two border strips back of the cove to light up the 200 stars in the sky effect; color blend on the picture screen from the dome. The overture took 8 minutes.

Harry Bruer, the xylophonist of the orchestra, was presented in a new medley including "Paddlin' Madelin Home," "Cross My Heart," "Want A Little Loving," and "I Love My Baby." Breuer was given 3 minutes for his turn and went over big. The lights: the dome had a medium amber spot on the soloist and a color blend on the orchestra and apron of the large stage. All other lights used for the overture remained.

The Mark Strand Augmented Ballet Corps of twelve dancers was presented in a novel and artistic "Bubble Dance" to music of Grieg's "Morning" and Brahams "Waltz." The setting consisted of a balustrade extending across the stage with 2 huge flower urns on either side. At opening a dancer attired as Pierrot is seen blowing bubbles from on top of the balustrade and the bubbles appear as colored balloons coming through a huge bowl. Following this introduction dancers appear from either side. The blue neutral drop was used as a backdrop lighted by 2 deep blue open box lamps. Steel blue floods from the dome and the bridge lighted the set. The dance took 3 minutes.

Following the Mark Strand Topical Review Lilly Kovacs, the girl pianist of the orchestra, played from her accustomed place Liszt's "Concerto No. 1." Five minutes for this solo.

"Songs of Scotland" presented 10 Mark Strand dancers, a contralto, a soprano, a Scotch tenor and the Lovett Bagpipe Band of 10 pieces. The selections ran as follows: "The Campbells Are Coming" by the bagpipe band; "Coming' Thro' The Rye," soprano solo; "Blue Bells of Scotland," "Loch Lomond," contralto; "I Love A Lassie" by tenor; Highland Fling, dancers and "Will Ye No Come Back Again" by the Ensemble. The act, of course, was costumed in Scotch for all who took part in it. This presentation was given 15 minutes.

Merry Widow Waltz Contests Are Money in Bank

A United Artists Release

AN ALASKAN LANDSCAPE IN A RADIO STORE IN ARKANSAS
This is one of the windows gained by John P. Read, of the New Theatre, Fort Smith, as the result of an intelligent letter campaign on windaws for The Gold Rush. The landscape does not show well in the photograph but it was very well done.

Dancing Contest a Merry Widow Help

Eddie Collins got The Merry Widow off to a flying start at the Queen Theatre, Galveston. He put on a special showing three days ahead and 75 prominent people who were the guests had to tell all the others they had been there and brag up the show. Eddie made it a regular party with light refreshments and cigars and many of the guests came in formal dress. This was given following the regular performance.

Another good stunt was the offer of a cup for the best pair to dance The Merry Widow waltz at a local dance place. The cup was exhibited in a store window for some time in advance of the contest and the stunt was heavily advertised by the hall itself. It brought an attendance of more than a thousand persons.

He captured a lot of windows and got an automobile concern to announce that Mae Murray and John Gilbert both rode in the cars of that firm.

For a final kick he used the personal endorsement stunt in a two column space.

Drove in Title On Pretty Ladies

Repetition of the title was W. F. Brock's drive on Pretty Ladies at the Strand Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn.

He started this off with 2,000 windshield stickers reading: "Take a tip. Make your dates with Pretty Ladies."

After this had sunk in he made a peep sho wi nthe lobby of the Strand with "Take a look. Pretty Ladies only." Inside was a mirror with the lettering "See more Pretty Ladies next Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday."

The same idea was taken down the street to a shoe store where they had shoes for Pretty Ladies and a peep hole with a still display in back.

Curiosity was capitalized for an excellent business.

Teaser Tags

Automobile tags reading merely "Who Are the 3?" were put out by the Gayety Theatre, Ottawa, Ill., in advance of the regular campaign, the latter breaking just as the puzzled autoists were about to give the question up. It was a good introduction to the regular advertising and can be used as a newspaper teaser with equally good effect.

Four Tepees

About the best attractor in the lobby of The Scarlet West at the Strand Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., was a scarlet banner the width of the opening with the title and players in white lettering.

Four tepees were placed on little islands of sand in the lobby and between these were action cutouts from the posters. Both stunts seemed to help business.

Washington's Birthday, Valentine and Easter. Got any ideas ready?

Made Campaign on Window Displays

When the Gold Rush was booked for the New Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., John P. Read went about the accumulation of window shows in a systematic fashion. He did not drop in on a few merchants and ask them. He sat down and drew up a form letter that sold merchants on the value to them of hooking to so well known a name as Chaplin's. There was nothing hit or miss about this method. He sold his wares as any good salesman would, and he reaped a corresponding reward.

He not only sold the display idea, but he sold them on the thought that the more they did the more they would receive in return, and while the sale was made on Chaplin, the results have them sold on any good title. Mr. Read has only to suggest instead of beg.

Lecturing before the class of the Public Theatre Managers Training School the other day, the window expert of a large electrical corporation told the students that he found that practically all mechants would use picture hook-ups but that only a comparatively small percentage had been approached. All that was needed was a straightforward sales campaign.

Mr. Read's campaign amply bears out the statement. He went after the windows and he got them.

The photograph of one of the displays hardly does justice to the subject. The foreground shows a really well done Alaskan landscape with the now famous hut. Two of the cards displayed are for radio apparatus and one is for a drama at the Joie, but you can't beat the Chaplin announcement at the back, no matter what you put in.

By the Gross

Because the Regent theatre, Toronto, was playing The Iron Horse in the Christmas shopping days, it was easy to get a window in a toy store. This was filled entirely with cast-iron toy trains and the suggestion that the reader take an Iron Horse home to the children. Plenty of stills on the picture and the working model of a locomotive were the attractors, and the store cleaned up.

Put Over Pony Express With An Old Coffee Pot

Did His Durndest For Merry Widow

Not since he tok over the publicity for the Melba theatre, Dallas, Texas, has Raymond B. Jones worked as hard as he did for The Merry Widow, but S. T. McDonald, the manager, figured they could ram the records if they played it across the boards, and Jones went to work.

He gave a preview to 500 invited guests, and did not have to ask them to tell their friends. They went out all pepped up and yessed the glowing accounts in the local papers.

A broadcasting set was put in by a local store, with a mike in the orchestra and another in a room where announcements could be made, the horn of a loudspeaker being mounted on the marquise. This had a range of about five blocks. When the orchestra was not playing, they used phonograph from the opera.

A Hotel Ball

A large hotel was induced to give a Merry Widow Ball with an exhibition waltz by the girl hostess. It was attended by about 200, but it was very select. The hotel advertised the ball widely and permitted Melba frames in the lobby, as well. A well known orchestra played the Merry Widow waltz at all functions for which it was engaged, and also did the numbers in three radio concerts, and a 17 foot banner was placed over a viaduct used by about 10,000 cars daily.

The attraction probably got more newspaper and radio publicity than any film that ever played the town.

Sounded Good

Soda tie ups do not count for so much in Winter, but in Bellingham, Wash., the American theatre got it over by persuading the soda counters to offer "Lightnin' Soda, the soda with a kick." The kick was purely imaginary, but it helped the soda sales and advertised Lightnin', so no one kicked.

Coffee Pot Boosted Pony Express Stunt

Cooperating with the local Light and Power Company on a window designed to show the improvement in methods since the days of the pony express M. W. Larmour, of the National Theatre, Graham, Texas, found his best bet in an old coffee pot.

To get contrasts he had an electric toaster and a slice of bread speared on a fork, a broom and vacuum cleaner, a desk lamp and a candle in a cracked saucer, and a dozen other comparisons.

His own property man and a handy man from the company rustled the old props, but they could not find an old coffee pot to set beside the electric percolator. They could get percolators and even shiny old style pots, but personal inquiry and telephone messages could not locate the right sort of a pot. He wanted one that looked used, and not a new one recently smoked.

Offered a Reward

The display was made with a gap where the old pot belonged, with a card offering a pair of tickets for the right article. Three women, a man and two boys scuttled away from the window, one coming inside to telephone someone at her home that there was an old pot in the garage. In fifteen minutes a prominent society and churchwoman drove up with a pot that filled the bill and the office was closed before the others could get along. Mr. Larmour says he is sorry he did not let the card remain in longer. He would have given more tickets for the sake of the verbal advertising.

He made his own herald on this attraction by lifting his newspaper advertisement, as he did not like the accessory heralds on this picture.

A Five Nineteens Sold Midshipman

Ninety-five column inches were used for an advance on The Midshipman by the Garrick Theatre, Minneapolis, the space running an inch or two short of a full page drop. This was used the day before the opening. Here full use has been made of the Navy cooperation in both of the selling banks, and in addition to telling of the use of the Naval Academy, mention is made of the employment of an entire destroyer flotilla. The entire space is given the feature except for a small corner in the lower left, where the program features are set into a panel. The best selling is done with the first panel, headed "Romance," with the drawn design as the second strongest appeal. It's a pretty display and a useful one as well. The two do not always come in the same ad. Except from the moral

Clemmer Advances Are Large Spaces

The Clemmer Theatre, Spokane, Washington, takes as much space for an advance as most eastern houses would take for the current attraction. This advance for The Phantom of the Opera is a double six; and a double six is more than some theatres take for a Sunday space. It is all a relative matter, and since the Clemmer uses up to fifteen or eighteen inches over five for its regular displays, this little twelve inch total is relatively small. Up in the Northwest they make their advertising match their mountains. But size alone is not of particular interest. The highlight on this space is the manner in which the campaign for the Phantom is opened. The top ears sound the keynote of the coming campaign in that "A million thrills to thrill millions." This paves the way for all that is to come. The rest is merely the formal notice of intention to present, nicely worded, to get dignity. It would have been better for a large proportion of upper and lower case lines in place of these all capitals, and this probably would have given a little less the appearance of crowding, but the text is well written to gain interest and gets the reader in a proper frame of mind for the larger spaces to come. This investment in twelve column inches will pay for itself in the first large advertisement to follow, for it will bring the reader to the larger space all set. That first large advertisement will not have to serve as its own icebreaker. This pilot ad will give it full force. This is the purpose of any teaser campaign. It gets the reader in a receptive frame of mind for what is to come. Very often a small advance will prove to be the most advantageous investment in publicity of the entire campaign, but this holds true only where the picture is of real importance. It does not pay to do advance work for straight program stuff. The picture must be above the average or the promotion will be out of proportion and react against the picture. More than that, it will hurt the next really big campaign since this, too, will seem to be the cry of "Wolf."

Gives the Underline An Equal Showing

Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, splits the space between Lights of Old Broadway and The Merry Widow, though the latter does not come in until the following week. Evidently it was felt that it was worth a good start and not only was the space halved, but a midnight matinee on Saturday was announced to get the picture off to a flying start. The display is very sightly in its light arrangement, and offers a good model for split week houses which advertise both titles on Sunday. The use of line cuts keeps the space open and readable, and these are much better than small halftones would have been. The arrangement is rather formal, but well balanced, and much display on two titles cannot be looked for in a two five and a halfs. The a midnight matinee was a novelty to be reserved for New Year's Eve, but today it is in very general use, and even if there is a small house the stunt is profitable in the verbal advertising obtained. Get them to the midnight matinee and you have advertised intimately to half the town.

Makes a Special of New Metro Bookings

Displaying the list of new Metro-Goldwyn bookings, the Jackson Theatre, York, Pa., uses a somewhat different layout. When anything smaller than a page is taken, the house generally runs to four or five column widths, but the Jackson takes a two column width and goes right down the page. This seems to have been done to get individual display for the various items, which show up better in the small panels than generally do in a grouped advertisement. This does not make as pretty a display as a lot of better proportioned spaces, but this assuredly gives a better display to a larger number of titles in a given space. The sort of advertisment is common enough in the early season, but this comes in midseason, apparently designed to give emphasis to a new contract. Coming shortly before the Christmas shopping period, it probably helped to overcome the dullness to some degree. The typographical display might have been improved, but at least the less important lines are kept down to give emphasis to the house name, which is repeated in the opening space and a "Jackson Theatre, this year" as a clincher before the eye runs on to the list of underlines. Probably this marks a change in the film service, but even where such a change has not been made, the bulk announcement of a certain brand is a factor for general interest. You will find that people other than the intense fans will note some of the titles which interest them and will ask about them. It pays to jazz things along now and then on general principles.

Universal Singles Are Really Helpful

Universal's art department seems to give more attention to the single column ready-prepared ads than most companies. Perhaps it runs too much to black grounds and reverses in general, and it almost overuses the circular design, but the Universal one column spaces help the man who most needs help; the little man who cannot afford large spaces and who wants to make the most of his inch or two. It also is a help to the city houses that run small through the week. This cut shows the latter use, for the theatre making this display is the Colonial, Indianapolis. However, the cut would look just as well in a small town paper. Universal artists are given to an over-use of black in their efforts to gain display in small space. They do not always realize that small lettering is wholly lost in a single column reverse. It may look all right in the press book, just as it will look all right here—or should—but in a newspaper only "Phantom Opera" shows up. The rest is lost. It does not matter in this instance since the average reader will supply the rest and not even be conscious of the fact, but where a star name or other important fact is to be carried, it would be better to make use of lines instead of masses. The cut is shown here in its original size, taking a space of two and a half inches single. It would seem that the house has supplied Chaney's name in type. Many press departments seem to regard the single column space as unworthy of more than perfunctory attention. Universal has built a large goodwill among the lesser exhibitors through a careful attention to their particular needs.

A Universal Release

A GOOD SINGLE

Sign on a Bank is Better than House

Showing The Pony Express to 400 school teachers in advance of the opening at the Victory Theatre, Tampa, got James B. Carroll classroom announcements that reached the entire school population. He also got some nice letters from the principals.

Two weeks in advance the Citizen's Bank loaned its marquise for a sign 12 by 15 feet with the title in eighteen inch letters. The original copy carried a large "coming," but this was changed to "It is here" for the opening day. "It is here" was adopted as a sort of slogan, being used around the house and on the street car banners. At the theatre the signs read "James Cruze's Pony Express, successor to The Covered Wagon." They were lettered to be read two blocks away.

Lithos, stills, tack cards, heralds and rotos were used in the advance campaign, a music store paying for the rotos in return for the spare space on the back page.

The bank banner was the chief sales factor, for the impression was created that if the bank thought it worth while it must be good. The effect was far better than if the banner had been carried on the house front.

The campaign put the picture over to receipts that were topped only by The Freshman at regular prices.

Why We Pay Out Dollars

EXHIBITORS write us every week and tell our contact-man on the road that they consult QUICK REFERENCE PICTURE CHART footage all the time. That's why we want it as accurate as human effort can make it.

Footage comes first with review, and sometimes after this is published the picture is cut again and we are not notified by the producer.

Nevertheless when an exhibitor takes the time to give us the correct information we send him a dollar to pay him to a slight extent for the trouble he has taken—his interest is too highly valued to be covered by any money payment.

Because of the interest rather than the dollar, exhibitors are constantly watching for unavoidable errors—and telling us when they see them—and we send the dollar wherever a major error is shown—TO MAKE THIS CHART ACCURATE—FOR YOU!

The Note Book

IN a sales book of one of our successful financial institutions I came across a little paragraph which impressed me, as it emphasized the theme which I have been particularly thinking of during the past week.

"Co-operation and harmony are vital. The use of the pronoun "We" and reference to "Our Business" are sure signs of the spirit of co-operation and satisfaction. With this spirit dominating you will continue to go forward. Petty jealousies and spite injure none but him in whose breast they lie. Right here we must quote Kipling:

It ain't the bolts nor rivets
Nor the ship that's on the way,
But the close co-operation
That makes us win the day.
It ain't the individual
Nor the army as a whole,
But the everlasting teamwork
Of every bloomin' soul."

Too often we make our activities singular rather than operate in the spirit of plurality. It seems that the show business always has been infested here and there with certain types of men who obstructed their own progress because they were afraid that some other producer or manager might use some of their well conceived ideas to his gain and their personal loss. What a foolish argument. We are all necessary one to the other, especially in these days when we are trying to develop something that will give us all the success we are striving for, and this success is large enough, and the opportunity is of such proportions, that we all can have our share of it. When there is co-operation, naturaly there is harmony, because these two are linked so closely together. The world is realizing more and more the value of coopreation. Only this week dramatists successfully put over a proposition with the producing managers whereby they would be given the benefits to which they were entitled in their profession. I am not going into the merits nor the discussion of their proposition, but am simply using this as an illustration that cooperation, especially when it is engaged in by men who are thinking and working along the same line get results. Such cooperation is a protection which is a sort of business insurance and that applies to us. With the influx of a certain element into this field it will be necessary for us to ally ourselves more closely, that the traditions of our infant profession, that the efforts which we have expended in developing our business be preserved for us and by us and through us. This cooperation will not come through resorting to a childish reserve and refusing to interchange ideas. It comes by getting together man to man, each working for the good of the other. This does not cost anything, but means much to all of us in every way.

The News Galley

TALBOT BACK ON BROADWAY

IRVIN TALBOT is back on Broadway, where he is musical director of the Rialto Theatre Orchestra. Mr. Talbot has been conductor of the orchestra and general musical director at the Mosque Theatre, Newark, N. J. since the opening of the house in October, and prior to that engagement, and as guest conductor in Los Angeles, was first conductor of the Rivoli Theatre Orchestra in this city. Mr. Talbot has a better opportunity in the new engagement under the Publix banner of using his many talents to advantage. He is recognized as one of the few musical directors who can properly score a picture, and the Publix organization is not only to be commended for engaging him, but we wish him all of success that is due him.

GUS EDWARDS REVUES

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made to the effect that Gus Edwards, well known producer of revues, and "discoverer" of some of the leading stage and screen stars, will present his first revue for Publix Theatres Corporation, "The Garden of Girls" at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, commencing February 14. The revue has a particular Valentine's Day appeal, each girl representing a flower.

IMPROVED FABRIC FOR COSTUMES

A RADIUM silk cloth has been recently placed on the market which the manufacturer claims is splotless to water. It absorbs water, however, and can be washed. It is genuine silk and dyed with tested products. The material is offered in a complete line of various colors and in all qualities.

LONDON PRESENTATION BOOKINGS

FROM London, comes the report, that the Foster Agency have entered negotiations with the William Morris Agency of New York, not only for the exchange of suitable motion picture house attractions, but that a circuit of presentation houses is being organized in England to more adequately handle the bookings.

MUSICAL PERSONALITIES

VINCENT LOPEZ has been engaged as the opening attraction this week at the New Embassy Theatre, Orange, N. J., and will open a week's engagement at the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre on Feb. 20.

Rudy Wiedhoft, well known saxophone virtuoso, is playing an engagement at the Capitol Theatre, New York, being added to the second week program surrounding "The Blackbird" (M-G-M).

The Mail Bag

A. H. WOODS is known by everybody in the show business. A communication has come to us in which the question is put, "What's Wrong With Scenery?" and Mr. Woods presents the angle of the established showman, the man who has adhered to the legitimate principles of production, and we are passing the principal elements of this communication on to you.

"One of the things that drove Shakespeare, Ben Johnson, Beaumont, Lord Fletcher and the other Elizabethean playwrights to drink was the absence of scenery. They'd write these extraordinary plays, full of alarums and excursions, and clothed, as Arthur Hopkins would say, in the most beautiful poetry, and then get a production that would have made the original Provincetown Players tear all the hair they had. It is true that the absence of female players was pretty hard on a fellow like Christopher Marlowe, but the thing that broke their hearts was to have to hang out a sign, "So this is Venice," on a scene that was so good that David Belasco could have made it sound almost as fine as it was written in prose.

"After a time scenery was invented and became quite popular. It was generally adopted in the theatre and the critics accepted it as a matter of course, some of them even going so far as to like it. Then suddenly something happened. Little theatres and artistic managers arose who were dying to produce plays, but who had only $7.70 to start with. Now as scenery and lights are very expensive there was nothing for them to do but to substitute sofa covers, concealed parlor lamps and plush wraps in place of scenic investiture. They even abolished footlights and stuck candles in the wings and flies, gaining thereby such original effects that fortunately the minds of the spectators were taken off the play. By thus distracting the critics from their dramas, the latter were fooled into thinking that these stunts were the last word in art, and in this way modern scenery was invented.

"That's all right for me, because there is room in the world for everything. But what is not all right for me is the fact that realistic scenery has gone out of fashion with the critics, so much so that if you present an interior that looks like a room you are at once accused of debasing public morals and liking Wild West pictures.

"The visible world may be unreal and nothing may exist except in the mind of the beholder. But it so happens that the minds of human beings are accustomed to certain dimensions, shapes and physical realities. What's the matter with reproducing them on the stage accurately and realistically? What's wrong with making a house in Shanghai look like a house in Shanghai?

Has the whole scenic art been reduced to a sheet and a horse blanket?

A Prologue to a "Pathe News" Weekly

Specially Devised for Pathe Exchange, Inc., by Colby Harriman

(A Prologue or Presentation for a Specific Picture to be Published Each Week)

"WHO ever heard or prologue-ing a News Weekly?" We were confronted with this question by an exhibitor, whereupon we replied, "Hasn't it been your experience that a News Weekly is one of the most popular short subjects you ever booked, and don't you prologue and emphasize special subjects?"

To us novelty is the acme of prologue production. With the character of the News Weekly raised to a plane which makes it of general interest to the patrons, we can well afford to emphasize either directly or through the medium of a prologue, our own belief in its value to the regular program. News weeklies are rich in ideas and with the organization such as Pathe possesses, and with this organization's ability to secure the outstanding photographic subjects of the world's news, the producer has a veritable gold mine in which to operate. It is always best to have a "film reason" in your programs, especially in the production of a short subject as part of your stage creation, and one will often find scenes or shots of various peoples in foreign lands and climes which will give the film reason for a stage production.

The idea which we are offering this week strictly emphasizes the news weekly itself. It is a prologue which will be inexpensive to produce, and will prove effective to audiences, as it embraces the elements of novelty plus popular appeal through the medium of the dance.

THE SETTING

The setting is extremely simple in its construction. A sketch of the general stage makeup is offered herewith. The setting consists of (a) a Front Drop with a breakaway opening; (b) a Camera Set Piece; (c) Fabric Backing.

(a) FRONT DROP

The Front Drop should be either painted or covered to give the effect of a maze of newspaper headings. The centre of the drop should be cut in a manner outlined in Diagram B of the Plate of Construction Sketches herewith. The breakaway section should be cut wide enough to permit an opening proportionately capable of properly revealing the camera set piece which is set back of it. The flaps which constitute the breakaway should be reinforced with a heavier canvas. The sections marked (a) and (b) should have a thin wire or cord attached to the corner at the center with each wire or cord extending to a pulley attached to the batten offstage, and at the cue these upper sections to be pulled or rolled up and at the same time the lower sections released by the character appearing in the opening, so that section (c) and (d) will turn down. The lower sections (c) and (d) should be given an extra reinforcement of canvas, and prior to the breakaway they may be fastened with a slipcord. The drop itself may be easily constructed by taking an old drop and pasting newspaper headings or sheets of full newspaper front pages upon the surface of the drop. This perhaps will be more effective than if an artist paints same. The inner part of the flaps for the breakaway should be silvered.

(b) CAMERA SET PIECE

This is the principal unit of the set and it is very simple to construct. In Diagram C there is a general outline of the front and side views of this set piece. A small platform about 4 ft. wide and 6 ft. deep should be placed about 2 ft. back of the breakaway opening of the front drop. A frame should be constructed on the platform consisting of a front piece and two side pieces, with a top piece, thereby forming the box of the camera. The front of the camera piece should be split in the center and hinged so that the characters can enter from the box of the camera during the routine. A handle may be attached to the right side of the camera and the lens may be achieved by a scrim of glazed material to give it a glassy effect. The tripod may be painted on profile or compo-board and cut out and fastened to the front of the platform below the box of the camera. A couple of strips should protrude from the platform which may be camouflaged by the sections of the tripod, particularly the head, to enable the characters to reach the stage from the box. The steps will not be noticeable if treated in this manner, and will eliminate any jumping by the characters. The camera should be constructed in proportion to the characters used, but it is suggested that a 6 x 8 ft. front will prove adequate.

(c) FABRIC BACKING

This should be a metalline material such as flaming gold cloth, the drop hung so that there is a heavy overlap, and characters entering from the back will not be noticed as they enter the camera box until the lights within the box reveal them. There should be a silver cloth backing inside of the box to contrast with the backing of the set.

LIGHTING TREATMENT

The foreground should be flooded with canary, with orange amber to highlight from the sides. The spots overhead in amber and rose may highlight the fabric backing, small strip lights should be placed inside of the camera which work on and off as the various characters are introduced. Use spots of various colors on the characters suitable to their costumes.

THE ROUTINE

After the introduction of the orchestra to the prologue, curtains are drawn revealing the front drop, a huge newspaper effect. The breakaway occurs and a singer dressed as a cameraman, his suit entirely covered with bits of newspapers, jumps from the top of the camera and sings a song which is a parody on a modern tune (we will be very glad to furnish the lyrics for this song upon request), and tells of how he travels all over the world to find his news, and uses this song as a means to introduce various girls of other countries who do the "Charleston" with their national characteristics. For instance, he introduces a girl from Holland who does the Charleston wearing wooden shoes; then a girl from China, dressed in Chinese costume enters from the camera and does it in Chinese fashion; then comes the girl from Ethiopia, then the Eskimo, the Russian, the South Sea Islander and finally the American girl who enters for a whirlwind Charleston finish, the entire group entering into a finale movement of this dance. The camera man grasps ribbon streamers attached to the backs of the dancers and jumping up on to the box appears driving them as the girls are lined up across stage in a fast moving "Charleston." The lights dim during the last movement of this finale as the first title of the news weekly is flashed on the drop and the screen is brought in for the motion picture subject.

A PERSIAN MARKET

Produced by Edward Bowes
Capitol Theatre, New York City

THE most colorful number on the Capitol bill for the current week is the delightful presentation enconsed in a Persian setting, breathing a native atmosphere, and one which carries with it a bit of pantomime well expressed, with Doris Niles and Jack Triesalt as the principal characters. The set represents a Persian market or courtyard, the entire design typical of that part of the world. A large gateway is at center.

On either side are stalls or bazaars in which colorful fabrics are displayed, canopies of striped material are placed above the openings of these niches. Above each bazaar right and left is a balcony, with a practical opening in the one right with a high platform back of it which is used by the soloist in the presentation. A few steps in a unit extend across the center opening and lead to a platform up center. Painted exterior wings mask the center opening. A painted drop depicting a Persian sky line is hung back. Minarets, graceful palms, etc., in colorful scenic treatment against an amber sky.

At the opening of the presentation William Robyn, the solist, appeared in the robes of a Mohammeden ritualist standing on the balcony at right, and sang the "Muezzin's Prayer." Various members of the ballet dressed in the Persian costumes were grouped about the set. At the finish of the song Doris Niles entered as all of the ballet appeared for a general ensemble movement. The male dancer garbed only in a turban and trunks, his body treated with an olive brown, appeared, and after a bit of action did an excellent and appealing number with Miss Niles.

At the conclusion of their dance number the ballet did a spectacular number and left the stage. The male dancer made an exit, Miss Niles appeared, evidently in search of him, was about to turn back in her grief at not finding him when he again appeared, clasped her in his arms, finally picked her up and flinging her over his shoulder made a triumphant exit up center. The curtains closed on the deserted stage. This was an effective bit of direction as the music sounded a vibrant note at the climax which would not have been effective if a single character had been on the stage. Eighteen girls are introduced in the ballet.

COMEDY CARNIVAL

Staged by Shaw-DeRosa
Colony Theatre—New York City

A SWIFTLY moving "Musicomical Revue" is the stage attraction at this theatre as an introduction to the featured picture "What Happened To Jones" (Universal-Jewell). The revue is in three scenes, all of which consist of fabric treatments. The first scene introduces Mignon Hawkes, a sweet little Miss who appears in front of the closeins and recites a bit of a "prologue." She is followed by LeRoy Montesanto who then appears in a clown costume and sings "Smile A Little Bit" which is the theme song of the Revue. The curtains are drawn revealing a dance ensemble of eighteen girls well matched and costumed attractively. They are discovered in an alignment in front of a rose toned drop hung in one.

The costumes consist of a black plush jacket with silver and rhinestone leaves embroidered on it. The short skirts consist of varicolored fringe which hangs from the bottom of the coat. Following the introduction of the dance by the girls Al Lentz and his comedy entertainers (orchestra) are introduced in a very simple but effective setting consisting of a gold fabric hung as a backing with a blue fabric tied over it dividing the backing into five equal sections of alternate gold and blue.

The backing is toned light purple. Grand piano center with the orchestra grouped about it on the stage and on raised platforms covered with checkered material. Two large eight foot basket vases are up right and left of the set. Crnate foliage is in each vase. The orchestra are dressed in clown costumes of light figured material which gives a shimmering appearance. They wear red conical hats.

The orchestra plays several compositions introducing novelty symphonic jazz selections, comedy stunts, dance specialties, all of which met with audience approval. The girls in this scene do two numbers and the finale embraces the entire company. It is not an elaborate revue but it has entertainment value and gets over with audiences. That is the main thing.

MARK STRAND FROLICS

Produced by Joseph Plunkett,
Mark Strand Theatre, New York City

THE new policy of stage presentations has been started on its way by Joseph Plunkett, and if any one doubts the popularity of these splendid stage creations and their value at the box office, they should drop into the Mark Strand Theatre, especially on one of these stormy nights, and try to find a vacant seat. This edition of the "Frolics" is the fourth, and according to a managerial announcement, there will be a new production every week. The productions are costing money, but they are being properly staged, the artists are excellent, the entertainment value is of high percentage, and the big item is—that they are attracting at the box office, bringing in the money.

We made a resolution this year that we would only record the outstanding features of any program, and while we usually find one or two units of particular merit in the average program, the bill this week is excellent in its entirety.

The opening scene is entitled "IDYLL," introducing the Tamara Utgoff Harp Ensemble, six ladies, dressed in Colonial costumes, seated on a platform up stage behind a green scrim drop, with a cut out drop of laced edges forming a frame. At the conclusion of their first number, "Rustle of Spring" (Sinding) the lights dim down on the fabric backing of the ensemble, and the lights in the foreground are slowly brought up, revealing the Mark Strand Ballet of twelve girls, and Mlle. Klemova. The dancers rise slowly from the floor and two numbers are presented, "Brahms Valse" and Delibes Pizzicato. The ballet is costumed in the long, European type of ballet dress, filmy, white, and most attractive.

The second number is an extreme novelty, entitled "Billboard Antics" featuring George Stickney, also playing in a Broadway show "The Monkey Talks." The scene is a street with a backing of billboards, the center one advertising a brand of "Longfellow Cigarettes." Stickney, standing on stilts, with long green trousers, red coat, forms a part of the painted advertisement. He steps from the billboard and does a "Charleston" on stilts. This number made a tremendous hit.

Pauline Miller and John Quilan are next introduced in an artistic cameo setting, a white gate swinging between two large white posts, with a large heart shaped foliage piece forming the archway. The set piece is at center, and black plush drop to back. They give an effective rendition of "Song of Songs" by De Moya.

The final unit is "The Box of Tricks." Edward Albano, as "Harlequin," appears in front of the closeins, sings an introductory song, the curtains are opened, revealing a huge hat box, flanked on either side by pages in uniform. The lower part of the box opens at center, and two dancers enter, first Leonard Workman, then Betty Hale in an eccentric specialty. The Melody Saxophone Sextette are heard, presently the top of the hat box ascends, as the box itself, splits at center and opens flat. The lid is drawn upwards forming a chandelier effect of gold tinsel, with a tinsel background revealed by the interior of the box forming the backing. The sax players, dressed in gay carnival costumes, play a short number, the ballet and dancers, dressed in glittering costumes from an animated background, as the entire company are brought in for a finale brimful of action.

Your Equipment

Service for You ~ Theatre Owner ~ Builder ~ Studio ~ Laboratory ~ Exchange Executive ~ From Your Angle

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

Paramount Sure Does Protect the Print

SINCE beginning this Protect-the-Print campaign, no single phase of such activity has stood out more than the result of a questionnaire sent to exchanges by YOUR EQUIPMENT in an effort to discover exactly how much is being accomplished in this all-important branch of film handling.

Howls in plenty have gone up from exhibitors concerning the rotten prints they have had to jam through their projectors—and the exchanges have "come back at them" with the yell that it's all the exhibitors' fault.

That sort of quarrel never got anybody anywhere. You can't make a man any more self-respecting by calling him a "bum."

It has been the policy of YOUR EQUIPMENT to build up rather than to tear down—to praise the man who's doing much and saying little, because it may happen that this will shame the other fellow into a sense of his responsibility to the industry.

So a questionnaire and letter were sent to exchanges.

They're not all returned yet—but a marvellously prompt and full response came from the Managers of the Paramount Exchanges—and for the thoroughness of the co-ordinated Protect-the-Print effort evidenced, this company is entitled to a lot of credit.

Purchasing Department Deserves Bouquet

No matter how anxious an exchange manager may be to augment his protect-the-print equipment, he is only successful in proportion to the far-sightedness of those in charge of purchases of such equipment.

The thing which has enabled Paramount to grow to its present magnitude seems most to be the ability of its sponsors to choose executives who can look ahead, who realize that having superlative productions is only a part of the business of making pictures—after all, they simmer down to a set of prints, and the men responsible for the future of those prints have evidently been selected as have directors, stars, cameramen, or film editors.

G. M. Spidell, general purchasing agent for Famous Players-Lasky, is a man who has clearly realized that to protect the print he must co-operate with exchanges, give them what they need and the best of everything they use to keep prints in perfect physical condition.

From the letter he writes, as well as from those of the men on the firing line—which are all so good that they are worth all the room they can get in this protect-the-print campaign—it is clear that no move has been made of more signal importance than the installation of Bell and Howell Film Splicing Machines in all the exchanges.

Service Brought to Fullest Value

But of all the letters that came in from Paramount exchanges, the one that stands out most vividly is that from J. L. Harris, of the Boston Exchange.

Mr. Harris doesn't stop at using a perfect mechanical contrivance so as to secure fullest print protection. He goes further—renders a real service to the industry.

He can tell you best what it is—so, let Mr. Harris finish this page with something genuinely commendable in exchange contributions to print protection:

Mr. Harris Does It Up Brown

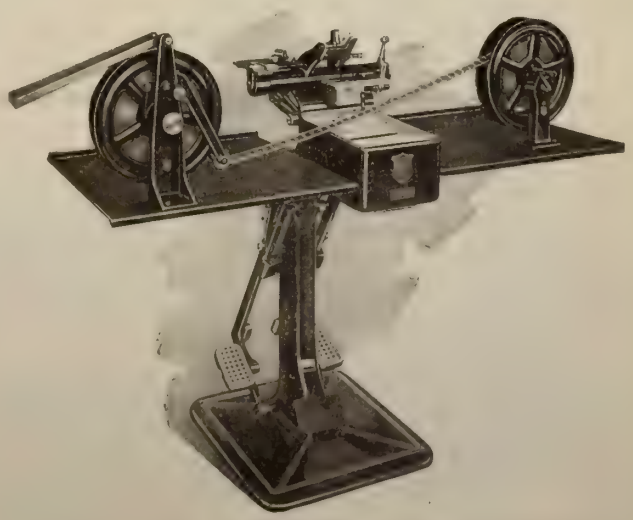
However, in getting the best possible results with these machines, one must follow out other details of film inspection. We, in the Boston exchange follow the method of co-operating with the projectionist. In the past years there always was some misunderstanding between projectionist and the film exchange in handling the film. At present we try and make the projectionist who handles our product part of our organization as they handle the film more in their possession than we do at the exchange.

At present we have overcome some of the bad obstacles we had in the past such as punch holes, large paper stickers, cross scratches and other mutilating practices for signal devices at the end of the reels in order for the projectionist to shift from one machine to the other.

No doubt this is a very destructive practice. In a short time we lost the continuity and action of the film. In most cases the punch of the film is directly at the very ends of the parts.

I can truthfully say in the past two years we cleaned up this situation. At present our film is in remarkable condition. When a film is returned damaged to this exchange we immediately write the projectionist where to locate his trouble according to where film damage registers. Some of our accounts do not know how the film was damaged and don't know what it is all about.

In order to prevent future damage to our production we write to him explaining what to do and in return he is interested to know what caused the damage. This understanding is to our mutual benefit. For your information it is known among the projectionists that Boston office has the best film condition in New England. It is common talk to hear one say, "When you get a picture from Famous Players you don't need to worry."



Bell & Howell Film Splicing Machine with which Paramount Exchanges protect the print.

Paramount Exchanges Respond to Protect-the-Print Questionnaire

Efficient Print Protection Aim Achieved; Branch Managers Backed Up by Home Office; Bell & Howell Splicing Machine Plays Part

IN reply to a letter and questionnaire sent by YOUR EQUIPMENT to Film Exchanges, the Paramount branch managers came in both promptly and handsomely—and since the greatest Protect-the-Print factor in these exchanges has proved to be the installation of Bell and Howell Film Splicing Machines, these letters naturally place emphasis on the performance of this, as one exchange terms it, "miracle of the inspection department."

G. M. Spidell, General Purchasing Agent for Famous Players-Laskey Company, has shown keen interest in YOUR EQUIPMENT'S campaign to protect the print, and this letter voices a general opinion which is borne out surprising in the other letters written independently by the branches.

Mr. G. M. Spidell writes:

"You are indeed to be congratulated on your Protect-the-Print Campaign. Too much thought cannot be given to the care and handling of prints to insure the bigger and better presentation which the industry is striving for daily.

"As a step forward towards this goal, this company has in the past year and a half equipped all of its exchanges with Bell and Howell Splicing Machines, thereby eliminating all hand splicing and insuring delivery of prints with uniformly made splices. Complimentary criticisms which we have received from exhibitors on the condition of our prints since the adoption of the mechanical splicer have been most gratifying. The life of our prints has been increased, thereby enabling us to serve better prints to accounts using older service. Further, the actual work and working conditions in our Inspection Department has been very materially improved.

"The results obtained have fully justified our investment and we feel that the adoption of the Bell and Howell Splicer for exchange use is really the most forward and constructive step we have taken in our campaign for better care in the handling of film."—G. M. Spidell, General Purchasing Agent, Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

"Beg to advise that we are very well pleased with our new Bell and Howell film splicing machines, which were recently installed in our Inspection Room. We feel that these have been very helpful in keeping our prints in the best of condition, and have cut down to a minimum the possibility of bad prints."—Ben Glotcky, Branch Manager New York.

"We are pardonably proud of the condition of all prints in this exchange. The Bell and Howell machines have undoubtedly facilitated the rapid inspection and repair of prints. Splices are absolutely accurate and last longer than those made by hand.

All Prints, New or Old, Are inspected

"All prints, whether new or old, are always carefully inspected upon their arrival in this exchange, before again being shipped

"Replacements in either new or old prints are promptly ordered and the result is that prints on subjects a year old are in just as good condition as prints on the current releases.

"It is seldom, indeed, that we have a complaint from an exhibitor on the condition of film. This we attribute both to the careful methods used in this exchange, also to the fact that the standard of projection machines used in this territory is steadily improving!"—H. E. Pickett, Branch Manager, San Antonio, Texas.

"Relative to the Bell & Howell film splicing machines, we are pleased to advise that since this equipment has been installed, we have yet to receive one complaint as to bad patches.

"Bad patches used to be the one thing that we were in trouble with all the time, and by eliminating them with the Bell & Howell film splicing machines, we naturally reduced the cost of replacing film with a bad patch which was quite often necessary to replace seams that were torn because of bad patches, but this has all been eliminated.

Operating Overhead Cut 20 per cent.

"It may also interest you to know that the operating overhead of our Inspection Department has been cut over 20 per cent. since these machines were installed."—A. Bevan, Branch Manager, Portland, Maine.

"We have, at the present time, three Bell & Howell Splicing Machines that have been in operation since December 30th, 1924.

"Our Inspection Department has been able to do more rapid and proficent work since the installation of these machines than prior to that time.

"We have, since using the Bell & Howell Splicing Machines, also had less damage to our prints. These machines enable us to definitely know how many patches are put in our prints by the various projectionists throughout the territory.

"In connection with the above, I feel that we have been greatly helped by the use of the Bell & Howell Splicing Machines."—Roy E. Heffner, Branch Manager, Oklahoma City, Okla.

"Just a word to tell you that we are enjoying wonderful results from the Bell & Howell Splicing Machine which is a part of our equipment in our Inspection Department at this exchange.

Tends to Lengthen Life of Stock

"It enables us to give the film the proper attention, which tends to lengthen and preserve the life of the stock, and gives a far better quality of film to the exhibitor, even on the older prints. In short—we are extremely pleased with it."—F. E. Wagoner, Branch Manager, Indianapolis, Indiana.

G. M. SPIDELL
General Purchasing Agent for Famous-Players-Lasky Corp.

"We are pleased to advise that the Bell & Howell Film Splicing Machines have proven very satisfactory and more economical, inasmuch as each inspectress can properly examine from 50 per cent. to 65 per cent. more reels daily."—P. A. Bloch, Manager, Philadelphia, Penna.

"We have found that about 70 per cent. of all film trouble lies in bad patches and our Bell & Howell equipment has completely eliminated this and where thirty to forty reels per day was the maximum that could be properly inspected by hand, this has been increased to sixty per girl through the use of these machines and bad prints have been completely eliminated in this exchange."—J. B. Dugger, Branch Manager, Dallas, Texas.

Giving Exhibitors 100 Per Cent. Service

"For your information, I wish to advise Bell & Howell Splicing Machine has eliminated the majority of our trouble on film splices. The work turned out is perfect and the service we are now giving our exhibitors is 100 per cent. This is verified by the many comments we are receiving from exhibitors in the small towns."—H. W. Braly, Branch Manager, Denver, Colorado.

"Please pardon my delay in answering your letter of January 18, as I have been out of town a great part of the time, consequently the delay.

"I believe that the Bell & Howell Splicing Machine is a big improvement on the old way of patching the films. They not only do the work quicker, but better and keep our film in good condition at all times."—M. W. Kempner, Branch Manager, Buffalo, N. Y.

"I want to write you at this time of the wonderful progress made at this exchange by using the Bell & Howell Splicing Machines. These machines are the miracle of the Inspection Department. After using the Bell & Howell machine for two years, our overhead was reduced to a minimum and we are getting 100 per cent. efficiency in splicing."—J. L. Harris, Boston, Mass.

In Step with Progress

To satisfy the seating requirements of the modern theatre calls for resources in production, in engineering skill, and in the art of design, such as only years of concentrated industry and experience can give.

In these respects the American Seating Company has, during recent years, kept pace with the rapid strides made by the Amusement industry. Installations, not dreamed of twenty-five and fifty years ago are today "all in the day's work."

Snappy Buying

YOUR EQUIPMENT likes to report the activities of men astute enough to see the advantages of new installations of the better equipment and to mention the folks who give them real co-operation.

1925 saw a remarkable increase in the sale of Wurlitzer Hope Jones organs in the Kansas City territory, according to N. M. Brodeur, Kansas City manager for the company. At J. W. Jenkins & Sons, Kansas City, S. E. Beatty, manager of the theatre department, had a similar statement concerning the sale of the Reproduco Organ. Fifty-five have been installed since the instrument was introduced last year, Mr. Beatty said.

Reproduco organs have been sold to the following theatres the past week, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. John T. Richardson's Theatre, Olney, Texas.

The Board of Directors of the Ottawa Boys Club, 79 Laurier avenue west, Ottawa, Ontario, has purchased an Acme moving picture projection machine for club purposes and arrangements have been made for the holding of weekly moving picture shows in the club hall on Saturday evenings. Mr. Bradford, representing the Acme people, installed the new machine and operated it for the first show at which there was an attendance of 250 boys.

Walter Reade's New Mayfair Has Carillon Peal of Chimes

WHEN they complete Asbury Park's newest theatre, the Mayfair, and it is ready to open, the occasion will be known to everybody who has ears within reach of the sound of the pealing chimes that will be installed in the tower of the new house.

Walter Reade, owner of the new theatre, plans for which are now completed—and you can see by the accompanying drawing that it's no slouch of a theatre—is already interested in the Walter Reade chain of thirty theatres. But this new house will be the pride of the sea coast, and Mr. Reade will spare no expense in making its equipment the very finest obtainable.

There are to be 1,264 chairs on the main floor, the balcony will seat 936 more, with loge accommodations for 212 more.

The motif of the structure will be Spanish, brick and mauve stucco with azure tile on the outside; the interior in the most gorgeous materials procurable, entirely carpeted, lavishly decorated, vividly, yet pleasingly lighted on occasion, with soft light effects for the picture projection.

Rock crystal chandeliers are arranged for from Black & Boyd, of Fifth Avenue, New York. Kleig spots with five color changes add to the symphonic color possibilities.

Pogany Teicher has charge of the murals and other decorative art effects. Sumptuous divans will add attractiveness in the art lounge, adjacent to which ladies' rooms with individual powder chairs and vanities will be arranged.

All-in-all, the theatre will be worthy of Mr. Reade, as able a showman as you can locate anywhere.

Earlier Decision Affirmed

THREE suits alleging infringement of certain patents involving patent claims on the suit case type projector, brought by the DeVry Corporation against Acme Motion Picture Projector Company, and decided in favor of the latter company last year, were taken in appeal before the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Judicial District. The appeal, which came before the court for hearing in the October term, received a verdict which affirmed the decision of the U. S. District Court in the original action.

The FILM SPLICING MACHINE

Used by All FAMOUS PLAYERS LASKY Exchanges

Famous-Players Lasky have standardized on Bell & Howell Film Splicing machines. In all their exchanges they are experiencing a new efficiency and economy in the care of film.

They realize that the use of the hand splicer is costly, when there is a quicker—better—way to splice the film. Splicing by hand takes times. And time is a big factor in overhead. The B & H Film Splicing Machine speeds up the work. The splice is automatically properly located in relation to the picture frame line and the film perforations. Cutting and splicing is but an instant's work and the film is left as pliable at the splice as at any other point.

A better splice in faster time—higher quality work and a reduction in overhead! B & H Film Splicing Machines have cut the "film care overhead" of the Famous Players Lasky Company 50%. It is doing the same for other exchanges. And what it is doing for others, it will do for you.

Booklet illustrating and describing this dependable, substantial, thoroughly practical film splicing machine will be sent you upon request. If you are interested in a greater efficiency and economy in film care it will pay you to write for this booklet.

Howells Cine Equipment Has a Finer Home For Fine Equipment

New Quarters at 1560 Broadway Look Great; Equipment Gets Its Due in Display Space; Tribute to Ability of Joe Hornstein, et al

COME on over and see our new quarters at 1560 Broadway," phoned Mr. Solomon, for Joe Hornstein, of Howells Cine Equipment Corp. Well, when a chap can sell sixty-five Simplex projectors in one week, he's entitled to consideration, so we yanked ourselves away from a heap of work and slopped through snow and sleet to the Embassy Theatre Building—and—

Gosh! That third floor equipment palace Joe has gone into certainly does give dignity and importance to his displays of fine equipment.

From the minute you walk into the big room with its wide windows letting in plenty of light—Joe isn't ashamed to let his equipment be seen!—you get the impression that there is something more to equipment than just a lot of stuff you have to buy. You realize that it's something manufactured with craftsmanship, finished with pride, displayed with a sense of its value.

Joe Hornstein has been a consistent worker for the cause of the exhibitor, emphasizing the quality that should go into the things an audience doesn't always see but which contribute to his enjoyment of a picture, urging that such things be installed properly and kept in perfect working condition.

His new show-place is one that bears out this idea. The spacious room allows him to demonstrate everything with dignity; his splendid repair room is already a busy spot and the boys working there look not only busy but able as they go at their jobs.

The very impressive offices occupied by Mr. Hornstein and the members of his staff carry out the effect of dignity combined with efficiency.

Take it all in all, you—whether you're an exhibitor looking for the better grade of equipment, or just a chap interested in seeing equipment given its proper importance—will certainly be glad to hand it to Joe for his push and perseverance—qualities that have landed his organization in as fine an equipment distributing environment as we have ever seen.

Better Projection Pays

Supervisor of Projection As Is And As Should Be

A VERY big position made absurd by wrong procedure and the failure of the powers-that-be to realize how much depends upon it.

From a certain man in a certain place, comes a letter of which I quote:

Dear Mr. Richardson: I have just been placed in charge of projection matters of a pretty good size chain of theatres, and am now what I presume is called a "Supervisor of Projection," though no official title was given me with the job.

And say, Rich, I am at a loss as to how I ought to tackle the job in order to get the best possible results. I, therefore, appeal to you to set me straight. Inclosed find my personal check for twenty-five dollars, for which I ask you to write me privately, giving me the right steer. I want to make good, and will do everything possible to do that little thing, but up to date I have not seen much evidence of conspicuous benefit derived from the appointment of supervisors of projection. There was one in this chain of theatres, but he seemed to be merely a sort of "handy man," who chased out when there was motor generator or some other trouble, and fixed it up, which seems to me not to be the right way for a man in such a position to employ his time.

Maybe I'm wrong, but somehow I think the thing ought to be bigger than that, and I, therefore, ask your advice.

Writes of Letter Personally Known to Editor

I have only quoted enough of the letter to let you know what it is all about; also the chain of theatres he means is a pretty big one all right, and the POSITION of supervisor of projection ought to be something very much bigger than that which the good brother rightly describes as a sort of "handy man." The writer of the letter is a man who I personally know to be very good, indeed, in practical projection, and at least fairly well versed in its technique. He is a man who can, I think, make good, always provided he is given a decent sporting chance. That he is willing to expend $25.00 for advice, right off the bat, proves that he takes the matter seriously, and proposes to make a real effort to make something worth while out of it. He takes his new position seriously.

The matter seems to me to be of such importance that I am mailing his check back to him and handling the matter through the department, concealing his identity and location, of course. If any one guesses who he is—as those on the circuit probably will—surely it is to his honor that he has done as he has, and sought advice. Even his employers could not object to that, and only those of small mind will sneer.

Question No. 454—What type fuses are permitted on stage switchboard?

Question No. 455—Give us your idea of the stage switchboard in general. How should switches be marked? How should the board be protected? In short, tell us what you know about stage switchboards and their handling.

Oh, yes, I know that handling a stage switchboard is not the business of the projectionist. I also know that, for several reasons, it is well that you have a good general knowledge of such things.

Question No. 456—Give us your idea of just what the projection room ought to be telephonically connected with, and why.

Question No. 457—Suppose a fire occurred on the stage. What would YOU do? This question is asked not so much to bring out replies as to exactly what you would actually do—which would depend largely upon circumstances—as to cause you to consider the matter, and do a bit of thinking as to what your course of action might be, under your present conditions, in so terrible an emergency.

First of all, my brother, very, very much depends upon how much authority those who have elevated you to the position have placed in your hands. If they have named you "supervisor of projection," but have not given you proper authority, so that your authority and orders will be respected, then the thing is pretty nearly impossible.

Failure to Give Authority Lessens Position

Up to this time there have been two chief difficulties which have operated to make all the positions of supervisor of projection I know of either very largely or at least comparatively ineffective. One is the failure to give the supervisor any real authority. The other is failure to pay salaries in keeping with the importance of the position, hence a failure to induce men to strive to fit themselves for the really BIG things necessary to such a position rightly administered.

As you have said, up to this time the position of supervisor of projection has been treated as a mere "job," and little effort has been made to secure men of high ability who are worth real money, or to make the position one which men of high ability would strive to secure and hold.

Not so long ago, in the Middle West, a very large, important chain of theatres appointed a supervisor of projection. That chain was one which should have a man in that position well worth at least ten thousand dollars a year, which would, I think, have been less than five dollars per week for each theatre of the chain. As a matter of fact a man was appointed at a salary amounting to a little more than half that sum. He was and is a good practical projectionist, but knows very little of theory and in three minutes would be so badly balled up by very simple matters pertaining to projection optics that he would be looking crosseyed. IS THAT COMMON SENSE?

The POSITION of supervisor of projection should be, and rightly handled is a position of large importance, and one which can be made to return larger interest on the money invested as salary than any other one thing I know of in connection with motion picture affairs right now.

You have the position, brother, and assuming that you have the authority, here, roughly, is your line of procedure.

Have an Experimental and Testing Room

First: Have an office and a well equipped experimental and testing room. Oblige all equipment manufacturers who desire to sell their product to you to make COMPARATIVE TESTS. For instance: Right now there are I don't know how many reflecting arc lamps on the market, each and every one of which is "best," if you listen to their maker's or the salesman, or read their pamphlets. You have many theatres which doubtless can use reflector lamps to advantage. All right. Invite the manufacturers of ALL these lamps to be represented at your office on a given date, and make practical demonstration of their apparatus. HAVE THE NEAREST OFFICE OF THE BAUSCH AND LOMB COMPANY, THE GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, THE WESTINGHOUSE COMPANY OR THE NATIONAL CARBON COMPANY SEND A COMPETENT PHOTOMETER MAN THERE, ON THAT DATE, TO READ THE SCREEN BRILLIANCY AND LIGHT DISTRIBUTION OF EACH OF THE LAMPS. The matter is of such importance that you

Bluebook School Answers Nos. 434 to 438

Question No. 434—What is meant by an "inclosed switch" and where is the use of such a switch imperative in a projection room?

There is an excellent bunch of answers to this one. E. Steele, Salt Lake City, Utah; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Sackville, New Brunswick, on stationery of Imperial Theatre, but no name attached (again I ask you to put your full name and address on the FIRST page of your answers, and your name on each page thereof. Answers to questions and letters accompanying them are separated immediately upon arrival, and if we do not then notice that the name is not on the answer we're sunk, because we do not again see that particular answer for from one to three weeks); F. H. Moore, Taunton, Massachusetts; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia; Roy Saxon and John Read, Lufkin, Texas; James Harrison, Arcade Theatre, Georgetown, Ohio; William C. Turk, Mexico, Missouri; L. T. Thomas, San Antonio, Texas; Joseph Robinson, Denver, Colorado, and Frank C. Hirshman, Montreal, Ontario, made good on this one, and on the rest of the series too.

The term "inclosed switch" is used to designate or describe a knife switch which has a housing of sheet metal to protect the live parts thereof from accidental contacts. The handle of such switches protrudes through the housing so that the switch may be opened or closed without disturbing the housing. Of course, strictly speaking, any switch having its live parts inclosed, or even a switch in a metal cabinet, is an "inclosed" switch, but in practice the name or term is applied only to coverings similar to the one I have described.

Inclosed switches are imperative for the projector table switch; also for any isolated projection room switch not inclosed in a fire proof cabinet, though there are presumed to be none of the latter.

A very excellent reply, Brother Hanover, or so it seems to the editor.

Question No. 435—Name one rule it is well to adhere to in connecting inclosed switches, and tell us why it should be thus.

All the above, plus J. T. Schofield, Jacksonville, Florida, made satisfactory answers to this one. Brother Steele says:

Be sure the blades are connected on the load side, and the contact jaws to the line side. Which is short and correct, so far as it goes.

The Sackville man says: It is better to so connect inclosed switches that the blades are 'dead' when the switch is 'open.' The same thing applies to all knife switches, though it is not always possible to so connect them. It is especially important that inclosed switches be thus connected, to prevent trouble should the blades come into contact with the housing when the switch is open.

Right, brother. Of course, switch blades are not supposed to come into contact with the housing. Also a man is not supposed to use swear words when he lambasts his finger with a hammer. In fact he is not supposed to smack his finger with a hammer at all, BUT things 'appen, as the Cockney says, particularly if the conditions are such that a "happen" is invited. Correct your inclosed switches as Brothers Sackville and Steele have suggested.

Friend Budge adds this idea:

When the inclosed projector table switch is in open position the blades should be electrically "dead." Should the connection between blades and cross bar to which handle is attached work loose, the blades might come into contact with the switch covering when the switch is open, and if the blades be "alive" the whole projector would be charged, under which condition it is not impossible to set fire to the film, if the projector ground be not perfect.

Excellent, Brother Budge. Under condition if in removing a reel from the upper magazine, it should touch both the magazine and a conduit pipe or other well grounded metal at the same time, a fine, large, fat spark would result, and as you have said, the film might be made into a rather smoky, fast burning torch. Go wash your ears, friend Budge, and pass up to the head of the class.

Question No. 436—What rule should govern in locating projection room switches and switchboards?

Everyone, plus Charles Oldham, Norwich, Connecticut, answers correctly.

Doe says:

Convenience.

Which is not an answer quite worthy of our Chicago friend. Let him read the reply of Brothers Thoreau and Clark, who say:

The following Underwriters' rules must be strictly observed with relation to switchboards:

(1) Must be so placed as to reduce to a minimum the danger of communicating fire to adjacent combustible material. Switchboards must not be built up to the ceiling. If possible, there must be a space of three feet between the top of the board and the ceiling. The space back of the board must be kept clear of rubbish and not used for storage purposes.

(2) Must be made of non-combustible materials.

(3) Must be acessible from all sides when connections are on the back, but may be placed against a brick or stone wall when the wiring is entirely on the face. If wiring is on the back, then there must be a clear space of not less than eighteen inches between the wall and apparatus on the board. Even if the wiring is on the face it is much better to have the board set out from the wall.

(4) Must be kept free from moisture.

(5) Wires with an inflammable outer braid covering, when brought close together, as at the back of the switchboard, must, when required, each be encased in a tight, non-combustible outer covering.

Flame proofing must be stripped back on all cables a sufficient distance to give the insulation necessary for the voltage of the circuit on which the cable is used.

With the above rules complied with, one might suggest that switches and switchboards in a projection room should be placed where they will be most convenient, everything considered, and if possible where a full view of the screen and stage may be had from a position beside or in front of it.

This latter will, of course, vary widely with the projection room itself.

Of course the Underwriters' rules were not a part of the question, but they fit in very well nevertheless. I left my copy of Underwriters' rules at the summer home, and have neglected to get another for use here in the city. I therefore, have not checked over what Brothers Thoreau and Clark have said, but so far as my memory goes it is correct.

Hanover handles the matter according to what I have no doubt but that Brother Doe had in mind. He says:

The location of projection room switches and switchboards will depend entirely upon the peculiarities of the individual installation. Without entering into a discussion of Underwriters' rules regarding switchboards, they must, so far as these rules will permit, be so placed that a maximum of accessibility and convenience is attained. If the projectionist is to handle all auditorium lighting, then the switches or dimmer controlling such lighting MUST for good results be so located that he may have a view of the auditorium while manipulating the switches or lighting controlls.

If the projectionist does not handle the auditorium lighting, then the location of switches is merely a matter of having them in the most convenient location which local and Underwriters' rules will permit. The question is one which it seems to me cannot possibly be answered in any other way.

Correct, Brother. I think yourself and brothers Thoreau and Clark may place yourselves in the spot at the head of the class and scrap it out to see which remains—and may there be ample supply of arnica, court-plaster and raw beefsteak.

Question No. 437—Should emergency light switches be on the main house switchboard, or where should they be and why?

Brothers Saxon and Read say:

Emergency light switches should never be on the main house switchboard. The Bluebook says they should be either in the box office or in the manager's office, though we personally believe it would give greater protection to the audience were they placed in the projection room, particularly if they be not separately fused, but instead are only fused by circuit and at or near the circuit switch.

It is not an unusual thing, particularly in the smaller theatres, for the ticket seller and the manager, one or both, to leave before the last show is finished. In many instances the manager may leave as much as an hour before the close of the last show. Under this condition if the emergency switches and fuses be locked up in the manager's office or in the box office—well, if an emergency circuit fuse blows, you are out of luck!

On the other hand if the switches and fuses are located in the projection room, they are under control of a man or men who must be and is there as long as a show is on.

Not so bad, but it only answers half the question. With your permission, the editor will himself deal with the matter as he sees it.

There is a certain amount of virtue in what Messrs. Saxon and Read have said. Their line of reasoning is good, but the primary reason for locating the emergency switches off the main house board is because in case of an alarm of fire, some excitable person, an usher for instance, might rush to the main board to light the auditorium and pull the emergency light switches. Excited men or women often do strange things.

Personally, I see no objection, save the length of circuits involved, in locating the emergency light switches in the projection room, except the fact that the projectionist, himself, often leaves before the audience is all out of the theatre, and it would not do to "pull" the emergency lights until the audience is entirely out, since these circuits include all lights left burning while the show is on. Their switching off would leave the foyer, etc., in darkness, which would not do at all until the theatre is entirely empty.

Possibly the location of the emergency switches and circuit in a special cabinet located near the main house switchboard, but entirely separated therefrom might be better than either of the places named. What do YOU think?

Question No. 438—Is it permissible to use single-pole knife switches in theatres?

Doe says:

A single pole switch may not be used as a circuit switch. A circuit must be supplied with a switch which "kills" the same completely when it is opened.

Single pole switches may, however, be used for changing the path of current travel, as in the short circuiting of one of two arcs burning in series, so that the current no longer passes through one, but through the shorting switch instead. They may also be used in connection with rheostats to put additional resistance coils into use, or to cut them out.

A good answer, Brother Doe. A good answer. Tell Tom Malloy, of your city, that I still have a picture of him backing a flivver into a ditch out Gary way, at which time he worked every workable thing on an automobile three times in three-fifths of one second, meanwhile registering alarm, cuss-words and fervent prayer, all at one and the same time. That's once Thomas Malloy, Esquire, was s-c-a-r-e-d, and I can prove it for I have the photo snapped during the performance.

Supervisor of Projection

can well ask your company to pay the expense of the photometer man. Each man must handle his own apparatus in the test and in each case the same screen, voltmeters and ammeters must be used. You thus have the best the showers of the various lamps can make them, and the unbiased, official reading of both brilliancy and light distribution.

This, in general, should be your method of deciding which projection apparatus is the best for your theatres to buy, and you should STANDARDIZE on that apparatus, meaning that if a certain reflector type lamp proves best, ONLY that type should be purchased for such theatres as reflector type lamps will serve, since it is always best not to have a mixed apparatus to deal with in quantity. In case two give like results, then it is merely a matter of service and price, plus excellence of mechanical construction.

Thus, you may, in this room, test all screen surfaces for fade-away, reflective power, etc., as well as many other things. Projectors and motor generators cannot be thus tested. You must study them and draw your own conclusions, backed up by experience as to practical results and replacement costs.

That is one important part of your position and a very important part indeed, but it is ONLY a part.

It is NOT up to you to chase out and locate motor generator, or other trouble, or to fix it. You should have a man or men for that sort of thing. Your job is to SUPERINTEND projection.

You must have full, complete authority over all projectionists, and they must be made to respect that authority. You must, however, be very careful to give careful attention to any complaint made by theatre managers, and to, so far as possible, provide them with projectionists with whom they can "get along" without continual wrangling, remembering that ill feeling or dissatisfaction between manager and projectionist does NOT make for efficiency; also while the theatre manager should not be permitted to dictate projection policy, concerning which he probably knows but little, though he probably imagines that he knows a very great deal, on the other hand he is held responsible for the general conduct of the theatre he manages, and his opinions, even concerning projection policy in that theatre, should and MUST be respected, though not to the extent of giving way to him without a fight where he is wrong.

You should induce your company, if possible, to permit you to in some way offer some substantial reward for consistently good work. This may be in the form of promotion to the better grade theatres, through a bonus or increase in wages, or by such other effective plan as you may be able to evolve. IT IS ABSOLUTELY ESSENTIAL TO THE BEST RESULTS THAT MEN HAVE SOMETHING TO LOOK UP AND FORWARD TO. It might be practicable to once every year hold an examination of all projectionists, offering a really substantial prize to the one who made the best showing therein. Your company could well afford a first prize of two hundred and fifty dollars—for this purpose. You have a lot of men, and believe me they would get a hustle on where there was the possibility of securing one of these prizes.

The men should, however, be made to clearly understand that this particular competition is designed and intended ONLY to stimulate a study of technical matters, promotion and advancement being dependent upon how well BOTH theory and practice be applied in the work itself.

Put more clearly, it should be understood that advancement cannot be expected by either those who do not understand the technical matters, or by those who do not apply them successfully in their work.

It will be a part of your duty to see to it that your theatres receive well inspected and repaired films, and in this you will have your hands full, in all probability, because if you insist on real service, the exchanges will very likely put up a fight against you personally. But unless you are big enough to win these fights, you are NOT big enough to draw the salary I will indicate, or to hold down such a job as I am describing.

Salary for Supervisor Must be Adequate

Oh yes, and as to salaries: I did not mean that all supervisors of projection should necessarily receive $10,000 a year. That would be too high for small theatre chains, but I would certainly not consider anything less than $6,000 as adequate for even the smallest chain justifying the appointment of such an official, and not less than seven thousand for a chain of say fifteen theatres—plus all expenses incurred in the prosecution of the work.

Is that all the duties, you ask?

By no manner of means. The man who receives a real salary has no "eight hour day." He must eat and sleep with his work. Hours mean little to him. One very vital duty is to make periodic UNEXPECTED visits to every theatre in the circuit, at least once every month, examining the projection room for condition of apparatus and general cleanliness and orderliness. At such visits an actual test should be made of the operating efficiency of the motor generator, if one is used, and that reading compared with the last one. Some astonishing results may be shown in low efficiency, due entirely to lack of proper adjustment and care.

A part of your duty will be to oblige every chief projectionist (you should place one of the men in charge as chief in every theatre where two men are employed) to make a detailed report on the first day of every month, on a suitable blank provided, of the condition of all equipment and of all spare parts, carbons, etc., on hand; also a report of film condition at each change of performance.

YOU SHOULD REFUSE TO MAKE ANY PURCHASES OF MATERIAL OR EQUIPMENT, making recommendations only, and should personally, by letter, warn all equipment dealers that if any money, present or anything else of value is "presented" to those making purchases of projection equipment for the firm, the use of their product will be automatically discontinued for the term of one year for the first offense, and permanently dropped for the second offense. This warning should be signed by yourself and countersigned by the president of the company.

Should Hold Regular Meetings

At least four times each year all projectionists should be called together and be given a lecture, either by yourself or by some selected person, on matters pertaining to projection practice and equipment. When some new device comes out it would be well to invite the men to visit your office and examine it, or, if practicable, see it demonstrated.

I might go further, but I think I have told you sufficient. I have tried to indicate what the position of supervisor of projection ought to be, and what I think it eventually will be when those in authority wake up to the importance of the matter, and the foolishness of continuing the present practice of selecting men who, however excellent as "practical" men, know very little about theory or technique in projection matters, and have small respect for the business of motion picture projection as an art or a profession, regarding it very largely as merely a mechanical process.

POWER'S
INCANDESCENT EQUIPMENT

GENERAL ELECTRIC PATENTS

Steadiness

The Incandescent Lamp provides a constant source of light and the intensity of illumination on the screen does not change. The intensity of the lamp itself does not vary and it operates in a fixed position always. Continuous uniformity of screen illumination is assured and the possibility of eye strain is reduced to a minimum.

Simplicity

The projectionist has no adjustments to make during operation and after the initial setting no change is necessary during the life of the lamp. This permits the projectionist to give his full attention to the other details of presenting the picture in the most satisfactory manner which is very essential in view of the growing realization that Better Projection Pays.

Cleanliness

The Incandescent Lamp is a hermetically sealed light source and its cleanliness inspires a general cleaner condition in the projection room.

Economy

The 900 Watt Incandescent Lamp compares favorably with the 40 ampere direct current arc and the advantages from an illuminating standpoint are in favor of the former. Assuming an alternating current source of supply the arc requires 60 volts at 50 amperes, and with converter losses, consumes 4 kws. per hour. The Incandescent Lamp (including all losses) requires approximately 1 kw. per hour. The cost of current consumption is therefore cut to about one-fourth.

Utility

The new Incandescent equipment is used most successfully in theatres having a main floor seating capacity up to 1,000 or having up to a 16 ft. picture and a throw of approximately 100 ft. It gives better results than an alternating current arc and is the equal of the direct current arc up to 40 amperes.

Adaptability

The Incandescent lamp operates equally well on alternating or direct current and with equal illumination.

The arc lamp gives a whiter, steadier, more effective light on direct current than on alternating current. Current supplied to theatres is usually alternating and it is therefore necessary to use an expensive motor generator set to convert to direct current.

Reliability

Power's Incandescent equipment represents eight years' development and exacting practical tests in laboratories and theatres. It is therefore offered as a reliable projection device using the Incandescent lamp as the source of light, not only for theatres but also for schools, lodge rooms, community centers and industrial establishments.

The Return of Peter Grimm

The most widely discussed play that ever hit the boards

Everywhere, newspapers called it "extraordinary" and devoted columns to its theme.

It tells of old Peter — beloved by all — who dies yet lives.

For again and again he comes back — and through the medium of a small child advises and steers those he loves into the realms of happiness.

A mighty thought — a marvelous production.

One of the biggest pictures on the FOX program.

OUR OWN WEATHER REPORT

Following the heavy snow of last week, we have been enjoying a few "April days." Business remains good.

VOL. 78 NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 27, 1926 NO. 9

Bill to "Fire" N. Y. Censors in Legislature

Another Due Soon in the Senate—Current Talk

A bill calling for the abolishment of the New York State Motion Picture Commission has been introduced in the Legislature by Assemblyman Frederick L. Hackenburg, Democrat, of New York City. A similar bill will be introduced this week in the Senate, and every effort will be made to pass the bill during the coming month. If the bill can be passed in the Legislature, it will unquestionably be signed by Governor Alfred E. Smith, who has gone on record time and time again as against motion picture censorship.

The bill provides as follows:

"All records, books, papers and documents of the motion picture commission, on or before June 30, 1926, shall be transferred to the office of the comptroller, who is hereby charged with the duty of winding up the business and affairs of the commission existing on and after July 1.

"This act shall not affect any suit or proceeding pending at the time this act takes effect in which the commission is an interested party, but the same shall be prosecuted or defended, as the case may be, in the name of the state comptroller by the attorney general with the same force and effect as if the chapter 715 of the laws of 1921, had not been repealed. This act shall take effect July 1, 1926."

No sooner was the bill introduced in the Assembly than there began to be speculation in both houses of the Legislature as to its future.

New Competitors

Chicago Loop theatres are up against a new kind of theatrical competition. Their latest competitors are Florida real estate boosters who are advertising free motion picture shows to bring prospects into their offices.

After a little typical motion picture entertainment, scenes of Florida's natural beauties always put in an appearance on the screen. Stress is not laid on scenes of the ocean or Gulf stream.

Foreign Producers Storm America Through a Propaganda Exposition

Continental Europe Combines to Force U. S. Hand by Stressing the Social Angle

By SUMNER SMITH

European motion picture and stage interests have determined to invade the American field through the employment of social "drag" and widespread propaganda conducted by an American advertising man.

Count Etienne de Beaumont, a French nobleman, will soon arrive in this country to cooperate, toward that end, with the Franco-American Society. He will make a play for New York social prestige.

These foreign interests feel that American theatrical men unjustly discriminate against them, and so they are storming the enemy in his own stronghold—New York City—and in a novel manner.

The medium of the propaganda will be the International Theatre Exposition, which opens on February 27 in the Steinway Building, 113 West Fifty-seventh street.

"Films of international value" will thus be introduced into the United States, and it is hoped that a strong popular demand will be created for them.

Though the International Theatre Exposition opens soon, with exhibits of the theatrical art of "the cream of the young artists of the world," its motion picture program will be somewhat in the nature of a dramatic climax rather than an early feature. This phase of the program will conclude the exhibit.

Count de Beaumont will arrange, with the co-operation of the Franco-American Society, a gala exhibit of strictly new foreign motion pictures. Many of these will be of a frankly ex-

Seider Warns of "Screen Leeches" at Brooklyn Meet

Woodhull to Fight "Dyspeptic Minds"

Two alarms to exhibitors were sounded by National President R. F. Woodhull and Business Manager Joseph M. Seider at the eleventh annual installation of officers of the Brooklyn unit of the M. P. T. O. A. at the Hotel Bossert, Brooklyn, on the night of February 10.

The contract victory should not cause a relaxation of efforts but on the contrary should inspire theatre owners to a greater energy in "the battle for their very existence," said the business manager. He added:

"Their system of encroaching upon territory already meritoriously and adequately covered by pioneer exhibitors is being done through no other purpose than for the milching of the industry. The industry must be purged of those who become exhibitors solely for the reason of bleeding our honest members by compelling them for the sake of their very existence to buy up these business-destroying decoys erected by theatre bootleggers."

The M. P. T. O. A. is formulating a drive to eradicate "this dishonorable type of exhibitor," Seider made known.

New Chain

Another chain of theatres has been organized in the Kansas City territory—The American Theatres, Inc., with $500,000 capitalization. Jack Truitt and Lee Jones are at the head of the venture. Several deals for theatres are pending, they announced.

The houses included in the circuit thus far are the Sedalia, Strand and Liberty theatres of Sedalia, Mo., the Grand Theatre of Moberly, Mo., and another new house being built at Moberly.

Five Guilty in Theatre Smash

Five officials of the Consolidated Realty & Theatres Corporation were found guilty in the federal court in Chicago of having used the mails to defraud investors. Two were acquitted.

Frederick Gruenberg, principal promoter of the company, and his son, Frederick Gruenberg, Jr., Oscar H. Olson, C. N. Ortner and E. B. Harang were found guilty and A. F. Brentlinger and James Rohr were acquitted.

Lesser Retires From West Coast Theatres

An arrangement has been perfected under which Sol Lesser will retire from West Coast Theatres, Inc.

Control of this chain of one hundred and sixty-nine houses passes to Abe and Mike Gore, and to a group of First National officials.

Indications point to a complete settlement of the matter, in New York City, on Saturday, February 20.

Mr. Lesser, who has been registered at the Hotel Ambassador in New York City, since January 2, could not be reached, and efforts to locate First National officials in a position to speak authoritatively, proved unavailing.

It is understood that Mr. Lesser will take a long vacation.

Turns Hotel

The motion picture serves the community in which it is located in various ways. It has often in the past proved a ready port of refuge in an emergency.

This was shown again during the recent snow storm when Fred B. Murphy, owner of the Quincy Theatre, Quincy, Mass., turned his house over to the Red Cross, which erected cots and provided sleeping accommodations for many people who could not reach their homes.

Ohio Unit Pays Members' Dues In a Lump Sum

Amount Is $3,500—Membership Now Gratuitous

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Cleveland, February 15.

An executive board meeting of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio was held at the Statler Hotel in Cleveland in accordance with a recent decision that every alternate gathering be held in various cities in the state. At this last meeting, the board voted to uphold the pledge made by Vice-President J. J. Harwood to give $3,500 to the M. P. T. O. A., in return for which the M. P. T. O. A., would count among its members all members of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio.

This pledge of the stage organization to the national organization is in lieu of dues. Not only is this plan of benefit to the M. P. T. O. A. by guaranteeing a lump sum payment, but it is also beneficial to the state organization in its present drive for membership. A gratuitous membership to the national organization is an added inducement to join the state organization.

At the present time the state organization has about 665 members, or 75 per cent. of the total possible membership, according to J. J. Harwood. All are straining to make it a 100 per cent. representation.

It was also agreed at the board meeting to have President William James appoint a committee of Cleveland and Akron members, said committee to consult with the Film Board of Trade of Cleveland regarding changes in the present zoning system. President James has not yet named this commitee.

Ohio Ministers Not All Blue

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Cleveland, February 15.

Another rift in the Sunday closing war clouds which have been hanging ominously over Ohio for several months has appeared. The gentlemen of the cloth holding forth at Cleveland, Ohio, have gotten together for an exchange of views on the Sabbath question, and contrary to all expectations, the situation is not as bad as it is painted. The Sunday blue laws are not supported unanimously by these reverend gentlemen.

The Rev. Ferdinand Q. Blanchard, who occupys the pulpit at the Euclid Ave. Congregational church says: "I think we need some kind of local option law for Sabbath observance, but the people in any city have a right to say what they want in such observance."

The Rev. Joel B. Hayden, of the Fairmount Presbyterian church, rose to remark: "Passing and enforcing laws do not solve the matter. Many of our so-called uplifters merely force an issue until they get a law on the books, and then 'Hosanna' and forget the matter."

"Probably the best way to have the blue laws repealed is to enforce them," is the opinion of the Rev. John Snape, of the Euclid Ave. Baptist church.

Other members of the ministry present voiced similar sentiment.

Raps Blue Laws

The Blue Laws which were adopted when New Jersey had no picture theatres, 127 years ago, are again in the limelight as evidenced by Governor Silzer's latest message as chief of that state. He places himself on record as recommending a drastic modification. It is likely that his successor on January 19, Harry A. Moore, will adopt a similar attitude.

OBITUARY

Walpole E. Ginn, formerly associated with the Goldwyn Pictures sales forces in the Boston territory, died at his home in Flushing, Queens County, N. Y., Saturday, February 6, as a result of pneumonia, after a five days' illness. He was 35 years old. At the time of his death, Mr. Ginn was preparing to go to Florida, where he had extensive real estate holdings. He is survived by his wife and a four-year-old daughter; also a brother, sister, and his parents. The elder Mr. Ginn is attorney for the Packard Motor Car Company.

Roscoe Cochran of Carmi, Ill., owner of the Grand and Strand Theatres, died recently after a long illness. He was one of the pioneer exhibitors of that territory, starting twelve years ago with the Maine Theatre at Carmi.

Harold Filkins died last week at a hospital in Syracuse, N. Y. Mr. Filkins was 32 years of age and was widely known in the Albany territory through his association with the Merit and F. B. O. exchanges as a salesman. He leaves a wife and one small child. Burial was made at Interlaken.

Dinner-Dance of T. O. C. C. Draws Many

Effective Tribute Arranged to Lincoln

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce held its sixth annual dinner dance on Friday evening, February 12, at the Hotel Astor, New York, and the event proved to be one of the most successful affairs of the current motion picture season.

Due to the large attendance, the entire chain of ball rooms were utilized but the general festivities centered about the Gold Room where the parties of Mrs. Alfred E. Smith, Mrs. James J. Walker and the heads of the various state and city departments were seated in the boxes overlooking the great dance floor. Because of his illness, Mayor Walker, who has been closely affiliated with the motion picture activities, was unable to be present as he anticipated.

The early part of the evening was devoted to dancing and Vincent Lopez in person conducted his celebrated Casa Lopez Orchestra, which has been augmented especially for the occasion.

There was a distinct holiday gaiety to be discerned during the entire evening with the exception of the formalities commemorating the birthday of Abraham Lincoln. Shortly after midnight there was a sudden pause in the dancing and quiet settled over the grand ball room at the roll of the drums. A bugle sounded and the lights everywhere were extinguished.

Under the beam of a spotlight, Walter Abel, actor, dressed as Lincoln, recited the "Gettysburg Address." At the conclusion, the Saxe Interests Build House in Madison, Wis.

Milwaukee, February 6.

The Saxe Amusement Enterprises of Milwaukee will erect a $1,000,000 theatre in Madison, Wis., according to announcement made today.

This new amusement palace will be located on State street opposite the new Orpheum Theatre. The Saxe Enterprises have just concluded a deal with the Stanley C. Hanks Co., of Madison for the purchase of a fifty-foot frontage. The property purchased extends through to Henry street, in the rear. This will give the main body of the theatre an area of one hundred and fifty square feet and will allow a seating capacity of 3,000 people.

Saxe Enterprises will affiliate their Madison interests with the local Strand Theatre Company, and the Chris. Schroeder & Son Investment Company of Milwaukee, who are to handle the first mortgage bonds.

Plans for the building are now being drafted by the firm of Raap and Raap, of Chicago.

Wampas Frolic Huge Success

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Los Angeles, February 13.

The fifth annual Wampas Frolic and Ball held at the big shrine Auditorium and staged by Sid Grauman was a huge financial as well as artistic success. The Shrine Auditorium, seating 6,500, was jammed to capacity. According to Ray Leek, general manager of the Frolic, the gross receipts were in excess of $45,000.

The staging of the show was entirely in charge of Sid Grauman. The publicity was handled by George Landy. Everybody who was anybody in filmdom was there. Doug Fairbanks gave an exhibition of his new tennis game. More than 3,000 stood outside the doors unable to secure admission.

At the election of officers held two days following the ball, Pete Smith, publicity manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, was unanimously elected president. This is the first time in the history of the Wampas that any president was elected without another candidate in the field. The installation of officers will be held within the next two weeks with the entire organization going to Mexico en mass to hold the installation services.

On the Exchange

N. L. Nathanson, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, has made application for the listing on both the Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchange of the $4,150,000 first preferred and $7,500,000 common stock, par value of Canadian Famous Players, and the application has been favorably received. it is intimated.

Will Remain Closed

Although the Urbana ordinance against motion pictures on Sunday has been set aside by the Circuit Court here, local theatre owners will not open their houses. An injunction, still in effect, is expected to be set aside in view of the Circuit Court ruling.

Going Abroad

Acting as advance guard for the Pickford-Fairbanks entourage, Robert Fairbanks, general manager of the Douglas Fairbanks Pictures Corporation, arrived in New York from Hollywood with Paris as his destination. He is accompanied by his wife and two small daughters and will remain abroad at least six months.

BIRTHS

A daughter has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Irving Luvisa of Wyandotte, Mich. Mr. Luvisa is the proprietor of the New Star Theatre of that city.

Budd Rogers, vice-president of Lumas Film Corp., is handing out cigars ad. lib. on account of the arrival of a new son who bears the main title of Richard Rogers. The newcomer was literally born into the motion picture industry, with his dad in the business, his uncle, Charles Rogers, a prominent producer; another uncle a Boston exchange man and still another, Saul Rogers, legal counsel for Fox Film Corp.

Illegal Action Seen by Judge in Sunday Case

Special Election Is Banned in Canastota

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)
Buffalo, February 17.

"Disregard of the law has become too prevalent," declares Justice Abraham L. Kellogg in his decision making permanent the injunction he previously granted restraining the holding of a special election in the village of Canastota, N. Y., to determine the sentiment of the people on the showing of motion pictures on Sunday.

There was evidence to the effect that the proprietor of the town's picture house had agreed to stand the expense of the election. It also was declared that someone offered the clerk of the village board $15 to use his favorable influence.

Attorneys declare this decision may have a far reaching effect upon every small town, village and city in New York State where this Sunday picture proposition comes up. The village board of trustees or its governing body, may, by passing an ordinance, allow Sunday pictures, but to submit such matters to the voters is illegal, declares the court, and is an unwarranted waste of public funds, as the vote of the people on the proposition under the law would have no binding force and effect.

A petition was presented to the village trustees by the local picture interests, endorsed by a large number of voters, asking for a public election on the proposition of showing pictures on Sunday. The village counsel declared the election would be illegal. Then an effort was made to force the trustees to call an election, the petitioners offering to pay the expense. The board, by a majority vote, passed a motion to call the special election on condition the expense was paid by the petitioners.

Lindsey Finds Screen More Moral Than Bible

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)
Chicago, February 15.

"All wars, inquisitions, persecutions and crimes may be directly traced to a mistaken interpretation of the Bible," said Judge Ben B. Lindsey of Denver at the fourth annual Motion Picture Conference in this city, on February 11. Motion pictures do not make children go wrong but are one of the greatest forces for good in American life, he declared. His reference to the Bible was in support of this claim.

"I believe the movie is a healthy pastime for youth," he said. "It is a legitimate refuge from the perils of the pool-room and alley. In the movies virtue is always triumphant, while the villain ignominiously bites the dust, which may certainly be called a wholesome lesson.

"In all my twenty-seven years' experience as head of the Juvenile and Family Court in Denver, I have never known one case of a youthful delinquent who was drawn into wrongdoing by motion pictures.

"On the other hand, I have personally dealt with numerous boys and girls who sought to justify their misdeeds by quoting the Bible.

"All wars, inquisitions, persecutions, and crimes may be directly traced to a mistaken interpretation of the Bible. There are more incentives to misdirected passion and immorality in the 'Songs of Solomon' than in all the motion pictures ever produced. And more girls have been led astray on the way home from Sunday school than in four million cinema palaces."

John J. Bausch Dies; Began with $60 Loan

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)
Rochester, February 16.

John Jacob Bausch, founder and president of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, Rochester, N. Y., died on February 14, aged 95 years. He had been confined to his bed for four weeks by the infirmities of age. Up to that time he had kept in active contact with business.

The business of the company, which spreads to all parts of the world, ceased on February 16. Private funeral services were held from the family home. Burial was in Mount Hope Cemetery.

Mr. Bausch leaves his wife, Mrs. Caroline Bausch; two daughters, Mrs. Carl F. Lomb and Mrs. William A. E. Drescher; two sons, Edward and William Bausch; four grandchildren, Mrs. Herbert Eisenhart, Mrs. Joseph F. Taylor, Mrs. Gordon C. Baird and Theodore B. Drescher, and ten great-grandchildren.

Coming from Germany an immigrant and arriving practically penniless in Rochester, Mr. Bausch tried his hand at woodworking, earning the then good salary of $7.50 a week. He married Barbara Zimmerman on October 12, 1840. Then he lost two fingers in a buzz saw and for a time existed on loans from friends, including Henry Lomb.

Later Mr. Bausch entered the optical business, importing lenses and regrinding them to suit his ideas. He also made hard-rubber frames for spectacles. It was about 1853 that he borrowed $60 from Mr. Lomb to extend his business, promising to make Mr. Lomb a partner if the business warranted it. At the outset of the Civil War, when Mr. Lomb enlisted as a volunteer with the army of the Potomac, their assets about equalled their liabilities.

Then Mr. Bausch's lenses began to be in much demand. It developed tremendously after Henry Lomb was mustered out of the service as a captain. The first factory was rented in 1864, a larger one in 1868; then the first building on the present site was erected in 1874.

Captain Henry Lomb died on June 13, 1908.

Contact Bureau Established by the M. P. T. O. A.

Seider Announces Appointment of E. T. Kelly

Business Manager Joseph M. Seider anounces the establishment at national headquarters of the M. P. T. O. A. of a Contact Bureau. Mr. Seider has appointed E. Thornton Kelly as the director. Under Mr. Kelly will be a number of field men who will be subject to assignment to all parts of America.

The establishment of this bureau has long been contemplated by Mr. Seider. Its development, so far as the trade is concerned, however, has been exceedingly rapid since the public intimation of the need of this department was first carried in a Bulletin editorial by Mr. Seider in the February 1 issue entitled "Locarno, Why not in the Motion Picture Industry?"

A few days after the Bulletin had made its appearance came a terse announcement from national headquarters that Mr. Seider had designated Mr. Kelly as his envoy to interview western leaders in the interest of the M. P. T. O. A. Mr Kelly left New York for Chicago and a few days following his absence matters in the contract situation came to a head, necessitating the appearance in New York of many leaders.

As a result of this conference and the adoption of the contract, practically all of these leaders and Mr. Seider came together. In other words, as Mr. Seider describes it, the ambition of the national organization to include every exhibitor in the United States within its fold was materially benefited by this contract conference. Thus, the national business manager recalled his envoy and promoted him to the leadership of the permanent Contact Bureau.

Mr. Kelly is proprietor of the Grant Lee Theatre, Palisade, New Jersey.

Hines Denies

Johnny Hines, First National comedy star, denies this week that he has ever appeared or starred in a production called "The Meal Ticket," which is shortly, according to an announcement, to be released as a re-issue in the state right market by Aywon Film Corporation. Mr. Hines goes on record with the statement that exhibitors purchasing any such film are duly warned that he knows nothing concerning such a production.

Nathan Hirsch, of Aywon, said he will reissue "Tillie Wakes Up," made many years ago and starring Johnny Hines and Marie Dressler.. It has been re-edited and retitled "The Meal Ticket."

Carl Laemmle Leaves For Universal City

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, left New York this week for Universal City, Cal., to supervise production on the Greater Movie List, Universal schedule of big pictures for the 1926-27 market.

The Universal chief was accompanied by his son, Carl Laemmle, Jr. Andre Mattoni, known as the "blonde Valentino of Europe, who has been engaged by Laemmle to appear in Universal pictures, and E. A. Dupont, noted Ufa director, who who is to make pictures under the Universal banner. Hans Winter, a technical expert, also is in the transcontinental party.

Hays' Fire Prevention Work Is Recognized

"Fire Protection," the leading fire prevention magazine, in a recent issue gives high praise to the Hays organization for its work in fire prevention:

"The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., it says editorially, "is now the leading trade organization of the country in point of its efficient supervision of the fire hazards to be found in its industry.

"For several years this organization, under the direction of Hickman Price, has been creating interest among producing and distributing branches on the subject of safeguarding property against fire."

Buy Ohio Chain

Harry Charnas and Jesse Fishman have purchased the chain of picture theatres in Northern Ohio which have been operated by Howard Frankel. These houses include the Windsor Theatre, Canton; Cinderella, Coshocton; Weber, Dover; Ruble, Logan; Majestic, Sidney and Rivoli, formerly known as the Zane, at Zanesville. They also own the Southern and Opera House in Bucyrus.

Harry Charnas is president of the Standard Film Service Company, one of the largest distributors of independent product in the country. Fishman is general manager of the company.

New Jersey Unit Seeks Insurance Rate Supervision

Investigation of Methods May Be Asked

A bill which would empower the Public Utilities Commission to supervise the fixing of the basic rates of insurance was on February 16 introduced in the New Jersey Legislature by Assemblywoman May M. Carty on behalf of the New Jersey M. P. T. O.

President Joseph M. Seider, in making known that his organization has for the past year been been conducting a campaign to secure equitable insurance rates, declared that New Jersey theatre owners will not stop in their efforts for relief in this respect even though it may become necessary to appeal to the Legislature for a statewide investigation into the methods of New Jersey insurance companies. Mr. Seider stated:

"New Jersey theatre owners have for the past year been making every effort to induce the New Jersey Rating Board to bring the basic insurance rates in line with the rates of other states. This the Fire Underwriters' Association, supported by the insurance companies, has failed to do. For over a period of three years the theatre owners in New York City have been waging a similar campaign. Sometime ago a reduction was granted to fireproof theatres which have movable scenery.

"In behalf of the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey I wish to emphasize that the New Jersey theatre owners will not stop their efforts for just relief, even if it becomes necessary to appeal to the Legislature for an investigation of the methods used by the insurance companies in New Jersey."

The bill classifies underwriter associations or bureaus engaged in fixing rates for fire insurance as public utility companies, making them subject to the provisions of the public utility law and giving the Board of Public Utility Commissioners the power to make the necessary rules and regulations.

Jake Wells Leads in Virginia Tax Battle

Richmond, Va., February 16.

Jake Wells, one of the most active members of the Administrative Committee of the M. P. T. O. A., has been designated by the national organization and by his own state unit of Virginia to head a campaign just started in Virginia against a bill which states that on and after July 1, of this year, a 10 per cent. levy on all admissions to picture theatres and legitimate houses in Virginia would become effective.

An immediate penalty of $100 per day would be imposed upon every delinquent for every day following the first fifteen days when the tax is returnable.

Five Guilty in Smash

Thirteen persons were indicted as promoters of the corporation. One pleaded guilty and five obtained severences. The trial lasted more than three weeks, making it one of the longest federal court cases in recent years, and was hard fought by both sides.

The company was declared bankrupt some time ago with liabilities of about $4,000,000 and very little assets. The promoters operated in Illinois and Indiana, with offices in Chicago and at Indianapolis, and more than 6,000 people, including many school teachers, suffered in the smash of the outfit.

An appeal has been taken by the defendants and the appeal action will come up for action in the near future.

Seider Warns

A call to defend the industry from the machinations of "dyspeptic minds" was sounded by President Woodhull. He stated that he would inaugurate a Speakers Bureau at national headquarters which would be eligible to all forceful personalities and convincing speakers in the industry. Such a bureau, national in scope, would stifle an unjust or unwarranted attack upon the industry.

Eighteen Brooklyn officers were inducted into office with the ceremonies presided over by Business Manager Seider. Rudolph Sanders, re-elected president of the Brooklyn group, was presented by Mr. Seider in behalf of the local association with a desk clock.

The officers are: Rudolph Sanders, president; M. S. McNamara, vice-president; Abraham Philips, secretary; Louis Schiffman, treasurer; Meyer Rosenthal, sergeant-at-arms; Eugene Zerner, business manager. Board of Directors: Elias Bernstein, Eugene Zerner, Sam Fisher, Louis Rosen, Ben Idson, Max Pear and Fred Stein.

"Jaydee" Leaves

J. D. Williams, George T. Eaton and Herbert Wilcox of British National Pictures, Ltd., left for London on the S.S. Paris on February 13 to be on the ground during the completion of their new studios at Elstree. Before leaving they registered the incorporation of British National Pictures of New York for the transaction of the English company's American business. C. L. Yearsley is president and treasurer. He will be in charge at the New York office in the Strauss Building, 565 Fifth avenue.

Merger Considered

The merger of the 146 supply companies in the United States into a group of fifty is being seriously considered. The leader in the movement is Harry Dutton, president of the Exhibitors' Supply Company of Chicago, which operates in St. Louis, Milwaukee, Boston, Omaha, Indianapolis, Denver, Detroit and Charlotte. The intention is to reduce operating costs.

Dynamite Safe

Bandits who dynamited the safe of the Columbia Theatre, Columbia, Mo., Monday night escaped with $1,200. The robbery was not discovered until about noon the next day.

John S. Woody Will Produce Bandit Film

Based on Exploits of James and Younger Boys

John S. Woody will engage in production. He has been active for several weeks in the formulation of plans, now consummated, for making a feature based upon the exploits of the James and Younger boys.

A deal has been completed with Robertus Love of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch for the motion picture rights to a book, "The Rise and Fall of Jesse James," which is now being printed by Putnam and which is to be on the market in the near future. The story already has been published serially, through the Thompson Feature Service, in a large number of newspapers, running through thirty-six instalments.

Columbia Buys Western Studio

The announcement of the purchase of the California Studios, located on Gower street near Sunset boulevard in Hollywood, has been made by the executives of Columbia Pictures Corporation. The transaction involves the studio grounds, comprising eight acres with a 350-foot frontage on Gower street, three stages, administration buildings and various producing equipment. The studio is the largest independent plant on the West Coast and one of the most centrally located in Hollywood.

More than $250,000 will be spent for improvements on the property. A modern stage measuring 150x270 feet will be erected and additional equipment will be installed, making the plant one of the most modern and complete in the West. The name of the studio will be known in the future as Columbia Pictures Studio. The company's production activities were formerly housed in the Clune Studios, also in Hollywood, under the name of Waldorf Productions.

Tax Commissioner in Conn. Probes New Law

Hartford, February 6.

Tax Commissioner William H. Blodgett, of Connecticut, recently, for the first time, made examinations of motion pictures to determine whether they are liable to taxation under the "educational" provision in the State law.

The examination took place in the Capitol, here, where a projection machine and a screen were arranged for the showing of the "Scarlet West," a First National picture, and several shorter films.

Foreign Producers

perimental nature, it is said. The chief duty of the Count, it is hinted, will be to enlist the interest of New York society and thus secure great prestige for the exposition. The French have watched with interest the success of the Embassy Theatre in using Gloria's name as managing directress.

The projection of these foreign pictures will not occur in the Steinway Building, because of limited space, but elsewhere. Herr Friedrich Kiesler, director of the exposition, said this week that no place has yet been obtained. It is planned to show about six pictures on three gala evenings — perhaps more. Attempts also will be made to show them in the "ten key cities of the United States."

To these showings will be invited all the prominent men in the American motion picture industry, including the financiers, the directors and the actors. High-powered publicity and strong social pressure will be utilized to force them into attending not only the showings of pictures but also "straight" business conferences—at least, that is the reported intention.

Count de Beaumont, on whose shoulders falls the major part of the responsibility, has contributed to the missionary exhibit what is described as "a short super realistic film without any action and without any cast."

The selected motion pictures are in the main German. One, called "The Street," deals with the sordid aspects of Berlin life. Another, from France, will be "Le Voyage Imaginaire," by Rene Clair. This was described by W. Stephen Bush in Moving Picture World some weeks ago.

The International Theatre Exposition has as organizer, besides Director Kiesler, Jane Heap, director of the Modern Art Gallery, New York City. It claims the support of the Theatre Guild, the Provincetown Playhouse, the Greenwich Village Theatre and the Neighborhood Playhouse.

Herr Kiesler is the inventor of numerous electrical appliances used on the stages of Europe. His "Octophon, a Theatre-in-Space," is a plan of a theatre without any actors. Another feature of the exposition will be a mechanical ballet consisting of ten electrical pianos, four electrical drums and four electrical xylophones.

Herr Kiesler sees both motion pictures and the theatre as having ceased any development, and believes that "Russia in particular, through the liberation by the revolution of its artistic youths, has contributed more than any other country to developing the theatre."

The exposition will be modeled after the Exposition Arts Decoratif in Paris last summer. This exhibited stage settings, motion picture settings, theatrical costumes, masks, marionettes and mechanical appliances.

Morosco Bankrupt

Oliver Morosco filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court, New York, on February 18, admitting liabilities of $1,033,404 and claiming as assets only his wardrobe. Of the liabilities $170,000 is secured. Among the creditors are Famous Players, $75,000, and Peggy Hopkins Joyce, $15,000.

MOVING PICTURE
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

GOING TO THE WHIP—It's a hand-ride, however for exhibitors on "The King of the Turf," which F. B. O. is specially releasing in March for the F. B. O. Month drive.

Looking Through the Box-Office Window

PICTURES are reviewed these days in all sorts of places, in projection rooms, first run theatres, out-of-town try-it-on-the-dog houses, ocean liners, night clubs, the grand ballrooms of hotels. But no matter where they are exhibited for the reviewer, he must never forget that he is looking at them through the box-office window.

We have given the review department of Moving Picture World a name which is indicative of its policy, the only policy by which this trade paper can inform its army of readers on what that army travels—pictures.

Houdini would never make a successful motion picture trade paper editor. Presto! And a department would vanish over night. Much hocus-pocus, but you could learn nothing.

From its earliest days, reviews have been an important feature of Moving Picture World. It seems strange to be talking about an A-B-C essential like reviews. But in the hurly-burly of this business, essentials, which are not all glamorous, are often passed up for non-essentials that are.

There is a demand for all kinds of pictures, just as there is a demand for all makes of motor cars. The important part of a review is not the reviewer's personal opinion of it. It is his analysis of its particular audience appeal.

C. S. Sewell, editor of "Through the Box-Office Window" is a normal human being. He does not suffer from insomnia, dyspepsia, or I-Am-It-Itis, maladies which affect sane vision on pictures. He has been with the Chalmers Publishing for a number of years. He has the Chalmers spirit of loyal service to its readers.

Exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World's reviews are the most informative and dependable in the business. Also the most attractively presented.

"Through the Box-Office Window" is a sensible, helpful auxiliary to theatre operation.

We are rotating all of our service departments so that those who concentrate on one or two of them will get a real idea of how the whole battery goes into action, week in and week out.

In line with this plan, you look with us through the box-office window this week, beginning on page 785.

IRVING THALBERG

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Production Executive:— Assistant to Louis B. Mayer

When Irving Thalberg arrived in New York from the Coast a few days ago, he was given a salute of twenty-one newspaper guns by the metropolitan press, an honor accorded only the highest of dignitaries. Press and public alike were amazed to find this wizard of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios just rounding out his twenties. They could scarcely believe that this young man was one who had his finger on the giant pulse of M-G-M production, one responsible for the greatest number of consecutive hits ever scored by a modern, high-powered production gun. For Thalberg was one who had his finger on the trigger that shot "The Merry Widow," "The Big Parade" and "Ben-Hur" straight into the bulls-eye of unconditional public surrender.

Covarrubias herewith greets Mr. Thalberg with another salute. It is eloquent of the character of this marksman whose personable disposition remains undamaged by success. This characteristic, and Mr. Thalberg's youth shows what is to be expected of the modern picture from the coming production generation. For the picture in general, and for M-G-M in particular.

At the same sitting Covarrubias secured a caricature portrait of King Vidor which we are reserving until his "La Boheme," opening shortly at the Embassy, takes the trail blazed by its splendid predecessor, "The Big Parade."

Be Prepared for "Blame-the-Movies Day"

By Bill Reilly

SUNDAY seems to be "Blame-the-Movies Day" in South Norwalk, Conn. The movement was given quite an impetus recently when the Rev. Andrew F. Chamberlain, pastor of the First Methodist Church, took the pulpit and declared that for the past 25 years the movie has been the universal school of crime.

The Rev. Chamberlain reasons that eighty per cent of burglaries and murders are committed by boys and girls under 25 years of age. It follows that, since the movies are mainly patronized by boys and girls of that age, the picture theatre is a breeder of crime. With little or no trouble at all, we could marshal a formidable set of damning figures against lollipops and ice cream cones, proving that their enormous consumption at the hands and mouths of our folks is responsible for everything from mayhem up.

This kind of pulpit prattle is common. The important thing is to do what was done in South Norwalk. On the Evening Sentinel, published in South Norwalk, is Wendell P. Milligan, its treasurer, and formerly advertising manager of Moving Picture World. "Wen" was undoubtedly instrumental in the Sentinel's publishing, the day following the Rev. Chamberlain's broadside, an answer sent out by the office of Will Hays in the form of an article by Dr. George W. Kirchwey, former warden of Sing Sing, and now head of the department of criminology of the New York School of Social Research.

Dr. Kirchwey said: "Motion pictures furnish a healthy outlet for the natural craving for excitement and adventure that might otherwise be used harmfully . . . In my ten years' experience in dealing with the criminal I have never heard of an authentic case of any person who committed a crime because of the influence of a motion picture. In so far as motion pictures have any direct effect they do not encourage crime, they discourage it. In the motion picture the criminal is never triumphant. The films tell the same moral over and over again—'You can't get away with it! You can't get away with it!'"

That's the real way to answer the movie crime bunk. Get some one to talk back to the bunk artists in the language of authority. And do it promptly, before any fog blanket from the words of a local demigod settles around your theatre. It would pay the exhibitor to get this and a number of other articles from the Hays office, and keep them handy for a foggy day. You can't crack down on a local "reformer" soon enough.

The Sentinel deserves a vote of thanks for espousing the cause of the moving picture so promptly and effectively.

In parting we would like to say to the Rev. Chamberlain that in preaching from or about the letters of Paul it would be a good thing to remember that Paul used the only known forms of human expression to preach his gospel, the spoken word and the written word. And that if the motion picture had been known to Paul, most powerful and dynamic of all the apostles, the Rev. Chamberlain would be preaching on Sundays from a motion picture Bible.

"Bigger and Better Brothels" Is New Stage Motto

LOOKING up and down Broadway, one comes to the conclusion that the legitimate theatre business, in search of a slogan has hit upon "Bigger and Better Brothels" for 1926. With the sub-slogan, "No Stage Complete Without a House of Prostitution." The simple bedroom scene is out of date. The stage is doing "bigger and better things." Our own little Sessue Hayakawa comes back to the stage in "The Love City," set in a "house of joy" in Hong Kong. Then, not to be outdone, "The Shanghai Gesture" places its action in the biggest of all the brothels in the Orient, presided over by one Madam Goddam. That certainly puts it up to the next producer.

Looking Them Over—With Gray Strider

Reviews from the Screen Angle of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

"Puppy Love"

MR. Moving Picture Producer: Just step right up to the Forty-eighth Street Theatre and get busy on Anne Nichols' presentation, "Puppy Love," by Adelaide Matthews and Martha Stanley. You won't have to change a detail. Everything is there—ripe and ready for the screen. All you need is the camera. Your pet scenarist couldn't do a better job than Anne Nichols has done. Those who go prepared to leer remain to laugh. It has all the necessary condiments to excite and amuse movie audiences. It will make a remarkably good picture, it will be a financial success and it's just the kind of thing the public likes. COMEDY RELAXATION. Anne Nichols has done a fine job. She has taken a play which might easily have fizzled into the worst sort of sentimentality and touched it with that rarest and most elusive quality—real sentiment. The cast was thoroughly competent but through every second you are aware of Anne Nichol's headworks. After murderous melodramas and baldy med room plays it goes over BIG. Some picture producer is going to make a lot of money out of this comedy.

"Alias The Deacon"

Samuel Wallach is presenting "Alias The Deacon" by John B. Hymer and Le Roy Clemens at the Hudson Theatre. This old-fashioned melodrama with several original quirks is so cleverly written, so happily acted and so humorously enjoyable that it can't fail to make a successful moving picture. It all centers around a card shark who poses as a deacon, and bountifully fleeces all the unsuspecting lambs within his radius.

The first scene is laid in the interior of a refrigerator car, on a freight train eastward bound from Denver. Four tramps, one the deacon and one a murderer, are playing poker. When the train halts at a small town, the heroine creeps in. A terrible fight ensues to determine which man gets the girl. It's entirely realistic and exciting and from that point on the action of the story never slows down. Through the entire play there is an earnestness, a sincerity which holds the attention. It is thoroughly wholesome, entertaining and sometimes terrifying. Berton Churchill as the Deacon gives a remarkable performance.

This play, if picturized, will make a box-office success.

"No More Parades"

This novel by Madox Ford, is one of the best stories of the year. However, unless it is entirely rewritten it would be impossible to utilize it for screen purposes. It is the war story of an Englishman married to a wanton whom he protects in spite of her common liaisons and positive immoralities.

"The Night Duel"

The Playgoers, under the direction of Edgar MacGregor and Orson Kilborn, are presenting a very dreary bed time story at the Mansfield Theatre, a new playhouse at 47th Street, west of Broadway. It's all about a wife who gives herself to save her husband's honor. Of course, in the last act everything turns out all right, the husband gets another chance and the villain is driven out of town. But it's all so dreary, so dully dreary with about two laughs in the entire performance. It rings intensely of amateur theatricals. It would require heavy padding to make it into a movie story. In its present form it is as stimulating as barley water and soft corn bread.

"Lulu Belle"

David Belasco's presentation of Leonore Ulric as "Lulu Belle" at the Belasco Theatre has provided New York with more excitement than it has had for a dramatic age. It is a lush tragedy with all of Africa's primeval emotions geared up to splitting point. It is the story of a New York negress (or mulatto.) SWEET. RICH. HIGH TAN. She is the personification of animal lust. She lures, loves, dances, wrecks, flatters, steals, lies, and conquers over two continents until she is shot in her gaudy bed in her gaudy French apartment, where as the mistress of a Frenchman and as a dancer and coon shouter she enjoys widespread popularity.

David Belasco has certainly outdone himself in this production. There must be at least 80 in the cast and the settings are gorgeous. The cabaret scene, the prize fight, the negro wedding all glow with color, truth and shimmering, barbaric passion. It's a play for cosmopolities, not a movie for Mr. and Mrs. Everybody.

"Possession"

Notwithstanding the tragedy and unhappy ending of Louis Bromfield's novel "Possession" (publishers Frederick A. Stokes Company) it must receive the serious attention of Screen Producers. This lush book contains too many magnificent characters, too many extraordinary situations, too intense and burning love interests to be overlooked. The union of Lilli Barr, the famous European pianist (in reality Ellen Tolliver from the middle west) and Richard Callendar, the half-American, half-Greek millionaire animal is one of the strangest, truest and most exciting stories I have ever read.

Pola Negri would prove a ravishing Lilli and the movie audience could be happified by some suitable reconciliation of husband and wife after the birth of little Fergus.

"Embers"

Henry Miller's "Embers," translated from the French of Pierre Wolf and Henri Duvernois is unsuited for the screen. This delightfully clever melodrama with its two illicit children is a bit too hot for every day use.

"Rosa"

This novel by Knut Hamsun (publishers Alfred A. Knopf) would be unsuitable as screen material. The Norwegian life and customs portrayed are too broad for American mass consumption.

"The Lion's Skin"

Rafael Sabatini's "The Lion's Skin" is unsuited for the screen. It is an indiscretion of his very young days and consequently immature and extremely amateurish.

"Cousin Jane"

After "Ruggles of Red Gap," by Harry Leon Wilson, his "Cousin Jane" (publishers Cosmopolitan Book Corp.) is most disappointing. No action. Nothing, in fact.

"Mare Nostrum"—Metro-Goldwyn

Rex Ingram Makes Beautiful and Impressive Film Based On Ibanez Story of the Mediterranean Sea

Drama of The Sea

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

ROUNDING out a quartet of big special productions sponsored by the Marcus Loew forces which are being presented simultaneously on Broadway for long runs at advanced prices, and thereby establishing a record, Metro-Goldwyn is offering the Criterion Theatre "Mare Nostrum" (Our Sea) a Rex Ingram production featuring Alice Terry and Antonio Moreno adapted from the novel by the famous Spanish writer Blasco Ibanez the author of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and other notable screen successes.

Deriving its title from the term dating from the Roman era, affectionately applied by those living along its shores to the Mediterranean, "Mare Nostrum" which in English signifies "Our Sea," is a story woven around this great body of water extending from Gibraltar to the Suez Canal lying between Europe and Asia and Africa whose shores through the centuries have been the ampitheatre for many of the greatest happenings in the world's history.

Ibanez has embodied the spirit of this sea and its hold upon its people in the persons of the Ferragut family of Spain, the male members of which for generations had been seafaring men and crystallized it in the characters of Ulysses Ferragut. At the opening of the story we see Ulysses as a lad becoming imbued with the fascination of the Mediterranean. The year 1914 finds him the owner of a fast freight steamer which he has endearingly christened "Mare Nostrum," which because of the huge losses he has sustained he is about to give up.

The outbreak of the World War changes all this and brings almost fabulous wealth for each cargo. A picture of the goddess Amphitrite typifying this sea and known as the sweetheart of the sailors, has always fascinated Ulysses who married without love a shrewish woman of his family's choice and has one son Estaban whom he idolizes. Amidst the ruins of Pompeii he sees a beautiful girl and although he does not recognize until later that it is because she personifies Amphitrite he is strangely attracted to her and falls deeply in love with her. This woman, Freya, an Austrian spy, under orders accepts his attentions and Ulysses becomes so infatuated that he neglects business, family, everything, and to show the depth of his love even pilots a boat to a rendezvous where fuel and supplies are transferred to a German submarine. In the meantime his son Estaban who has come to Naples looking for him, starts back home. A passenger steamer is torpedoed by the submarine and Ulysses learns that his own son was among those who were killed. Stung with remorse he thirsts for vengeance. Freya who has become sickened with her work and is no longer of use to her superiors is sent to France on a mission which means her capture. She sends for Ulysses who comes to her but the memory of Estaban and her responsibility causes him to cast her off. Wholeheartedly he turns over his ship to the French. Freya is executed as a spy and Ulysses' ship carrying troops is torpedoed. With his last shot he sinks the submarine but is himself swallowed up by the sea. Sinking in its depths his spirit joins the spirit of the woman he loved who typified "Mare Nostrum."

Filmed in the actual surroundings in Italy and Spain and on the Mediterranean this production is a pictorial gem with quaint scenes in the old European villages, palaces, impressive remains of a past civilization at Pompeii and beautiful scenic shots, all serving as a vital part as the background of the story and in bringing out the spirit of the theme.

Characteristic of Ibanez' works in "Mare Nostrum" there is a deep underlying note. Here it is really the sea itself and in only a slightly lesser degree the horror of ruthless submarine warfare which claimed as its prey women and children. This idea, Mr. Ingram has effectively transferred to the screen, preserving the power and impressiveness of the theme. His work shows imagination, artistry, finish, great care and infinite detail. Much footage is used in establishing the atmosphere and the earlier reels up to the point where Freya discloses her identity as a spy are largely narrative. With the appearance of the German submarine the dramatic interest quickens and there is tremendous drama in the idea of having the hero being unwittingly a factor in the death of his own son. The same is true of the deaths of Freya and Ulysses, situations which will be totally unexpected by the average movie fan.

Mr. Ingram's treatment of the submarine angle is quite different from other current films dealing with the World War, and not even the films made during the war have shown the Germans in a more unfavorable light. This extends to the type of men portraying these roles, their every action even

"Mare Nostrum" is Wagnerian music bursting upon ears that have been accustomed to jazz. It is new, weird, metaphysical. There is a world of meaning in every foot of it. It is a story of the Mediterranean on whose bosom the first ship was launched; at whose sunny fruitful shores our roughneck Nordic ancestors cast envious eyes; which watched nations rise and fall; which remains changeless, tideless, terrific in fertility and power.

Metro-Goldwyn has in this new Ingram production another great picture. Nothing more compelling has been screened than the execution at point-blank range of Alice Terry, as the German spy, killed according to the ceremonious French Manual of War.

The story of "Mare Nostrum" is one for which the audience must be prepared. Metro-Goldwyn will not make the mistake of assuming that the average American picture-goer gets the message of this production as readily as he assimilates the life of Buffalo Bill.

The promotion of this picture to the public will be forcefully informative, falling under the generic term of educational advertising.

"The Count of Luxembourg"—Chadwick

Colorful Romance of Man Who Fell in Love with His Own Wife—Based on Comic Opera Success

Romantic Drama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

CHADWICK PICTURES CORPORATION is offering on the independent market with George Walsh and Helen Lee Worthing in the leading roles an adaptation of the operetta "The Count of Luxembourg," by Franz Lehar, author of "The Merry Widow," Arthur Gregor directed under the supervision of Hampton Del Ruth.

There is really more of a story to this picture than is usually the case with an adaptation from a comic opera or musical comedy. The plot deals with a proud but impecunious count who, in order to obtain money for an operation for his chum who has been wounded, marries a stage beauty without even seeing her. The idea of this is to bestow his title on the girl so that she may, after securing a divorce as agreed, marry an aged duke who is prohibited from marrying an untitled person.

CAST:

Count of Luxembourg ..... George Walsh
Angele Didier ..... Helen Lee Worthing
Duke Rutzinoff ..... Michael Dark
Secretary ..... Charles Requn
Anatole ..... James Morrison
Juliette ..... Lois Todd
Yvonne ..... Joan Meredith

Based on operetta by Franz Lehar.
Scenario by J. F. Natteford and Arthur Gregor.
Directed by Arthur Gregor.

Chance throws the count and the girl together and he recognizes her by the wedding ring. They fall in love and the duke, believing he has been double-crossed, exposes the scheme. The girl turns on the count but when she learns the reason for his action and that he is to fight a duel with a noted swordsman, secretary to the duke, she goes to her husband and they are finally reconciled and the affair straightened out.

The story moves along smoothly and holds the interest, and while quite improbable, furnishes pleasing light entertainment. Arthur Gregor's direction is good and the picture has been nicely mounted. George Walsh gives a good account of himself in the role of the Count and Helen Lee Worthing is attractive as the girl. The supporting cast is a capable one.

The atmosphere of the picture is romantic and colorful and the action is developed at a brisk high tempo. The duel, the rescue and the reconciliation sequences are nicely handled and "The Count of Luxembourg offers pleasing diversion for the average patron.

"Lovers Island"—Asso. Exhib.

Romance Between Contrasting Social Types Starring Hope Hampton and James Kirkwood

Romantic Melodrama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

AROUND the picturesque tradition of a small seafaring community that requires each girl to visit an island in the harbor with her fiance on the day before the wedding and permits her there at no other time, is built the Associated Exhibitor's production "Lover's Island" starring Hope Hampton and James Kirkwood.

Clemmy Dawson's father is a rough sea captain who is troubled because his villainous mate Sam is seeking to win Clemmy. To save her, Dawson tells her of her mother's defying tradition by visiting Lover's Island with her lover and how he adopted Clemmy. Temptation proves too strong and Clemmy goes to the island, Sam follows and seeks to force his attentions on her. Dawson demands to know the man and Clemmy says it was Avery, visiting the swell colony nearby. Dawson gets Avery and seeks to force him to marry Clemmy, but she saves him and agrees to go to the island with Sam when the truth is known. Avery also goes there and in a fight defeats Sam, taking Clemmy in his arms.

The picture opens with an excellent storm at sea, and Director H. Diamant Berger has nicely reproduced the picturesque and romantic atmosphere of the fishing village. The story is built along lines that are more romantic than convincing, but with the playing up of the contrast between the rugged morals of the sea folk and the jazzy irresponsibility of the wealthy class, together with the pretty Lover's Island will probably prove fairly pleasing especially to the romantically inclined.

Adding greatly to the entertainment value is the fine work of the cast. Hope Hampton is attractive as Clemmy and shows to advantage while James Kirkwood scores in a heroic role as Avery that is more romantic than real. Louis Wolheim is excellent as the hard, rugged father and Ivan Linow makes a fine villain. Flora LeBreton and Flora Finch also give good accounts of themselves.

to the gloating of an officer over sinking the passenger ship and the attempt of another to escape from the submarine by striking down his own men.

"Mare Nostrum," insofar as the human element is concerned, is a tragedy despite the allegorical ending. There are, however, effective lighter moments in the character of the old family cook, a monstrously fat fellow, admirably and amusingly played by Hughie Mack. The story is powerful and impressive. It holds your attention and makes you think, for there is much that is allegorical, with considerable of its meaning and psychology not instantly evident on the surface.

Alice Terry, always beautiful, never looked more stunning than as Freya, and superbly handles this role. Aided by Mr. Ingram's excellent direction she makes this character a continual enigma. There is a strange fascination surrounding this woman, you are never quite sure as to whether she is the goddess personified or merely her physical counterpart, her attitude at times suggests first one and then the other.

Antonio Morena is fine as Ulysses. He handled the role with distinction and presents a striking appearance that will bring flutters to the feminine heart.

Mr. Ingram, presumably in faithfully following the Ibanez story, while he has made his leading characters interesting and human has not attempted to make them sugary or heroic. One does not readily sympathize with a man who, infatuated by a siren, forsakes even an unloved wife and a son or a woman who uses this love for ulterior purposes, although the later repentance of both softens the effect. This, however, does not prevent their story from being interesting even fascinating.

Mr. Ingram has undoubtedly produced a big picture. Technically, artistically, from the standpoint of acting, direction, scenic investiture and in the power of its theme and the sincerity with which it has been transferred to the screen without compromising with the conventional, it is superb.

In its psychology "Mare Nostrum" diverges from many of the familiar screen formulas and it is on the attitude of the masses toward these changes that its general audience appeal will largely depend, for everything else is in its favor. Undoubtedly it will command a large following especially among those who grasp its deeper significance. It is the kind of picture that will be widely discussed and this in itself, as every showman knows, is a box office angle of no inconsiderable value.

POTASH AND PERLMUTTER are with us once again! Abe and Mawruss, Montague Glass' two famous funny Hebrew characters need no introduction to the industry. First they convulsed us with merriment with their experiences in the cloak and suit business, then they caused gales of laughter as motion picture producers in Hollywood. Now, in "Partners Again" their third screen appearance, a United Artists production, they bid fair to again repeat the performance, for it is a comedy whirlwind from beginning to end.

As heretofore, the story interest is slight, serving only as a framework for the clever and inimitable subtitles, laughable gags and highly amusing situations. This time, after severing their partnership they again join forces as representatives for something which as a subtitle states "looks and smells like an automobile." This proves a failure and Abe makes a worse mess in floating a company to handle a new motor which proves to be a fraud. Mawruss helps him make a getaway in his nightshirt aboard an aeroplane. Finally the real crooks are arrested and everything straightened out.

All through the picture there is the snappy scrappy dialogue between this pair for which they are famous, with a laugh in every subtitle. The first big burst of merriment comes when they start to demonstrate a car. It has trouble climbing a steep hill, but finally gets there, minus brake, throttle and other essential mechanism. Then begins a wild ride down hill, onto a half-open drawbridge where the car poises at the edge of the span and finally backs down, landing in a monument works with Abe facing a statue of an angel and believing he is in heaven. This sequence is a scream.

A good comedy pace is kept up through the intervening action and then laughter mixed with thrills are introduced in the scenes aboard the aeroplane. Abe in his nightshirt, suffering with delirium, walks out on a wing with Mawruss after him. He skids across the wing, falls, his nightshirt catches on a hook, finally tears loose and like a parachute he floats through the air and is rescued by his daughter in another plane. Mawruss, believing him dead, weeps, but when he finds him alive they begin their scrapping all over again.

As in the second picture of this series, Alexander Carr appears as Mawruss Perlmutter and George Sidney as Abe Potash. Both are excellent and make the characters thoroughly human and decidedly amusing. Sidney has most of the comedy and his every action is a laugh, at the same time there is strong element of human interest and sympathy for him. The remaining roles are in capable hands, but are of decidedly minor importance, acting as feeders to this pair.

The comedy situations in this picture are not as spontaneous as in the earlier subjects, but there are just as many sure fire laughs. At the Strand there was one continual chuckle during the showing. "Partners Again" will not disappoint those who enjoyed the other two and with its multitude of laughs should provide satisfying amusement for the majority of audiences.

INAUGURATING the new contract by which his forthcoming productions will be released through Pathe exchanges, Harry Carey is being offered in "Driftin' Thru," an entertaining western which should thoroughly satisfy his large circle of admirers. It is the story of a "drifter" framed on a charge of murder, who succeeds not only in clearing his name but in preventing a girl who has aided him from being swindled out of a ranch which is rich in gold.

Drifting through the Southwest, Carey and his pal, a donkey, steal a ride on a freight and are thrown off. He goes to town to get cartridges to kill the injured donkey and gets mixed up in a row between a gambler and his wife and the foreman of a ranch. The gambler is killed, and Carey is accused. He escapes by boarding a train and a girl helps him. He finds refuge with a prospector and learns that the girl owns a ranch and the foreman is trying to get control of it for a small sum, hiding the fact that there is a rich gold deposit. He prevents this scheme and is about to be arrested when the gambler's wife confesses she is the real murderer.

The story starts off at an easy pace but there is good human interest in the affection of the hero for his donkey. With the murder, the pace quickens and there are several actionful situations, the murder, Carey's escape from the posse, his swinging from his horse to a train, the scene where the girl hides him in her drawing room and the fight and rescue of the heroine in the climax, as well of the runaway resulting in the injury to the other woman and her confession.

There is good dramatic tension established that holds the interest and it should prove pleasing entertainment for the average patron. Harry Carey has a typical role that suits him well, and Harriet Hammond is excellent and exceedingly attractive as the girl. The remainder of the cast is entirely capable.

Sparkling, Clever Comedy with Adolphe Menjou and Florence Vidor, Adapted from Stage Play

Romantic Comedy

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

FAIRLY scintillating with bright, clever comedy, "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter" a Paramount production starring Adolphe Menjou, featuring Florence Vidor and directed by Mal St. Clair offers thoroughly pleasing and amusing entertainment for all types of audiences and should especially delight high class patronage.

The bare outline of the story is exceedingly slight and this picture furnishes an excellent example of how an idea that is quite implausible and not expected to really be taken seriously can by clever development, direction and brilliant acting result in excellent entertainment.

A millionaire turfman falls desperately in love with an aristocratic Russian Grand Duchess who is traveling with her entourage. Unable to make her acquaintance otherwise, he swaps jobs with her waiter. He not only proves to be a rotten waiter but becomes rather presumptuous and to teach him a lesson she makes him her personal servant and proceeds to try and humiliate him. Despite herself she falls in love with him and when she learns his identity she flees from Paris. He finds her running a roadside inn, her wealth all gone, and takes her in his arms.

As the turfman-waiter, Adolph Menjou has a role that could not be more ideally suited to him had it been written especially for him. His performance is superb and thoroughly delightful and much of the humor is due to the fact that you never are permitted to lose sight of the incongruity of seeing a polished, sophisticated man of the world performing the services of waiter and personal servant.

CAST:

Albert Durant	Adolphe Menjou
Grand Duchess	Florence Vidor
Grand Duke Peter	Lawrence Grant
Grand Duke Paul	Andre de Beranger
Prascovia	Dot Farley
Henriette	Barbara Pierce
Matard	Brandon Hurst
Blake	William Courtright

Based on play by Alfred Savoir.
Scenario by Pierre Collings.
Directed by Mal St. Clair.

Although the romantic element is never lost sight of, the story has been developed always with the comedy values uppermost. Though some of the situations border on farce there is no slapstick and director Mal St. Clair has kept it in a high-class straight comedy vein. The direction is excellent and exceedingly smooth, one amusing situation melting naturally into the next, so that the merriment is kept up at a consistently amusing level. Though never really hilarious, it is a continual succession of chuckles.

The story itself intrigues the interest by its clever development, at times it gives promise of risque situations which are amusingly sidestepped, and although the high standard of the wit will delight the most intelligent spectators it can hardly be called sophisticated for the humor of the situations and lines can be grasped by anyone.

Florence Vidor gives an excellent performance as the beautiful, courtly and dignified Grand Duchess and the performance of the other players representing her entourage with their pompous and lordly manners add much to the amusement value. There is also some entertaining comedy in the jealousy between the millionaire-waiter's waiter and the hotel waiter. In fact, every situation has been handled so as to bring out the utmost legitimate comedy.

With a clever and amusing story to begin with, coupled with Adolph Menjou at his best and Mal St. Clair's superb direction, "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter" is truly excellent entertainment.

A Section of Samoan Life, Gorgeously Done Will Interest If Not Offered as a Romance

South Sea Study

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

PROBABLY the manner in which this release is offered will determine the success of the individual engagement. In "Nanook of the North," Robert J. Flaherty wove a tenuous romance into the happenings in the Arctic. Many will anticipate a similar treatment in "Moana," a study of the life of the Samoan. Disappointment in this respect may react against the acceptance of the picture.

Moana is not a romance. No effort has been made to inject the slightest suggestion of plot into this result of a two year study of a comparatively virgin island in the Samoan group. Old rites and customs are being crowded into the past on the larger islands of the group and even the natives themselves are rapidly losing number. In time to come this intelligent and faithful transfer of the manners and customs will be of untold value to the ethnologist.

But the average moviegoer is not interested in ethnology and the present question is what the man who passes the box office will get out of the picture. The answer to that is that he will get superb photography, vivid action, no little comedy and for a climax one of the most terrific scenes ever shown on the screen.

Mr. Flaherty has recorded the daily life of the natives, their occupations and amusements. They gather their food and prepare it, they hunt and fish and otherwise conduct themselves precisely as though there was no such thing as a camera. It is this seeming unconsciousness of observation that gives the picture its chief charm.

Moana is the elder son of a Samoan family, with an impish younger brother and a really beautiful sweetheart whose bodice is as short as a flapper's skirt. With the aid of his father he captures the wild boar, spears fish and masters the sea turtle in its own element, holding it underwater until it becomes manageable. These water scenes are not done with any complicated apparatus. The water is so clear that the camera shoots into its depths.

There are some really thrilling scenes as Moana and his father pilot their outrigger through the heavy surf, finally coming to grief on the crest of a particularly large wave, and for contrast the old mother is seen making a skirt of the mulberry bark and coloring it with vegetable dyes.

Nearing manhood, Moana displays his skill at the Siva, the dance in which the gamut of human emotions is depicted in pantomime older than the Christian era, and finally he passes the supreme test.

His body is tatooed with an intricate design, the operation taking some six weeks and being performed with a comb of bone needles struck into the skin by light blows from a rod in the hand of the professional tattooer. No photoplay ever registered such a scene, for it is all real, from Moana's sufferings to the play of expressions on the faces of his family. It may be a little strong for squeamish women, but "tremendous" is the only word that will apply.

Moana is something more than a travelogue, an educational or a scenic. It is a page torn from real life and presented unedited and unamended. It is different and well worth while.

A ROMANCE between a policeman and the daughter of a wealthy contractor furnishes the theme of "The Traffic Cop" in which Lefty Flynn is starred in the title role with Kathleen Myers playing opposite.

Joe Regan, a kind hearted traffic cop has adopted Jerry Murphy, a little orphan. The day before Christmas Jerry is injured by an auto and Joe takes him to a swell sanitarium on the doctor's advice. Alicia Davidson, a wealthy girl, recognizes him and literally falls in his arms when she backs over the edge of the boardwalk. Notwithstanding a jealous rival Phillips who is a snob and finally exposes the fact that Joe is a cop, he wins Alicia's love and the consent of her father who was a former cop. Father celebrates too much and Joe is blamed, but when he makes a daring leap to a runaway bus containing Alicia's party and saves them, everything turns out O. K.

Situations of a familiar type which has proved their audience value have been introduced to a great extent. There is the human interest angle of the affection between the big policeman and the little fellow rendered more touching by the accident at Christmas, the society snob stuff at the sanitarium and the girl's mother who imagines she has all kinds of expensive diseases, the cowardice of the rival and his comic downfall when he jumps into a mud puddle. Finally the thrill climax with the rescue from the runaway auto. There is also some amusing "love" scenes between Joe's little pal and Alicia's tiny sister. Bob, son of a Pittsburgh millionaire, falls desperately in love with her and they marry quickly. Enlarging Boundaries of Showmanship on "The Flaming Frontier"

ACTION PREDOMINATES IN THIS UNIVERSAL STORY of the old West. "Hoot" Gibson is the Pony Express Rider, and Dustin Farnum plays General Custer. Anne Cornwall and Kathleen Key also have strong roles.

"THE FLAMING FRONTIER," Universal's great epic of the West, will have its world premiere at B. S. Moss' Colony Theatre, Broadway and 53rd Street, New York, early in April. The presentation of this Universal super-picture at the Colony Theatre will be one of the high-lights of Carl Laemmle's twentieth anniversary celebration. The exact date of the opening will be announced shortly.

Pronounced by leading educators and prominent members of patriotic associations who have already previewed the picture privately as the greatest production of its kind they have ever witnessed, it is not surprising that Universal plans to make the opening of this film one of the greatest events of the cinema season. Details of the opening will be made public soon.

"The Flaming Frontier" portrays with historic accuracy the vanished days of the old-time West; West Point life in the '70s; the drama of political intrigue in Washington under President Grant, when the vexed "Indian question" was the burning issue of the day; and which culminated, as is shown in the stupendous climax of the picture, in the heroic Custer's Last Stand.

Battle Scenes Supervised By Col. Bryan

Thousands of Indians, of the Sioux and kindred tribes, U. S. Cavalry troopers, scouts and plainsmen, take part in a re-enactment of that historic tragedy when Gen. George Armstrong Custer, the brigadier general of only twenty-three, together with five troops of the Seventh U. S. Cavalry, were slain to the last man by Sitting Bull's bloodthirsty warriors at the Battle of the Little Big Horn on June 26, 1876.

The battle scenes and the military accessories were supervised by Col. George L. Byram, U. S. A. retired, himself, an Indian fighter, and who made the original survey of the battlefield for the report of the U. S. War Department.

Among the leading Indian characters in the battle scenes are Standing Elk and others grandsons of warrior chiefs who took part in the actual battle. Many of the Indians wear the identical costumes of their forefathers, and from the carefully treasured traditions of their tribes they aided materially in the correct presentment of the greatest disaster that ever befell the U. S. Army.

It is also interesting to note that the release of "The Flaming Frontier" commemorates the 50th anniversary of Custer's Last Stand, thus fittingly celebrating one of the most remarkable instances of courageous devotion to duty to be found in all the world's annals of self-sacrificing heroism.

Gibson and Farnum Head Big Cast

Hoot Gibson and Dustin Farnum head the cast of distinguished players. General Custer is gorgeously portrayed by Dustin Farnum, while Gibson impersonates the pony express rider and friend of General Custer. The feats on horseback performed by Gibson are marvelous. Senator Stanwood is brilliantly portrayed by George Fawcett, well known character actor, while his daughter Betty is charmingly done by Anne Cornwall.

Other historical figures include the famous Sioux leader, Sitting Bull, ably played by Noble Johnson; Sam Beldon, played by Ward Crane; Lucretia Belden by Kathleen Key; President Grant, superbly impersonated by Walter Rodgers and Chief Rain-In-The-Face, played by Joe Bonomo.

Others in the featured cast are Eddie Gribbon, Harry Todd, Harold Goodwin, Charles K. French, and William Steele.

The story comes from the pen of Edward Sedgwick, the directorial genius of the film. It was adapted by Edward J. Montagne and Charles Kenyon. Credit for the beautiful photography goes to Virgil Miller.

"Big Four" Productions Now Standing 'Em Up Are "Ben-Hur," "Big Parade" and "Mare Nostrum;" "Merry Widow" Ends Run; "La Boheme" in Embassy

By WILLIAM KARSLAKE JONES

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER hangs up another record! In the office of the Borough President, downtown, Broadway is still Broadway. But in the mind of New York's amusement-buying public it is "Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Alley."

In theatres grouped within a distance of five blocks on New York City's Greatest Amusement Way are four Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer specials. They are "Ben-Hur," in the George M. Cohan Theatre; "The Big Parade," in the Astor; "Mare Nostrum," in the Criterion, and "The Merry Widow," in the Embassy.

Strangely enough, when "The Merry" closes its long run in the Embassy on February 24, "La Boheme," another special on which M.-G.-M. officials set great value, will replace it. Thus, the sequence will remain unbroken.

Lovers of motion pictures, shopping along Broadway during the week of Monday, February 15, found a fifth M.-G.-M. release to choose from, when Major Edward Bowes loosened up with "The Auction Block" in his immense Capitol Theatre. This, however, is incidental.

Not one of "The Big Four" first mentioned is further than three very short blocks from the private offices of Marcus Loew, head of this great producing organization.

King Vidor, who directed "The Big Parade," also directed "La Boheme." This will give Mr. Vidor two big specials running on Broadway next week.

"Ben-Hur" is Playing To Capacity

"Ben-Hur," directed by Fred Niblo, is playing to absolute capacity in the George M. Cohan Theatre, with Ramon Novarro, Francis X. Bushman, May McAvoy, Carmel Myers, Claire McDowell and Frank Currier in the principal roles.

"The Big Parade" was "box office" the moment it hit the Astor Theatre. It is still a sell-out.

"Mare Nostrum," the Rex Ingram production for Metro-Goldwyn, from the story by Ibanez, is a magnet at the Criterion, where it is set for a protracted stay. Antonio Moreno and Alice Terry have the featured roles in this exceptional picture, by which Ingram has further demonstrated his right to eminence in the directorial field.

Jack Gilbert occupies a remarkable position as a result of these showings. He is featured in "The Big Parade" and in "The Merry Widow." But that is not all. When "La Boheme" opens at the Embassy, Gilbert will be found playing opposite Lillian Gish. He is making a new Gilbert fan every minute.

Take another look at Broadway! It has Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer written all over it.

The Criterion Should Be Five Times Its Present Size.

The Embassy Opened Six Months Ago with This Show.

Rowland Signs Barthelmess For Eight Big Productions

Star to Begin Immediately Upon Completion of His Contract With Inspiration Pictures; Title of First Release Not Announced But Is Based On Popular Wor

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES, INC., has placed Richard Barthelmess under contract for eight feature productions to be made within the two years following the expiration of the star's engagement with Inspiration Pictures. He is now producing "Ranson's Folly" and will complete his contract with Inspiration in time to start work for First National in the fall.

This announcement is issued by Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National, who signed the contract the day before Mr. Barthelmess left for the West Coast to start his new production. The contract is in accord with First National's policy which calls for the expansion of production activities including the enrollment of the most popular screen players.

During the next few months, every effort will be made to obtain a strong array of stories for the star. Although the title is not disclosed, it is announced that the first story, a work of world-wide fame, has been selected.

In commenting on the affiliation, Mr. Rowland said: "I have always had the highest regard for Mr. Barthelmess, both personally and as an artist. He has gone far in the past few years since his memorable performance in 'Tol'able David.' But I am confident that with the bigger stories he will do even greater things in the future. I recall no star who has shown greater versatility in interpreting contrasting characters and none who has contributed more to the development of the art of screen acting. I know from my own experience as an exhibitor and from my contact with other exhibitors that Mr. Bathelmess has a tremendous drawing power with the public and that this drawing power is increasing.

"Our relations with Inspiration Pictures, producers of the Barthelmess productions, which we have been distributing, have always been most cordial and continue to be so."

Samuel Spring, secretary-treasurer of First National Pictures, said: "We all feel elated over the acquisition of Mr. Barthelmess as an even closer member of the First National family than he has been during his affiliation with Inspiration Pictures. Everybody seems to agree that Barthelmess is a great actor and that his career during coming years should surpass even the best of his previous accomplishments. First National will offer this star every opportunity to give his best."

Walter Camp, Jr., president of Inspiration Pictures, said:

"Richard Barthelmess has signed a contract to do eight pictures for First National at the expiration of his contract with us. Of course, we have been releasing our Barthelmess' pictures through First National for several years and this realignment was finally decided upon as for the best interests of all parties. The relationship between Inspiration Pictures, Richard Barthelmess and First National has never been more cordial."

Chadwick Completing Productions for This Season

WITH the completion of "The Test of Donald Norton," George Walsh's latest modern action romance, Chadwick is on the last lap of its 1925-26 production program. "Winning the Futurity," a racing special, now in production, will be completed within three weeks. The only remaining picture on the schedule, "The Bells," starring Lionel Barrymore, will be started at the Chadwick studios in Los Angeles shortly.

"The Test of Donald Norton," which was completed last week, is the fifth George Walsh picture of the year. The others of the Walsh series were "American Pluck," "Blue Blood," "The Prince of Broadway" and "The Count of Luxembourg." "The Count of Luxembourg" was released this month. "The Test of Donald Norton" will be released on March 15.

The Chadwick program of the season included two Larry Semon productions, "The Wizard of Oz," and "The Perfect Clown," both of which have been completed and released.

"Paint and Powder," a Hunt Stromberg special production, and Theda Bara's screen version of the Louis K. Anspacher play, "The Unchastened Woman," are two other special productions that have been released. Another special on the program is "The Transcontinental Limited," a February release.

Craft to Direct Bill Cody

Exhibitors throughout the country who have watched the rapid rise of Bill Cody and the popularity of his western picture directed by William Craft, will be glad to learn that that capable director of action pictures has been placed under contract by Associated Exhibitors, Inc., to direct Cody in the series of Western features he will make for them. Announcement that Mr. Craft had been signed was made recently by Emil Offeman, general manager of the Associated Studios, Los Angeles.

First National Plans Expenditure of $11,000,000 on Production Schedule

Forty Pictures Listed to Be Made This Year in East and West Coast Studios; to Be Produced on Big Scale

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES is entering upon the greatest production season in its history. According to Richard A. Rowland, general manager, there will be an expenditure of nearly $11,000,000 on forthcoming pictures to be made at studios on the East and West Coasts.

Approximately forty big productions are scheduled to be made this year in the Los Angeles studios where John McCormick is general manager of production activities. Each will be made on a lavish scale, presenting well-known First National stars and players.

At the Eastern studios, A. L. Rockett and Earl Hudson will make four pictures each, Robert Kane will contribute four more to the program, C. C. Burr plans two pictures starring Johnny Hines following "The Brown Derby" in which he is now working, and it is probable that Richard Barthelmess will make another production in the East following the completion of "Ransom's Folly" now being made in Hollywood.

"Owing to the building of our new studios at Burbank," said Mr. McCormick, "we will, of course, have additional production units which naturally calls for a re-adjustment of our working plans.

"C. P. Butler has been signed to take charge of the erection of the new studios. His new post in our organization is that of business manager and the building of the new plant to house our productions will be under his supervision. Hal Barter, formerly with the Lasky organization, will be associated with Mr. Butler."

According to Mr. McCormick, Dave Thompson will hold the post of production manager with Dan Kelly in the post of casting director. The auditing division comes under the management of A. J. Hughes.

June Mathis will have charge of the preparing of four features during the coming season. The writer is now in the East making plans for the stories she will produce under her banner for First National release.

Also in the East at this time, is B. P. Fineman, formerly general manager at the F. B. O. studios who has been signed to supervise the production of four pictures during the coming season. Mr. Fineman is now making all plans for his unit organization and will be ready to take active hold immediately on his return, scheduled early in March.

Wid Gunning, former magazine editor and recently active in studio production, has been signed to be associated with Mr. McCormick in the production of the Colleen Moore pictures and "all-star" productions that will come directly under Mr. McCormick's supervision.

The forthcoming season will bring to the screen, through First National, Joseph M. Schenck productions, starring Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge. Colleen Moore will provide four big features, the first being "Irene" recently completed. Corinne Griffith will make four productions and Harry Langdon's schedule calls for three feature-length comedies, the first of which, entitled "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," is practically finished.

In addition to the four June Mathis productions, the four to be made under the guidance of B. P. Fineman, four feature-length westerns produced by Charles Rogers and the four features to be supplied by Mr. McCormick's own units, there will be the product of producers directly affiliated with First National including Edwin Carewe, M. C. Levee, Sam Rork, Marion Fairfax and others. Altogether First National's production chart for 1926 is one of the most impressive ever prepared by a producing organization.

The scenario division is separated into various units with many well-known writers and authors working hard to finish stories for immediate production. Among these are Julian Josephson, Winifred Dunn, Adele Rogers St. Johns, Lois Leeson, William Conselman, George Bradley, Jack Fowler, and the scenario staff of the Joseph M. Schenck offices and that of the Sam Rork and Marion Fairfax division.

The First National organization plan to be housed in their new studios early in June. Work is now being rushed on building activities and laying out the many new stages and buildings that will grace the new property.

"Crown of Lies" Is Final Title for Negri Picture

"The Crown of Lies" has been selected as the final title of Pola Negri's new Paramount picture, which Dimitri Buchowetzki directed. This is an adaptation of an original story written by Ernest Vajda. It formerly had been titled "The Peacock Parade" and "Because I Love You."

Good—Hold It!

DORIS KENYON

"Into Her Kingdom" Corrine Griffith's Next Picture

WITH "Mlle. Modiste" nearing completion, Corinne Griffith now plans to start "Into Her Kingdom," her next First National release, the first week in March, according to a announcement made by E. M. Asher, general manager of Corinne Griffith Productions.

Svend Gade will direct and Einar Hanson will play the male lead opposite the star. A strong supporting cast is now being assembled. Mr. Gade is being loaned to Miss Griffith by Universal where he has directed "Siege," "Peacock Feathers" and "Wives for Rent." His assignment to the Griffith production is regarded as an excellent compliment to his genius.

"Into Her Kingdom" is an adaptation of a story by Ruth Comfort Mitchell from which Carey Wilson is writing the continuity. Mr. Wilson has been notably successful with his scripts for "Ben Hur," "His Secretary," "He Who Gets Slapped" and a number of other pictures. He is also preparing the continuity for "Good Luck," the E. M. Asher production starring Conway Tearle.

He was given charge of the Buffalo office and later became District Sales Manager.

After returning to the United States he began a world tour, covering Australia, Japan, China, the Philippines, the East Indies and Egypt. Associated Exhibitors Announces Purchase of Two Big Features

"The Earth Woman" and "The Big Show" Are the Productions Bought; Mary Alden Plays Part of Pioneer Mother in Former; Supported by Prominent Cast

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS, INC., have recently acquired two outstanding features in "The Earth Woman" and "The Big Show" which they feel confident will be declared among the best pictures of 1926. "The Earth Woman" at a recent private showing impressed Associated executives as a real contribution to the world of cinematography.

Its stirring theme plumbs a well of emotion and history hitherto hidden so far as screen presentation is concerned and reveals the vital part played by WOMEN in the days when uncomplaining wives of sturdy men pioneered to carve a mighty nation out of the wilderness that was to be America.

Mary Alden contributes a characterization as a pioneer mother that transcends her many remarkable mother portrayals. She is supported by Russell Simpson, Priscilla Bonner, Johnny Walker, Carroll Nye, John Carr, Hoe Butterworth, William Scott and others.

With the illuminative title of "The Big Show" to attract customers to the box-office and a circus story of certain entertainment value there exists little doubt that the other recently acquired Associated Exhibitors feature will also find a ready welcome with exhibitors and public. It was picturized on the Miller Bros. famed 101 ranch and all the thrills and gayety of circus life finds place in this fascinating story of life beneath the big tent. John Lowell and Evangeline Russell have the featured roles in this picturization of the L. Case Russell story "On with the Show"

Our Weekly Scoop--

SPRING IS HERE!

Exclusively in Moving Picture World this week, we report the advent of Spring. The Associated Press correspondent in Winsted, Conn., had better look to his laurels. He's the bird who reports spring flowers a month ahead of any other correspondent above the Mason-Dixon, not to mention weekly news beats on three-legged roosters, albino blacksnakes, and Siamese-Twin watermelons.

Our go-getting reporter this week is none other than Dick Weil, Director of Advertising for Arrow Pictures. He took out the vernal urge on "The Silken Lady," an Arrow production with Gladys Hulette and Mahlon Hamilton. The poetry thermometer never lies. Retire the red flannels. Spring is here:

"THE SILKEN LADY"

The Silken Lady tripped on lightsome feet a-down the deck,
Her small, proud head held haughty-high upon her swan-like neck.
Her eyes were brighter than the gems which from her fingers blazed,
As languidly she took her place upon the rail and gazed
Down where the steerage passengers, now yon, now hither surged.
Revulsion rose within her breast. By some strange impulse urged,
She tossed a coin to one who, sunk in sodden mis'ry lay;
Undaunted, met his venomed stare—then laughed and turned away.

In Fate's grim book 'twas written that those twain should meet and know—
Together—ev'ry grief and joy which is Man's lot below:
Shipwrecked—the sole survivors—on a savage island tossed
They fought 'gainst countless dangers, —fought when ev'ry hope seemed lost.
Washed clean her soul of all its dross, the while he learned a-new
What woman's comradeship is worth—what woman's love can do.
Came then a day when, peril past and tribulation done,
Hand joined with hand, soul met with soul, and two hearts beat as one.

By all means see this photoplay. Compacted of suspense,
Romance—a lovely interlude—and drama, strong and tense,
'Twill linger in your memory and leave you quite content
And happy in the knowledge of a pleasant hour, well-spent.

Quimby, of Fox Films, Says Showmen Must "Play Up" Their Short Subjects

Points Out That Good Comedies, Regardless Of Whether in Two or Seven Reels, Will Increase Business When Backed Up By Judicious Exploitation

CAN the entertainment value of a motion picture be measured in feet and inches?

Fred C. Quimby, short subjects manager of Fox Films, and a member of the National Laugh Month committee, is one of those who insist that it can not.

Still, it hasn't been so many years since many exhibitors advertised the length of their programs in lineal feet rather than quality. Most of us distinctly recall such advertising phrases as "six thousand feet of thrills" or "nine reels of mystery and romance"—which somehow recalls the late Ezra Kendall's recommendation given his departing cook—"She was the tallest cook we ever had."

Of course that day is past. Time was when movie patrons were not so discriminating. But that was in the day when a quarter would take the whole family to the show. Nowadays it is different. When Mr. Average Man spends from fifty cents to four dollars a head to take his tribe to the cinema, he expects something for his money. He is no longer satisfied with sitting calmly by while eight or ten miles of flickering celluloid passes through the projection machine.

All of which, of course, is beside the point. The burning question which this article started out to discuss was: "Does it pay to advertise short comedies?"

Mr. Quimby believes that comedy part of the program is too lightly regarded by many exhibitors. He points out that the sole purpose of "Laugh Month" was to convince exhibitors that they were cheating their own box offices by neglecting to give the short reelers a fair break in advertising their programs.

It seems a fair statement that at least seventy-five per cent. of exhibitors wind up their ads. with the phrase, "also a comedy." That estimate may not be accurate, but where there is one theatre manager who does mention the comedy portion of his program, there are several times as many who don't. Skeptics may satisfy themselves on this point by a casual reading of the theatre ads in the newspapers.

Every exhibitor knows it would be box office suicide to present a program without comedy, yet few seem to consider it important enough to mention.

It will probably be several weeks before the actual results of the "Laugh Month" campaign are known, but reports from exhibitors here and there who did tie up with it prove that it was a worth while experiment. Many others who stood by and let their competitors do the experimenting are now convinced that they let an opportunity slide past without taking advantage of it.

Whether "Laugh Month" will be repeated in 1927 is yet to be determined. This much, however, is certain: Good comedies, regardless of whether two or seven reels in length, will increase business. But they must be given a chance by judicious advertising and exploitation.

JULIUS SINGER BEFORE AND AFTER "LAUGH MONTH."

Thus do we observe the effects of "January, 1926," on the quiet and unassuming Chief of Universal's Short Subject Department. Smiles, fresh carnations and diamonds fell to the lots of others besides Julius, we are told, when "Laugh Month" was over!

The Amundsen Flight

According to reports reaching Pathe Exchange from its field representatives, the personal lecture tour of Roald Amundsen is doing much to increase the interest in the motion picture log of the expedition, being distributed by Pathe under the title "The Amundsen Polar Flight."

Ralph Graves' Comedy

Ralph Graves is in the midst of another of his hilarious Sennett-Pathe fun-films in which he appears in the bashful youth type of role, supported by Thelma Parr, Marvin Lebach, Thelma Hill, Dave Morris, Patsy O'Byrne and Barney Hellum. Wesley Ruggles is directing.

International Newsreel Obtains Exclusive Sea-Rescue Pictures

Scenes Show Antinoe's Men Being Snatched From Death by Plucky Life-Boat Crew Of the Roosevelt—Big Game Hunter Has Motion Picture Camera

EXCLUSIVE MOTION PICTURES of the rescue of the crew of the British steamer Antinoe by the plucky life-boat crew from the S. S. Roosevelt, the thrilling mid-ocean sea romance now the center of the world's attention, has been obtained by the International Newsreel and speeded to all International Newsreel customers throughout the United States.

The pictures, taken by an expert photographer, are hailed as the most graphic and thrilling pictures ever made at sea. They faithfully record the struggles of the brave Roosevelt men and the mountainous seas which drove the Antinoe to her doom.

It was little short of a miracle that one of the passengers aboard the Roosevelt carried a motion picture camera. He was Lister Carlyle, a big game hunter, on his way to Africa. The negative he took was obtained by International Newsreel through the cooperation of the United States Lines officials.

Through arrangements previously made, representatives of the International Newsreel met the Roosevelt down the bay when she arrived in New York, took the negatives off the ship and rushed them by special cutter to the Newsreel's laboratory, where prints were hurriedly made for Broadway and other showing.

The rescue pictures are being released as a part of International Newsreel No. 15, and although being rushed to all parts of the country by air-mail, fast express and other speedy means, are a part of the Newsreel's regular service to its customers. The pictures, in addition to the rescue scenes, show the honors accorded to the Roosevelt crew in Europe and upon arrival back in New York.

The pictures reached Broadway during the middle of the afternoon the Roosevelt reached New York. They were immediately accorded a featured place on all programs. Major Edward J. Bowes, managing director of the Capitol Theatre, expressed his appreciation to International Newsreel officials, in the following terms:

"It is the most remarkable picture of the sea that I have ever seen. International Newsreel deserves no end of credit for enabling the American public to see the thrilling exploit of the brave men on the steamship Roosevelt."

Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand Theatre, New York, also commended the Newsreel's enterprise, in the following words:

"I am wonderfully pleased with the initiative displayed by International Newsreel in securing this remarkable picture. It is far more thrilling than any story of fiction and occupies a prominent place on the Strand screen."

The rescue pictures were being shown to Broadway audiences while the celebrations and welcoming to the Roosevelt heroes were still going on. The acquisition of these pictures is one of the most wonderful achievements ever scored by a newsreel organization. The decision of International to put these pictures out at no additional cost, and to speed them with the least possible delay to all parts of the country, has met with widespread commendation on the part of exhibitors.

Barbara Luddy on New Fox Contract

As a reward for her good work in the "East Side-West Side" series of comedies in which she is featured, Barbara Luddy has been signed by Fox Films to a new contract which will keep her under the Fox banner for the next three years. Miss Luddy is at present working on the fifth episode of the "East Side-West Side" series entitled "A-1 Society."

Wireless Lizzie Title of New Walter Hiers Comedy

"Wireless Lizzie" will be the title of the Walter Hiers Comedy which has just been completed under the direction of Marle Rodney. This is the comedy which was started several months ago and temporarily suspended when Hiers was injured when the piping of a water tower fell and severed one of his fingers.

The title of the comedy is very appropriate because it revolves around a wonderful invention which directs the wanderings of flivvers by radio. In other words it is not necessary to ride in the flivver to send it various places. This in itself is a great boon. Most of the funny scenes happen when Walter and his girl are in the flivver and it is being directed by the villain who sits gloating on the top of a water tower.

Hiers, Duane Thompson, Jack Duffy, Bill Irving and Lincoln Plumer are the team which get a lot of laughs out of the radio flivver.

GENE "FATTY" LAYMON

The ponderous comedy star is hard at work on the newest two-reeler in the schedule of releases by Tennek Films.

Ed Supple Resigns As Publicity Manager For Pathe

Ed. Supple, who recently resigned as Publicity Manager of Pathe Exchange, has become associated with the Whitman Advertiser's Service, Inc., 1182 Broadway, New York. Prior to his connection with Pathe, Supple was assistant managing editor of Motion Picture News. He joined Pathe in 1923 to write trade and newspaper copy and was subsequently made Publicity Manager of that company.

During the period of consolidation of Pathe and Associated Exhibitors' departmental activities, Supple conducted the national publicity affairs of Associated Exhibitors in addition to those of Pathe, and at the time of his resignation from the latter company was also in charge of the publicity work for Pathex, Inc., the Pathe subsidiary distributing the Pathe camera and projector in America.

The Finishing Touches

Mack Sennett comedy productions now in the cutting and titling stage are, a "Smith Family" domestic comedy, featuring Raymond McKee and Ruth Hiatt, with Mary Ann Jackson, Sunshine Hart and "Cap," the talented canine, in the supporting cast; an Alice Day comedy, directed by Eddie Cline, in which the popular Sennett star is supported by Danny O'Shea, Ruth Taylor, Eddie Quillan and Joseph Young, and a two-reel Sennett players comedy presenting Billy Bevan, Madeline Hurlock, Vernon Dent and Andy Clyde.

Reviews of Little Pictures with a Big Punch

"Pawnshop Politics"

(Fox-Comedy-Two Reels)

A YOUNG Hebrew whose father runs a pawnshop is the leading character in this Fox Imperial comedy. After several amusing gags, including one in which a tough character seems to be holding up the shop but is only selling his gun, Abie sees Kitty Dolan, whose father is running for alderman and it is love at first sight. A rival candidate makes trouble and plants a bomb in the shop but Abie turns the tables on him. Election day finds Dolan's followers too lazy to vote. Abie stirs them up by offering to lick them and then running to the polling place with the mob at his heels. Dolan wins and so does Abie. Among the good gags are Abie's stunts with the bomb and the desk in which it is hidden, the falling of the cart load of vegetables into a poor widow's flat after the explosion, the fight between the rival gangs and Abie and Kitty dancing in and out among their prostrate forms. There are several good laughs in this comedy and it will amuse the average patron.—C. S. Sewell.

"Trimmed in Gold"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

BILLY BEVAN and Andy Clyde are the leading players in this Mack Sennett Comedy which is really a burlesque on western mining melodrama. A western dance hall keeper flashes a roll in an Eastern barber shop and talks so glowingly that the whole crew sets out for the great open spaces. Billy and Andy follow a skunk and find a cave filled with gold and proceed to loose it in a crooked game with the gambler. There are some amusing gags here, including the clever idea of having the boys "gold mine" the treasure vault of the gambler, resulting in his cheating to win his own money. Other good gags are where they think they are in the West and camp for the night, to find in the morning that they are on a busy city street, also where the manicure girl hires a taxi and runs the bill up to the limit when it starts all over, gets out, paying the registered fare of fifty cents. Good burlesque and slapstick comedy that is amusing.—C. S. Sewell.

"Pay the Cashier"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

IN this single reeler featuring Paul Parrott he appears as a boob who enjoys a meal and tries to get away without paying but is forced to work in the kitchen. There are some amusing gags where he tries to catch and kill a chicken and wrecks the place. The best situation, however, is his device to prevent customers in the cafeteria from robbing the boss. He gets a lot of baskets in which the food is placed and locked and he unlocks them to check the amount. This all goes wrong when a fire alarm is sounded and the customers rush out without paying.—C. S. Sewell.

"Mummy Love"

(F.B.O.—Comedy—Two Reels)

NEELY EDWARDS and Alice Ardell are the leading players in this Standard Cinema Corporation comedy directed by Joe Rock and released through F.B.O. Neely is cast as the secretary to an explorer in Egypt and Alice as his daughter. A shiek sees Alice and invites the party to his palace and proceeds to get rid of the male members and add Alice to his harem. Neely with the aid of a negro porter who wins the keys to the castle by shooting craps with some of the colored guards finally manages to locate the mummy vault, and the whole party eventually escapes by disguising themselves as mummies. There is a lot of trap-door and trick stuff and in the mummy cave considerable ghostly and spooky gags and strange happenings that will provide amusement for the slapstick fans. Many of the situations are familiar but there are some new ones and the action keeps up at a good pace, with quite a number of funny situations.—C. S. Sewell.

"Page Me"

(Educational-Comedy-Two Reels)

GOOD, fast-moving comedy has been built around a combination of the tried-and-true situations of a chap who tries to beat his hotel bill and is put to work, and the schemes of a rival to prevent him from marrying the girl to get an inheritance. Bobby Vernon is the star, Frances Lee the girl, William Irving the manager-rival and Bill Valisdell the house detective. The action starts with the attempts of the rivals to outwit each other, then follows Bobby's futile attempts to get away without paying his bill. There are several good laughs in his impersonation of a bell boy in which he uses different disguises. An inventor with laughing gas is also introduced, this causes a fire scare and gets everybody in a hilarious mood. Bobby gets out on the cornice and does a lot of thrilling near-fall stuff along new lines which is amusing and finally there is a chase up and down in the elevator with a clergyman in Bobby's haste to marry Frances, while police and the hotel people are seeking to catch him. There is not a slow moment in this comedy, and the gags and situations are good for a lot of laughs. A peppy and amusing comedy that audiences will like.—C. S. Sewell.

"Ko-Ko's Paradise"

(Red Seal-Cartoon-One Reel)

MAX FLEISCHER eclipses even his usual exceedingly vivid imagination in this animated cartoon in which Ko-Ko, the little clown, and his dog are scared to death when Max begins shooting at a target and almost hits them. Their spirits leave them and they go to Paradise where they develop wings and fly about. Ko-Ko has a time getting a halo to fit but the mutt collects a lot of them. Ko-Ko loses his wings, falls in a pond, emerges on a duck's back and rides down a waterway back into the shooting gallery, and the mutt follows. The dog's paradise is shown filled with bones and there are some clever scenes depicting the heaven that Ko-Ko finds. An amusing number and one of the best of the series.—C. S. Sewell.

"Crowning the Count"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

THERE is a lot of good burlesque in this Century featuring Eddie Gordon, as a hotel guest owing a couple of weeks' rent. The gags are effective. Eddie, when his breakfast is delivered C. O. D., hooks it off the tray with a cane while the waiter knocks at the wrong door. Later, when disaster faces Eddie, he adopts a whiskered disguise and is mistaken for a count by a mysterious stranger. The whole hotel turns out to honor him. The fete has reached its highest point when insane asylum attendants call for the mysterious stranger. Eddie, to escape corporal punishment, pretends also to be insane and the guards take him away. These scenes where he apparently goes "nuts," doing strange dances on the floor, are very funny. The subject will please burlesque-comedy fans.—Sumner Smith.

ALT ALT is the featured player in this Century Comedy in which with a partner he certainly goes through a lurid and exciting lot of experiences. Next they fall prey to an insurance agent and after a lot of other things happen they eventually heed the call of a girl in distress, find themselves in a building where ghostlike forms appear and chase them and trick devices keep knocking them about. In the end, after saving the girl, they find out her father was trying out new initiation apparatus on them. An exciting and fast-moving slapstick comedy.—C. S. Sewell.

The Little Picture With the Big Punch is what has made Laugh Month a big success.

It will make EVERY MONTH—and every show—a success!

Tips on these dependable program stand-bys are always a big help—so shoot them in every time you fill out a report blank. VAN.

SO'S YOUR OLD MAN. (F. B. O. Series). Star, Alberta Vaughn. Good comedy. Fine at box office. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-eight per cent. Mixed class town of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

THIRTY YEARS AGO. (Independent Pictures). This is a very good novelty, giving scenes of the very first pictures made. "The Great Train Robbery" is the best part of the reel. It helped put over "One Way Street" which I played on the same bill. High class and family trade town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

HELLO, GOOD-BYE. (Educational Comedy. Star, Lige Conley. This was a dandy laugh-maker and pleased our crowds to the last one. Helped put over a weak feature for us. Tone and appeal, good. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

HI FLYERS (Educational Hodge Podge). Our last Hodge Podge and find that they are not wanted on our program as our clientele does not like them. Fair appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ADVENTURES OF MAZIE. (F.B.O.-Series). Star, Alberta Vaughn. For the benefit of those who are not running this series I will say they are passing up a good box office bet. Play 'em, they are very good. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Very good appeal. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

AESOP'S FABLES. (Pathe). Best cartoon on the market, have played it for years and found always good. Terry puts a lot of action in them. Neighborhood class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

AFTER BUSINESS HOURS. (Educational Comedy). Star, Lupino Lane. If you don't show this you are missing the most absolutely funny show ever made. Two reels of almost continuous laughs. Educational made a fine job of this comedy. It is fully as good as the two reelers he used to make for Fox. Remember his work in "The Friendly Husband" for Fox. It broke our comedy records. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

CRUSHED. (Educational Comedy). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. This was the second time we played it and it pleased everybody. It is one of his best comedies. Tone and appeal, good. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

FAST COMPANY. (Pathe Comedy). "Our Gang." Just another Gang comedy. The kids get mixed up in a fashionable hotel and try to razz it with more or less unhappy results. It's good for the kind of audience that likes it. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

CHASING THE CHASER. (Pathe Comedy). A good one reel comedy although it's vulgar. Why can't they make a good comedy without showing a man chasing a girl's leg; that's not necessary. All classes. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FOX NEWS NO. 17. (Fox). This is a nice news subject. Very interesting throughout. Tone, good. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

Newspaper Reviewers According More Space to Short Subjects

ONE of the purposes for which the Short Features Advertising Association was organized was to encourage more constructive criticism in the review columns of the daily press on Short Features.

This point was very plainly brought out by R. F. Woodhull, President of the M. P. T. O. A., chief speaker at the luncheon tendered to newspapermen at the start of Laugh Month activities, and now, at the conclusion of the campaign, it is interesting to note that the results were very much worth while, since the newspaper criticism of Short Features have shown a pronounced increase.

In the Cleveland Plain Dealer there appeared, on the last day of January, an unusually lengthy and comprehensive review of Short Features by W. Ward Marsh, one of the best known critics in the country. Mr. Marsh's article occupied two columns, and was entirely devoted to a discourse on recent Educational releases.

Starting off with the comment that "Unusual progress in color photography will be noted when Hope Hampton in 'Parisian Modes In Colour' is released here," Mr. Marsh continued his references to color films by saying:

"I have seen 'Parisian Modes in Colour' and also another short picture called 'Marionettes', featuring Miss Hampton and done entirely in color.

"'Parisian Modes' is sponsored by McCall's Magazine and bears the label of 'McCall Colour Fashion News,' and it features the latest styles from the shops of Poiret, Armand, Drecoll, Gaston and other famous Parisian designers.

"It should prove a delight to the feminine eye. It is what may be called the last word in a fashion revue. I didn't count the number of different gowns, coats, etc., which Miss Hampton wears in the film, but there are enough of them to furnish a topic for the 'club' for a couple of weeks.

"This is released through Educational. And for that matter so are the 'Marionettes'. This short subject—exquisitely colored—deals with the well known affairs between Poiret and Columbine, with Miss Hampton appearing as Columbine.

"Her lighter colorings lend themselves particularly well to this kind of photography, and interest was held by the beauty in the settings and the costumes. The daintiness of the production, and the deft method of handling the group of marionettes, give it a charm well worth watching for.

"Miss Hampton's acting is unusually good. She seems to have rigidly pursued her study of pantomime. She gives the piece the high favor an expert ballet dancer might have, and had she suddenly forsaken her role for a toe-dancer, I should not have been surprised. She has been working hard, if one may judge by her work in 'Marionettes'."

The remainder of the discussion by Mr. Marsh is devoted to three two-reel comedies released by Educational. They are "The Movies," a Hamilton Comedy; Lupino Lane's "The Fighting Dude," and Billy Dooley's "A Goofy Gob." Of these he states in part:

"I saw three unusually funny comedies last week . . . good enough for any good picture program.

"Here are the comedies:

"Lloyd Hamilton in 'The Movies.' It really is the funniest film in a couple of seasons at least . . . 'The Movies' is highly recommended. Watch for it.

"Lupino Lane in 'The Fighting Dude.' Lupino Lane makes his second 'debut' in this picture. I thought Lane funny when he was with Fox, some seasons ago, but somehow he didn't catch the popular appeal, or whatever popularity is called. . . . Lane has a good comedy style, and if 'The Fighting Dude' is a sample of what he can do, then he has a bright future in the short comedy field.

Sending Season Tickets to Ministers Helpful in Giving a Better Understanding of the Pictures

RECENTLY we mentioned the experience of M. W. Larmour, of the Nation Theatre, Graham, Texas, who made friends of the minister by sending them season tickets.

Now comes a letter from another manager, whose name, for obvious reasons, is withheld, since there is an opposition house in his town.

He writes enclosing the copy of a letter and says:

Believing you to be interested in all matters pertaining to the operation of the theatre and desirous of keeping in touch with conditions pertaining thereto I am inclosing a copy of one of four letters received from clergy in this territory.

Shortly after taking over the managership of this house I wrote the clergy a friendly letter, inclosing a season pass with each. These passes were good for two admissions in every case with exception of the Catholic father who, of course, had no occasion to use the double pass.

Several of the clergy paid me a personal call and thanked me for the pass, incidentally welcoming me to the city. The point is that the tone of their conversation as well as their letters was very much alike or the same as copy inclosed. They are doing us a world of harm, preaching their doctrine right from the pulpit and I thought it possible that you may be able to offer some suggestion as to how to get around these well meaning, hard shelled despoilers of the theatre.

The letter enclosed runs in part:

We are not much on attending the movies. Occasionally when there is something good, we do enjoy attending, and will avail ourselves of the privilege. There has been so much trash mixed in that one sometimes hesitates to run the risk, but of course there are fine, high class, instructive and interesting movies.

The Sunday movies we are opposed to, and could only wish that there wasn't the determined effort to break down the Christian Sabbath by the Moving Picture Corporation. This, I am sure, is one of the contributing causes which has caused a slump in the movie business. It has so alienated a high class group of Christian people in every community where the Sunday movie operates, that they seldom darken a movie house door at any time. While the business seemingly gains by the Sunday show, it loses a certain valuable patronage for the other six days. Of course while the other place runs, you may feel that you should run, and I haven't any advice to give at all, only I want you to know my position, and which position I will continue to maintain.

Is a Newcomer

This manager has moved into town within the year. Apparently he has been so unfortunate as to strike a town where the ministers are opposed to the pictures. And he has not yet had time to convert them.

Evidently the Sunday opening is one of the thorns in the flesh. Probably it is the longest and sharpest thorn, and it is going to take a little time to pull the thorn and ease the sting of the prick. We think that our correspondent is a little too impatient for results.

Antagonism to the pictures on the part of the clergy is a throwback to the early days of agitation, when practically all ministers denounced the pictures because it was the fashionable thing to do. The feeling dates back to the days when youngsters had only to say they had learned this or that from the pictures to become the objects of judicial pity.

Nowadays that plea does not go with the average judge. It has been overworked. But the ministers in some sections still remain hard boiled.

Where Sunday performances are permitted, they naturally resent the opposition. They feel that their pews would be less vacant if the seats in the picture theatres were not so well filled. They do not stop to consider that empty church pews considerably antedate the pictures. It is a sop to wounded vanity to blame the picture for non-attendance at church rather than to put the blame where it belongs—on the dull, dry sermons and dreary ritual.

Will Take Patience

It is going to take patient work to overcome this feeling. It is going to take a long time. But the situation may be mitigated, if not entirely overcome, by tact.

In the first place we would get hold of the pass issued to the Catholic priest and make it read "and one." It is very true that he has no wife to bring, but he probably cares no more for a solitary pleasuring than the Protestant ministers, and if he brings a parishioner with him, the advertising value is far greater than where the Methodist minister comes with his wife. The parishioner is proud of the fact that he went with the priest. He will advertise the fact, and in so doing advertise the fact that the father approves of some of the pictures—or at least of some pictures. And we imagine that this manager will find the priest far less biased than the others.

On the general campaign we would do two things. We would watch very carefully our Sunday bookings, trying to get for that evening the type of picture that is least apt to give offense to the clergy.

And we would see to it that all ministers were advised of the coming of such pictures as The Fool and Thank You, The Ten Commandments and pictures of this type.

We would see to it that they were at least specially invited to the pictures most apt to please them.

It may take time to win them over, but it can be done because it has been done, in many sections and in many towns.

THE MERRY WIDOW CAR AND ONE OF THE THREE DANCE HALL HOOK-UPS IN DETROIT

Three dance halls held waltz contests the Friday before The Merry Widow opened at the Madison Theatre, and the winners of these contests met in the finals at the Madison during the run of the picture. There was a twenty-car automobile parade of the stars of two musical comedies and a car of the year of the Widow's premiere.

It is going to take time and patience and tact, but eventually ministers will find that there is good as well as bad in pictures. They will come to realize that there are pictures with good moral lessons; sermons in scenes instead of words, and they may even be moved to give pulpit endorsement to such pictures.

Try to get the church societies interested. Offer these societies a portion of the proceeds of special sales. If the pictures take money out of the contribution box, let the pictures help put that money back into the treasury.

Don't fight them. Don't belittle their opinions, just keep straight ahead, and some day you'll find there is a different opinion.

In time it may even be possible to get the minister to move his church over to the theatre to preach on some particular picture. Get one minister started and half the battle is won. Keep on plugging, and you will win the other half.

Once you can interest the ministers and can show them that they can capitalize the widespread interest in the pictures for their own pulpits, you will have them boosters instead of knockers. And the first step is to give them the entree to the house, that they may see for themselves. The second step is to make certain that they see the best.

Charlestoned Mix

Charleston contests are money in the bank all over the country. They never fail.

The Temple Theatre, Toledo, met with the usual success on a Charleston contest in conjunction with The Best Bad Man, which shows a snappy Charleston in one of the early scenes.

For a pacemaker, Manager William Exton hired a bell hop from one of the local hotels, who is regarded as the Toledo champion. He was too good to be allowed to compete, so was offered as an added feature.

Rooftop Cornetist Plays Merry Widow Waltz

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

NEW faces were introduced to Brooklyn audiences on the program with "Lady Windermere's Fan." These faces belonged to the Mexican Grand Opera Company, who were presented in two of the four musical offerings of the show. The entire performance took up 1 hour and 57 minutes, of which time 1 hour and 30 minutes were given to the film subjects. One hour and 22 minutes was required by the Ernst Lubitsch production, and the Topical Review was given its usual 8 minutes. This left 27 minutes for the 4 presentations on the program.

The tenor, soprano, contralto and baritone of the Mexican Grand Opera Company were presented in the famous "quartette from Verdi's Rigoletto." The singers appeared in front of a new black drawcurtain on the production stage and wore the correct operatic costumes. The light: bright lights of light amber on the singers; 2 orange Mestrum floods on the musicians from the dome; amber foot lights on production stage and on either side of the production stage; large stage in blue and blue stars in the coves. This quartette took up 4 minutes.

Jules Berkin, trumpet virtuoso, who recently became a permanent member of the famed Mark Strand Orchestra, was presented in a medley of popular hits including "Bam Bam Bamy Shore," "A Cup of Coffee, a Sandwich and You," and "Then I'll Be Happy." Berkin played from his place in the orchestra under a small amber spot from the No. 1 bridge. The No. 2 bridge had a color-blend on the draw curtains which were closed over the production stage; the dome had 2 dark violet floods on the orchestra; purple foot lights on the small stage. This solo took 3 minutes.

After the Mark Strand Topical Review came George Lyons, the singing harpist, formerly of Lyons and Yosco, appearing on the apron of the large stage. He was lighted by a small amber spot from the dome; the No. 2 bridge back of the proscenium arch had an amber spot on the harp; the dome had a deep blue flood on the musicians; the No. 1 bridge threw a deep purple flood on the musicians; large stage in red. Lyons used up 8 minutes with instrumental and vocal numbers, nicely balanced.

Next came "Mexican Songs and Dances," the biggest number of the show, 12 minutes long, and introduced the Mexican Grand Opera Company, the Betancourt Marimba Band and 8 Mark Strand Dancers. For this scene a very elaborate Spanish interior was used, with a balcony in which there was a large center opening. A blue sateen sky drop backed up the opening. A fireplace was to the left of the stage, dressed with various Mexican and Spanish props. Highly colored shawls were used in the decorations. The personnel wore Mexican costumes changing twice during the presentation. The routine of the number was as follows: "La Nortena," "Cadiz March," "My Old Love," and "Cielito Lindo." The first named selection was done by Mexican Grand Opera Company; the Marimba Band and the Mark Strand Dancers; the second by the Marimba Band, the third by the coloratura soprano and the mezzo soprano as a duet; then an interpolated selection by the Marimba Band, and closing with "Cielito Lindo" by the entire company.

Aerial Music for The Merry Widow

Harry K. Lucas, of the State theatre, Raleigh, N. C. worked a good idea for The Merry Widow when he hired a cornetist to go through the business section and play the famous waltz from the roofs of available buildings. To plug the idea along he had several persons call up the newspaper offices to ask where the music came from, as the cornetist kept out of sight of the crowd.

Naturally the newspapers put two and two together and persuaded Lucas to confess that it was a press stunt, after which the man was driven around town in a bannered automobile, still playing the Merry Widow waltz.

It was a simple and inexpensive stunt, but it packed a powerful wallop.

Window displays contrasting the present day costumes with those of 25 years ago, when the Merry Widow was new helped make the grade into department store windows.

Made Universals Self Exploiting

Making the independent fight his exploitation for Universal pictures at his theatre, C. W. Doctor, of the May Theatre, Mayville, Wis., writes Carl Laemmle that if business keeps up the way it started, he will at last be able to pay off a mortgage that is almost old enough to vote.

Mayville is not much of a show town and the house is open only Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. The two latter days mostly look after themselves but the midweek was a gamble. Appreciating this, the Universal salesman made him a discount on his service, in accordance wit hCarl Laemmle's published offers to help the men who needed help.

Mr. Doctor promptly advertised that to everyone who attended a Wednesday performance he would give two adult tickets for the Thursday show, November 4 and 5 being the dates. He added a demonstration of a new phonograph.

All who used the free tickets were given a letter of explanation headed by a nenormous "Why." It went on to tell that the three leading film companies were combining under one head (?) to get more money for their product and so force admissions higher. Thanks to Carl Laemmle he was able to lower his admissions on Wednesday and Thursday of each week, because he had given a reduction in rentals, and he was giving this free show to tell about Universal and the fight. He whooped it up for the independents and even had the high school students chant a yell which ran:

Laemmle, Laemmle, you are right.
We are with you in this fight.
We'll stand by you, thick and thin
Laemmle, Laemmle, you will win.

It helped add to the excitement and the two audiences went out feeling it almost a duty to help along in the fight.

Now the midweek shows are no longer a gamble, but a Jewel on Wednesday and a general program on Thursday are almost as well attended as the Saturday and Sunday offerings. He has sold those two nights for the entire season through a single exploitation.

In Sheridan, Wyoming, the Orpheum theatre hooked The Ten Commandments to the local paper with an offer of tickets to all twin brothers, who had to visit the newspaper office to claim the seats.

Made a Storm for That Royle Girl

Often effects will hurt a picture, but George E. Brown, of the Palace Theatre, Memphis, built the storm in That Royle Girl into a smashing climax. It was so terrific that you could almost hear the spectators relax at its close.

Two perforated pipes above the screen dropped real rain into a trough below, the water being piped out into the alley. Splash boards front and back of the trough kept the water off the musicians and the draperies.

A wind machine that could top the orchestra was specially constructed and was graduated to fit the moment in the play, while a wood crash gave sound to the falling trees and houses, while lightning was achieved by two carbons held apart by a spring, the momentary arc as they were brought together and released giving a flash that worked in with the glare on the screen.

And for final touch the house lights were dimmed almost to blackness except for the legal exit lights.

It more than doubled the effectiveness of the climax because it had been so well rehearsed, and people came back to shiver in the realism of the storm.

Beating Bill

Old Bill Jones drove a swarm of bees across the desert, but driving turkeys is something else again. The American theatre, Walla Walla, tied a turkey drive to Lightnin' with good publicity results when a local raiser drove 58 turkeys 30 miles, losing only two en route. They were wanted for a local shoot and turkey drivers bet Glen Merchant he could not drive them in without losing at least ten birds.

What do they drive in your locality? It does not have to be either bees or turkeys.

Identification for Lost World Beasts

Steve Farrar, of the Orpheum theatre, Harrisburg, Ill., let the newspaper do his advance work on The Lost World.

Using a series of single column cuts on the various prehistoric monsters, he gave five tickets a day to those who correctly named the animals. It made a good circulation stunt, brought him a lot of reading matter, and made good money on the picture. Just to be fair, he put the money he saved into an extra large display in his own space.

Steve worked the out of town card on The Iron Horse. He sent us a thousand cards, ready to be mailed, and we put them back into the post office for return mailing. The New York postmark got people guessing and he did an unusually good business.

We shall be glad to remail cards for any exhibitor, but please allow a few days for delays in the mail and our possible absence from town over week ends.

Made The Phantom Known to All Utica

Robbins' De Luxe Theatre, Utica, N. Y., got a lot of punch into a campaign on The Phantom of the Opera, including two double deckers. The first of these was used by radio shops with the overline "the phantoms of the air welcome The Phantom of the Opera." The second went the following day to the other paper and here the general merchants added their welcomes to those of the radio dealers.

Meanwhile teasers and scatters had worked up into larger displays and the Loose-Wiles company gave out 30,000 small sample bags printed with "Compliments of Mary Philbin, featured in Phantom of the Opera, playing the entire week at the DeLuxe. Mary eats Sunshine crackers, why don't you?"

Another hook was to a milk company which tagged every bottle the day before the opening, tying in to the Philbin milk still.

Sixteen windows were obtained, including a Phantom Red window and a display of "Norman Kerry stripe" neckties.

For a final slap the French Club of a local college was induced to visit a matinee in a body. It all helped to bounce the Phantom right over the top.

Eddie Had Three

Now that the returns are about all in, we think that the Christmas record goes to the Mark Strand theatre, Brooklyn. Edward L. Hyman gave three special performances for the poor. Two of these were sponsored by the Brooklyn newspapers while the third was the Brooklyn edition of the New York World's party. Each show ran two full hours, with a five reel comedy and some special musical acts. The Gold Rush was the feature of one program and Little Annie Rooney headed another.

Three newspapers were plugging for the Strand, and each took charge of the details of its own show, providing the candy, and looking after minor matters.

English Displays on Iron Horse in London

Here are two displays on The Iron Horse from the original English run at the Capitol theatre, London. As was told in an earlier story in this department, the figure of the Judge was made a sort of trade mark, and a large cutout figure was used in Shaftsbury Avenue while some thirty impersonators paraded the streets reading specially printed heralds with the title and theatre in large letters. For this reason the opening ads were hooked to the familiar figure and made the attractor for the opening week as well as the advance. For the second week and later, the switch was made to the style shown in the second cut. This campaign was designed to prepare the provinces for the coming of the picture and so many media were used that were not strictly local, since there is a type of newspaper printed in London that goes all over the Kingdom. The result was a heavy campaign, but the spaces were not large, a four inch single being the average, though the English newspapers use a wider column than ours; about 2½ inches against our two, though some go even to a three or three and a half. Three showings a day were given, with a grind from 1:30 to 11 on Sunday. England has not yet gone in for the big splashes in newspaper advertising, and it is to be hoped for the exhibitors' sakes that no one starts in. Since no one does, no one has to.

Skyline Again Is Used for Seller

Bright Lights is another story where the New York skyline can be worked into the displays, and Loew's Aldine Theatre, Pittsburgh, makes good use of a rather fantastic skyline. A better attractor for this title would be the electrical display around Longacre, but out of town they know the skyline better, and it possesses a strong appeal to the rural mind and pocketbook. And since the skyline is the big seller, we think that it would be better to use a space wider than it is deep and string out the display. This is a space about six by nine inches, a three nine and a halfs. That is roughly 28 column inches. A better display could have been made in a five fives with a saving of space and a doubling of the appeal. That would have given a skyline twice as long, and still have left ample space for the enumeration of the other features. The artist has merely turned out the usual space instead of looking for a chance to get the best possible display. A little thought would have given a larger return at smaller cost.

Colleen Moore Is Her Own Best Bet

Most managers realize that a Colleen Moore play can best be sold through Colleen herself, and First National supplies the demand for portrait cuts on her titles. This one We Moderns is particularly good and the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, gives it a chance to do its stuff by not trying to kill it off with a lot of black letters. The cut is given every chance and we do not believe that this confidence was misplaced. This cut could have been dressed up with a lot of jazz dancers and things until it became utterly worthless for advertising purposes, but the artist knew his business and he held the display simple and forceful. Some titles need a lot of picture material to get them over, but Colleen is her own best bet, and this cut is singularly good.

JUST COLLEEN

Rittenberg Makes Appeal to His Own Public

Tries to Average a Reading Public

Arnold S. Rittenberg, sending in some holiday samples, writes that he tries whenever possible to hook his copy to holidays or any local event because he can get more attention for what he has to say. He adds that this seems to get the better class of readers; not that he does not always try for them, but that they respond more readily to the timely copy, which explains his election day stuff on Thank You. He does not write down to the supposed low level of his patrons. He does not nurse the idea that he must deliberately get lowbrow to get an audience, but he does try to write to the average newspaper reader rather than to the highbrow, except when he feels that an attraction will appeal more strongly to the more intelligent. Then he does write up a little, and he finds that it pays to appeal to this class around a holiday. He sends in an advertisement for Bobbed Hair that is merely the plan book cut with copy above and below to form a good layout and adds another for The Fool in which the same device is used. He has a shorter cut here, so he worked in some linear rule to fill the space. He doesn't believe in going to extra lineage, but he does figure that if he takes a reasonable space he gets back the cost in the reading notices. Most papers work to strike a balance between the ad spaces and the amount of free readers given, and Mr. Rittenberg appreciates the value of the reader. By the way, did you ever notice how few Fox press book cuts there are with the title poorly displayed. They seem to realize in the Fox office that a title is good enough to be forced through the cut. Look at that for The Fool. It stands out.

Gets a Good Design From a Mat Service

A. M. De Haven, of the Opera House, Bangor, Maine, send in his Thanksgiving advertisement on The Winds of Chance with the explanation that the cut work is all mat. He does not tell where the mat comes from, and we can't figure how the name is worked in, since this clearly is not type. Possibly he used this before and had it mortised for a second use, but whatever the origin it works in very handily for a holiday display. He has trimmed the First National cut to get it into the space, but has not lost anything of value, since he still has plenty left, and by making a diagonal cut he gets the space for an added kick, placed where it will get a better display than would have come from its use closer to other type. Down near the girl's foot is the announcement of a prologue in "The Klondike Singing School." This was little more than a community sing with a saloon setting and a group of singing miners to lead the audience in the choruses of old and new selections. This really made more of a hit than the play itself since the average man and woman enjoys most what they take part in, particularly if it is dressed up a little as this was with the mining camp setting. This is a better idea for a community sing than the straight singing leader. Their enjoyment of this feature made Winds of Chance seem all the better, so it helped the play.

Short Distance for This Pony Express

Because he opened The Pony Express coincident with the Southern Oklahoma Fair, Ollie Brownlee invented the short distance Pony Express. It gave a little more jazz to fair day, and it told the fair visitors about the Cruze picture.

He had to sell the idea to the police, the Chamber of Commerce and the newspapers, but that was easy for Brownlee. He stands solid with all three.

The big idea was to rope off a section of Main Street and start four cowboys on a race over the course. At each street corner the rider had to dismount, change mail sacks and go on. With four expert riders the race was far more exciting than it sounds, and all it cost was $10.50 split three ways.

He put out a parade of four boys mounted on ponies and carrying banners, and kept them going during the run.

A windfall was a dealer cooperation whereby an automobile concern took two fifty inch ads in return for screen mention. The ads carried large cuts of the pony express rider and contrasted the old days with the new car. No records were broken, but they were pretty well strained.

Boston's Tremont Temple Now Closed

TREMONT TEMPLE, Boston, which first was used for the presentation of motion pictures in 1907, at last has been closed to the films. Decision to terminate this feature of Tremont Temple's activities was brought about by the opposition of a large number of members of the church. This opposition resulted, it was said, "Because such use has invited frequent misunderstanding and criticism." Tremont Temple is the home of a Baptist congregation. Another reason given for the closing of the temple to picture shows was because the mortgage indebtedness of the building recently had been discharged and expenses reduced. The money derived from leasing the auditorium for film entertainments never was used to support this church, but it was used to pay off the indebtedness on the building proper. The temple generally housed super-films, put in for a "run" exhibition.

JONES—CAYTHING

A marriage license has been granted in Boston to Frank H. Jones, theatre manager, and Marguerite Caything, both of Boston.

CAMPBELL LEAVES

"Bill" Campbell has given up the management of the Empire Theatre at Palmer.

WALLS COMPLETED

Erection of the brick walls for the new Middlesex Theatre in Malden has been completed. Ramsdell Brothers, widely known New England exhibitors, are interested in the new Middlesex and it will be under their management.

VARTIGIAN BUILDING

P. Vartigian is building a theatre at 303 Broadway, Somerville.

KATZE THE OWNER

Samuel Katze is the owner of the theatre to be built on Merrimack street, Lowell.

ORCHESTRA CHANGES

Dock Eisenbourg, who was leader of the orchestra in Loew's State Theatre, Boston, before the recent change in policy was made, now is at Loew's Orpheum. He and his symphonic unit are playing at the 10:30 and 4:30 shows, replacing the combination of piano and drums that played at these shows for so many years. The regular Orpheum Theatre Orchestra, under the direction of Frank King, plays at the principal afternoon and evening performances. At these latter shows the organist is George Warner.

BAN NOW OFF

Lebanon, N. H., has been under a scarlet fever ban and theatres and all other places of public assembly were closed until February 15.

Kiddie Matinees in San Francisco

KIDDIE matinees have sprung into great popularity at Berkeley, Cal., and are being featured on Saturday mornings by no less than three theatres. This movement was launched several years ago at the U. C. Theatre where they are presented under the auspices of the Berkeley Federation Parent-Teachers Association. Manager H. W. Sherburne revived the matinees last fall, following the opening of school, and they have proved highly successful. The Oaks Theatre, which entered the field last year, has commenced featuring a Saturday kiddies matinee and secured an attendance of almost 500 at the initial performance, despite the stormy day. Contests on the stage for both boys and girls supplemented the film attraction of "Our Hospitality," with Buster Keaton. The latest house to enter the list with a special Saturday morning entertainment for youngsters is the new Campus Theatre, opened in January. The services of Big Brother and Aunt Polly, known to radio fans, have been arranged for in addition to moving pictures of a suitable nature. The price of admission to all the matinees is 10 cents.

BUCK TRANSFERRED

Verne Buck, director of the Granada Theatre orchestra, San Francisco, for several months, has been transferred to the Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles, and has been succeeded by Eddie Peabody of New York. This change follows closely the change in house management, the Granada now being conducted under the management of Nat Holt, formerly of the California.

BURGLARS FAIL

Burglars effected an entrance into the Haight Theatre, Haight and Cole streets, San Francisco, and knocked the combination off the safe, but failed to reach the strong box. They made away with $25 secured from a money changing machine, however.

GOOD BUSINESS

The Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, has been enjoying a splendid business on "The Eagle," which is nearing a run of three weeks. It will be followed by the world premiere of "The Cohens and Kellys," for which Manager Charles M. Pincus is arranging some novel stunts.

NO SUMMER SHIVERS

William Engelhart of the Donner Theatre, Truckee, Cal., was a recent visitor at San Francisco, accompanied by Mrs. Engelhart. He stated that the lack of snow this winter had caused the abandonment of all plans for winter sports and that there were no moving picture companies working there, so that a dearth of Alaskan pictures might be looked for.

LAUGHLIN BETTER

Leo Laughlin, manager of the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, has been on the sick list but has recovered sufficiently to be able to get back to the office again.

KINGSBURG OPEN

C. L. Toepfer and E. J. Roemheld, formerly of the Cameo Theatre, San Francisco, have taken over the Kingsburg Theatre, Kingsburg, Cal., closed for the last year, and are putting on a revivifying act.

WILSON OPENS

The Wilson Theatre, the latest addition to the list of showhouses at Fresno, Cal., was opened February 3, with a large delegation of film exchange men and exhibitors from San Francisco in attendance. The house seats 2,000 and 4,212 admissions were recorded between 6 and 10 o'clock on the opening night.

NOW IS OWNER

B. J. Fitchett, who was manager of the Star Theatre at Colusa, Cal., for J. D. Dunfield for a time, has purchased this house.

A Real Scoop

The week of February 14 in Detroit was "Fox Week" and there were few if any citizens or visitors who did not have the fact brought forcibly to their attention.

Chief among the attention-getting stunts was the appearance on the front page of "Detroit This Week," a resume of the city's activities, of a picture of William Fox and mention of "the present home of Fox pictures, the Fox-Washington Theatre, which has been under the able management of W. D. Shafer for the past five years."

That was putting it over for Fox with a vengeance. The circulation of the periodical is 10,000 copies weekly and the front cover space can't be bought.

Wyoming Corporation Makes Its Bow

THE Capital Investment Company, a $300,000 corporation, came into existence under the Wyoming law last week. The new organization was made for the chief purpose to build a new 1,200-seat theatre in Cheyenne, Wyo. Up to this time Cheyenne has had only two theatres in operation, the Capitol and the Princess both Carl Ray Amusement Company theatres. The incorporators were Mayor Charles W. Riner, Clarence C. Riner, son of the mayor; Percy Smith, W. F. Godbe and William Dubois. Present plans provide for the building of a large office building in which the theatre will be located.

RARE VISITORS

B. J. Sallows, owner, and James Hughes, manager of the Imperial Theatre, Alliance, Neb., arrived in Denver recently on one of their rare visits to the city. Mr. Sallows is also the editor of one of the local newspapers of Alliance.

OTHERS

Other exhibitors visiting Denver during the week were E. N. Disney, manager of the new State Theatre of Boulder. Mr. Disney announces the theatre will be fully completed and ready to start by March 1. B. P. McCormick, owner and manager of the Liberty Theatre, Florence, and manager of the Opera House, Canon City, Col., was a visitor. Mr. McCormick has about closed a deal whereby he will become the owner of the Opera House in Canon City.

COMMUNITY BURNS

The Community Theatre, Wellington, Col., was destroyed by fire last week. Plans are being made for rebuilding, but nothing has been announced.

A Schenectady Bowling Contestant

CLAUDE FISH, owner of the American Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., will be a contender for honors in the national bowling tournament in Toledo next month. He is the first exhibitor from this part of the state, and possibly from all New York State, to enter the big pin-topplers' contest. Mr. Fish is practicing on the alleys of his home city each afternoon and expects to be in the pink of condition when he leaves for Toledo as the representative of his city. Mr. Fish will bowl in the singles on the night of March 31. Already hitting an average of over 200, Mr. Fish expects to be within the money when the finals are rolled off. Between bowling, running his theatre and his official duties in the Elks and Masonic orders, Mr. Fish is getting mightly little sleep these days and admits hitting the hay along about 2 a. m. Business keeps up at the theatre, however, so whatever worrying he is doing, and there is probably little of that, is confined to the alleys. Last Sunday's business, when he featured "Classified," esablished a Sunday record for the American.

MORE FIDDLING

C. H. Buckley, who runs the Empire in Glens Falls and two houses in Albany, gave the residents of Glens Falls two features each day last week in the observance of anniversary week at the Empire. Along with this, John Garry, manager of the house, put on a first rate old fiddlers' contest on Thursday night.

TO OPEN EASTER

John Augello is mighty proud of the new theafre he is erecting in Utica, which will probably be in shape to open along about Easter.

MEN OF THE NORTH

Snowbanks up to one's head apparently have no terror for Len Garvey of Clinton and Gene Thornton of Saugerties, well known exhibitors, who were along Film Row during the past week for the weeks to come. Many an exhibitor in Central and Northern New York postponed his trip to Albany last week on account of the condition of the roads and late trains.

TRAVIS PRESIDENT

C. H. Travis, projectionist at the Barcli Theatre in Schenectady, has been elected president of the W. W. Farley Association, which includes all employes at the Farash Theatres in the electric city. James Carney has been named vice-president; Joseph Genre, secretary, and Mrs. Helen Heffernan, treasurer.

MINSTRELS SING

The Rialto Theatre in Glens Falls, now owned by William Benton of Saratoga Springs, forsook picture entertainment three days last week when the K of C minstrels held the boards with capacity houses.

SARTORIAL NOTE

Joe Raymond, who runs the State in Utica, has entered the list of best dressed exhibitors in this territory and is a contender for honors with Charles Sesonske of Johnstown and other sartorial devotees. Mr. Raymond is as good an exhibitor as he is a dresser, running his house in bang-up style.

DREAMLAND CHANGES

Well, Louis Cappa, who has been running Dreamland in Albany, has gone and done it, having taken over the Rialto in Schenectady from Mike Freedman. Mr. Cappa plans to run both houses while Mr. Freedman's future plans are indefinite.

PURCHASES

Lou Benton, manager of his brother's theatre in Mechanicville, and Bill Smalley of Cooperstown made the grade last week and visited several exchanges in this city. Incidentally, Mr. Smalley bought eight pictures from Associated Exhibitors.

HAYS A VISITOR

Walter Hays of Buffalo, one of the heads of the Strand chain of houses, made one of his periodical visits to Albany last week, dropping off on his way to New York City, going over bookings with Uly S. Hill, manager of the local group, and then taking a look at the new theatre which is being erected by the company in Albany.

VOCAL LABOR

Whenever Morris Silverman, running the Pearl and the Happy Hour Theatres in Schenectady, spends an afternoon along Film Row in Albany, with many an argument over prices, he is able to convince himself that he has done a full day's work and generally entrusts the management of his two houses that evening to his employes. Mr. Silverman figures out that there is just as much money to be made in buying film at a right price as there is in packing his theatres. And when it comes to arguing over film prices, Mr. Silverman takes no back seat for anyone.

AIDS CHURCH

Peter Gordon, who runs the Photoplay Theatre in Keeseville, was one of the leaders this past week in staging a benefit toward buying a bell for the church that will be erected in place of the handsome edifice that was recently destroyed by fire.

ROACH CHATS

James Roach, head factotum of the Farash theatres in Schenectady, who resided in the Middle West for several years, spent an enjoyable evening one night last week at the office of the VanCurler, discussing changes in the theatres of Omaha and other cities with the manager of a company showing at the VanCurler.

TRAVEL PROBLEMS

Matt Moran of Coxsackie, who recently opened a house in New Baltimore, running it one night a week, said last week that if the snow kept on falling he would have to devise a dog team in order to get from place to place.

THEIR FAVORITE SEATS

Abe Stone of the Arbor Theatre in Albany claims that he has at least fifty persons who occupy the same seats each night during the week. Mr. Stone says that they are the first ones in line when the ticket window opens and hurry in, fearful that someone may have already grabbed off their accustomed seats.

CONGRATULATIONS!

Sam Hochstim, who runs the Star in Hudson, passed around the cigars last week, while Mrs. Hochstim received congratulations over the advent of a son. Albany heard the news when Sam phoned his brother, Ed, in this city.

INDEFATIGABLE!

Twelve degrees below zero in Gloversville, but Louis Schine arrived at his office at 8:30 o'clock in the morning. That's the sort of stuff that has brought the Schine brothers to their present pinnacle of success.

NO ELIMINATIONS

When Alex Sayles was city editor of one of Albany's newspapers he got the habit of cutting stories to fit space, but now that he is manager of the Leland Theatre he has established a policy of never cutting a picture. Mr. Sayles runs his news reels in full, as well as his other pictures.

FIDDLERS ATTRACT

Ed Walsh of the Albany Theatre in Schenectady is having the time of his life these days with his old fiddlers' contests. Last week he used six old-timers, and Mr. Walsh never falls in showing the courtesy gray hairs demand. The contests are packing the house.

TO TRY DANCERS

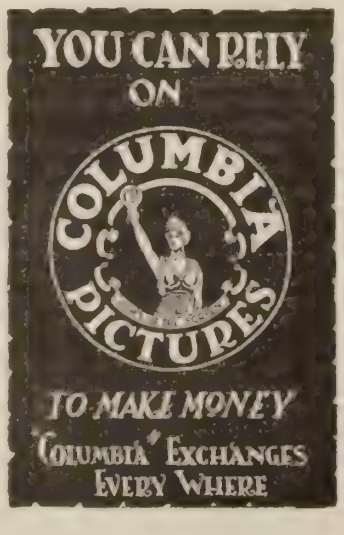
Charles H. Goulding, manager of Proctor's Theatre in Troy, has arranged for some old time dancers in connection with his old fiddlers' contests, which, as Mr. Goulding said this week, were even more succesful than he had expected them to be. Such a statement from Mr. Goulding means a whole lot.

EASIER ON THE EYES?

Frank Breymaier, now managing the VanCurler in Schenectady, and formerly with the Barcli, is resting his eyes a bit from pictures these days as he watches the burlesque shows the latter part of each week.

THE N. Y. HABIT

Nate Robbins of Utica journeyed down to New York City last week. Its almost a habit with Mr. Robbins. Utica has its snowdrifts and, as Mr. Robbins remarked on his return, so had the metropolis.



Los Angeles Opening

The new West Coast Belmont Theatre at First street and Vermont avenue, Los Angeles, costing in excess of $750,000, will be formally dedicated on Washington's Birthday, according to Arthur Bernstein, general manager, following a conference with M. J. H. MICHAEL, chairman of Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O. of New York, has issued a call to members to get busy and give their support to Representative Clarence MacGregor in his fight to have repealed the obnoxious tax on music. Mr. Michael has taken this action because of the receipt of a letter from Mr. MacGregor, who declares he is much disappointed at the seeming apathy of those who should be interested in the matter.

A NEW STRAND

A modern 1,500-seat theatre is to be built on the site of the old Strand in Salamanca, N. Y., which was destroyed by fire on the night of February 11. This announcement is made by W. L. Trass, local manager for the Schine Theatrical Corporation, which operated the Strand and Andrews in the town. It is expected that the Andrews will be closed when the new house is ready because the theatre does not fully comply with the new state building law.

DENIED THEATRE

The application of Salvatore Volpe to erect a 900-seat house, costing $200,000, in Rochester, has been denied, according to Arthur L. Vedder, superintendent of city planning, on the ground that it is not necessary for the property development of the city and that many residents in the vicinity have protested against it.

REFUTE RUMOR

An official of the Shea Operating Company, the local Publix link, denies that a deal has been closed for leasing the new picture house to be constructed in Main street at West Northrup place. It is admitted, however, that the representatives of the Hager, Askey, Forrest, Inc., interests have conferred with M. Shea on the proposition. Nothing has been closed to date.

PLAN NEW HOUSE?

Another house is to be built in South Buffalo, according to report. This is to be at South Park avenue and Amber street. Louis G. Hanny, manager of the Capitol, one of the South Park Amusement Company houses, announces that his company is not connected with any other theatrical concerns in the city and that the new house planned by the South Park Amusement interests at South Park and Woodside is the only one, to his knowledge, that is contemplated for the community.

Before coming to Hartford Mr. Sanson was with Keith's Theatre in Jersey City, N. J.

TO RAZE LANDMARKS

Three of the oldest landmarks in Hartford, buildings dating back more than a century, will be razed on Asylum street to make room for the new theatre to be built by Robert J. Allyn. The buildings to be torn down are the Brinley house, the building once used for a young ladies' "select school" and a barn standing in the rear of the old Allyn residence.

Milwaukee Raising Convention Money

MEMBERS of the M. P. T. O. of Milwaukee laid their cares aside recently and attended a "movie ball" at the Marigold Gardens. Another dance will be given by the organization on February 24.

PLANS COMPLETE

Plans for the erection of a two-story brick theatre, stores and apartment building have been completed by the Wausau Theatres Company at Wausau. Frank D. ALL AROUND FRYING PAN. (5,519 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. This picture drew well and a number of patrons said good, but it seems to me that there is something missing. Silver King and Thomson are making quite a hit in my town, but their stories are way too light and the same old plot used over and over again. "Bandit's Baby" was something different and it was a good one. Appeal, good. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

BROADWAY LADY. (5,500 feet). Star, Evelyn Brent. Better stick to the crook pictures. Too many of these on the market. Your former pictures made a bigger hit. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

WHEN LOVE GROWS COLD. Star, Clive Brooks. Just a fair picture but the publicity of Mrs. R. Valentino will get the business. Seven reels. Print A-1. Mrs. S. J. Brown, Phoenix Theatre, Neola, Iowa.

First National

HIS SUPREME MOMENT. (6,565 feet). Star, Ronald Colman. Very good picture though a bit too long. Colored scenes are remarkable. Blanche Sweet's acting in this is the best she's ever done. Another George Fitzmaurice hit. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five percent. High class and family trade town or 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

MAKING OF O'MALLEY. (7,496 feet). Star, Milton Sills. One hundred percent entertainment for the entire family. If this doesn't please them, nothing will. Boost it to the limit. More like this are always welcome. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. High class and family trade town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

Fox

HUNTED WOMAN. (4,954 feet). Star, Seena Owen. If your patrons are fussy, this one won't satisfy them. It may go over on a double bill, but not on a single feature program. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, fifty percent. High class and family trade town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

Metro-Goldwyn

MIDSHIPMAN. (7,498 feet). When you say a real one you said it all in a mouthful. It is certainly a real one and I can cheerfully say that it will please then if you can't make money with it you better lock up. Step on it; it will stand all you can give it and it will satisfy. All I can say is it's a go-getter for me. Good appeal. G. A. Peterson, Cozy Theatre, Hollis, Oklahoma.

OUR GANG

ZANDER THE GREAT. (6,844 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Very good picture. You can't go wrong on this one, so boost it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. High class and family trade town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

Paramount

ADVENTURE. (6,602 feet). Star, Pauline Starke. This is first class entertainment. Most any patron would enjoy this picture. Lots of action. Tone, okay. Suitable for any day. Not a special. Appeal, ninety percent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30, regular. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

ARE PARENTS PEOPLE? (6,586 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. This picture shows up parents who quarrel over petty trifles. Good lesson for majority of married couples. Tone, okay. Suitable for any day. Not a special. Small appeal. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30, regular. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

BEDROOM WINDOW. Star, May McAvoy. "Grumpy," "Icebound," and now this. All William DeMille's please. A mystery that keeps you guessing. Some comedy. May McAvoy, Ricardo Cortez and Malcolm MacGregor sure to please. Farmers' town of 110. Admission 10-25. W. B. Russel, Benton Community House (120 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star cast. Paramount Zane Grey picture that packed them in. It is very interesting, although not an exact following of the story, but few screen plays are. Helene Chadwick and Antonio Moreno are good, but Rockcliffe Fellows easily carries off acting honors. Not a Sunday picture, but may be payed as a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

CODE OF THE SEA. Star, Rod LaRocque. A splendid small town picture. Plenty of action and thrills, and LaRocque and others do good work. Don't be afraid to push it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Excellent appeal. Farmers' town of 110. Admission 10-25. W. B. Russell, Benton Community House (120 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

GOOSE HANGS HIGH. (6,186 feet). Star cast. A wonderful story for the Christmas season. I ran it on Christmas Eve and it pleased. Although there is nothing big about it, still it will go over. It's human, that's why. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

KISS FOR CINDERELLA. (9,671 ft.) Star, Betty Bronson. This is really a high class picture. Some of the rougher class did not appreciate it. My better class of trade thanked me for showing it. I used special music and it went over. Very best tone. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, seventy percent. Farmers town of 1,380. Admission 10-25. Jas. B. Trout, Liberty Theatre (250 seats). Leonard, Texas.

LIGHT OF THE WESTERN STARS. (6,650 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Played two days to fair business. It pleased young and old. This kind of picture is the thing for the small town exhibitor. Preserve us from any more "Madame Sans Gene." Tone and appeal, good. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS. (6,650 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A Zane Grey western with Jack Holt, Noah Beery and Billie Dove in the leads. Much better than "Wanderer of the Wasteland" and if your audience likes melodramatic highlights this one will give them a-plenty. Draw from tourist class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS. (6,650 ft). Star cast. This is an excellent picture from one of Zane Grey's novels. You will make no mistake in buying this. Book it and boost it. Tone, good. Sunday, optional. Appeal, ninety-five percent. All classes town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Onida Theatre (225 seats), Onida, South Dakota.

LORD JIM. (6,702 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. Does not make a good movie story. Too many unpleasant things in which everyone including the hero is killed off. Might be good reading in book form but not to look at when you actually see the many killings. Percy Marmont is fine in his part as the misunderstood man and the picture is well mounted and very well played by an excellent cast. General class city of 15,000. Admission forty cents. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre (1,000 seats), Bellaire, Ohio.

MANICURE GIRL. (5,989 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. I would class this as a fairly good program offering. There are plenty of better pictures and plenty of worse ones. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MANICURE GIRL. (5,989 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. This is a very ordinary program show. The photography is very hazy and the appearance on the screen is very poor. Not for a Saturday night. Tone, good. Special, no. Fair appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

MAN WHO FOUND HIMSELF. (7,298 ft.). Star, Thomas Meighan. A better drawing card than his last one and a more interesting story. Tom should change his style of acting and pep up a bit. Tone and appeal, good. Not a special. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Penn.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. Star, Glenn Hunter. A very good picture; almost a special. Nothing heavy. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, sixty-five percent. Farmers' and small town class town of 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

PETER PAN. (9,953 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. More stories and pictures like this should be made for the older folks. The play is rather long, but it will hold your audience from start to finish. It is thrilling. Acting is wonderful. Tone, good. Special, yes. Working class city of 200,000. Admission 10-

15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

PONY EXPRESS. Star, Ricardo Cortez. A special of the first class; action, history and romance. Beery's acting very outstanding. Tone good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal 85 per cent. 'Farmers' and small town class town of 600. Admisison 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

SAINTED DEVIL. Star, Rudolph Valentino. This star has lost his following. This picture is a fair program offering adapted from a story by a popular author, but my patrons cimpy do not care for the star. Not a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

SHOCK PUNCH. (6,151 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This one is a knockout for a Saturday. It has thrills and laughs galore. It is a picture that will please young and old. Tone, good. Not a special. Fine appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

THAT ROYLE GIRL. Star, Carol Dempster. A real good, fast, snappy, crook picture. Like all of the Griffith pictures, it has that different something about it that makes it well liked. It is rather risque and had little unfavorable comments on that part of it. The window cards are positively repulsive. In fact, all of the paper and advertising accessories on this picture are below standard. Business was only ordinary. Tone, questionable. Sunday and special, no. Fair appeal. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30, 40-50. M. W. Larmour National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

TIGER LOVE. Star, Antonio Moreno. In our small town it's hard to do business with a title like this, but all who saw this were more than pleased. Don't pass it up. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Good appeal. Farmers' town of 110. Admission 10-25. W. B. Russell, Benton Community House (120 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

TONGUES OF FLAME. (6,763 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A program picture, nothing more. Meighan has appeared in such mediocre stories lately he is fast losing popularity at the box office. Suitable for Sunday, but not a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

TOP OF THE WORLD. (7,167 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. James Kirkwood creditably enacts a dual role. A good program picture with very fine flood scenes. Not a very good Sunday picture nor a special. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

TROUBLE WITH WIVES. Star, Tom Moore. A program picture, but a real good little comedy drama. Ford Sterling is extra good. My crowd liked it immensely. I had lots of compliments. Some went out and sent their friends. The characters are all good; it has a smart story and is clean. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30, 40-50. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

Pathe

BLACK CYCLONE. (5,058 feet). Star, Rex (horse). A wonderful picture. To those who love animals this picture will be a treat. Many of the shots are wonderful. This picture is educational. The audience enjoyed it. Tone, good. Appeal, excellent. Working class city of 200,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,243 feet). Star, Syd Chaplin. Oh, what's the use of reporting it? The Gang already know that it's one of the best rib ticklers on the market. Would like to see the specimen of humanity that can sit through this picture without wrenching his sides with laughter. There ain't no sech animal. The old barn was shaken to its foundation when the third reel started, and the laughter drowned out the Wurlitzer. Fine tone. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Mixed class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HELL'S HIGHROAD. (6,084 feet). Star cast. Business good first night, but nothing second night. Dropped terribly; picture fair. Morris L. Abrams, New Theatre, Lake City, South Carolina.

MAN FROM RED GULCH. Star, Harry Carey. No wonder Carey is falling and changes companies every season. This is about the poorest excuse for a picture that he has ever made, and he has sure made some lemons. Had a fair house at the start; half of them left the second reel, and nearly all were gone long before the end. About the worst picture this house has ever shown. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. No appeal. Railroad class and miners' town of 3,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre 700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

ROAD TO YESTERDAY. Star, Vera Reynolds. A very hard picture to report, as it will please the highbrows. The ordinary picturegoer will find this a very hard picture to follow, as there are too many characters crowded in and will go over their heads. Very well acted and good direction only in the part which carries back to the middle ages. Tone, excellent. Sunday and special, yes. Fair appeal. Railroad class and miners' town of 3,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theater (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

WELCOME STRANGER. (6,618 feet). Star cast. A really fine program picture that will please all you can get in to see it. To those unfamiliar with the stage success, the title is worth the proverbial half of one percent., and the paper does not help to draw them in. Suitable for Sunday, but it is not a special even if they do sell it as such. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

United Artists

ROSITA. Star, Mary Pickford. A costume picture in which Miss Pickford doesn't shine with her usual brilliancy. The people of the burg don't like period stuff like this, and as a consequence we didn't have much of a house. A very artistic picture, but not a record breaker. Tone, fair. Sunday and spe-

—Or Money Back!

Ralph K. Russell has come back with pep and ideas. Witness the stunt he explains in this letter:

"You have no doubt read of the theatre manager, Mr. Latta at Shenandoah, Iowa, being blown up on TRUTHFUL ADVERTISING—you can sigh to the whole cock-eyed world that he isn't the only one, and that we have a record we would put up against his. In our first four years in the theatre business—every advertisement carried "Your money's worth or your money back." Note the typewriter slides and ad taken from recent run on BROKEN LAWS. As yet I have never found another theatre guaranteeing satisfaction—and allowing the public to be the jury.

"For instance, Universal substituted on RIDIN' KID, and sent us RIDE FOR YOUR LIFE, for the 2nd and 3rd of this month. The latter had already been run here, and after a week of careful, elaborate exploitation on THE RIDIN' KID, and with substitution at the last minute, and not being notified of the change—films arriving late to boot, we were in a precarious situation from the standpoint of satisfying our customers, so we sold them the tickets, and then after the 4th reel of the feature, we had projector hold up, while I explained it to the crowd, and it was a full house, of course. Then I offered them either their tickets or their money back—you'd be surprised if I told you that only two asked for their cash refund—and they were transients. Then after I passed out the tickets and cash, I informed them to hold the tickets for a date to be announced as soon as possible, when we would run FREE TO EVERYONE a guaranteed appearance of THE RIDIN' KID—that will give some of them two shows for one. Universal came clean and are making good on the dissappointment."

RALPH K. RUSSELL,
Cushing Theatre,
Cushing, Iowa.

cial, no. Appeal, ninety percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

WINDS OF CHANCE. Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. Splendid picture and about the best Alaskan picture ever made. Good paper to show this off with and a picture that pleased everybody. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Railroad class and miners' town of 3,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

Universal

CALL OF COURAGE. Star, Art Accord. A Blue Streak western, as they call them, and a good bet at the box office. Dog and horse in this picture very good. Print, new. Tone, good. Appeal, very good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

DARING DAYS. Star, Josie Sedgwick. A good western program picture. Rather weak for a Saturday's showing. Print, new. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

DON DARE DEVIL. Star, Jack Hoxie. The usual western action picture, which will get by on an off night but not on the second night. Tone, all right. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, fifty percent. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington.

K—THE UNKNOWN. (8,146 feet). Star cast. A fair picture but not what a jewel ought to be, as I have seen just common program pictures better than this one. If you can buy it cheap you might get away with it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (167 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

Vitagraph

BAREE, SON OF KAZAN. (6,803 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. Fine northern snow picture. Plenty of action and a story that gripped 'em. Suitable for a program anywhere. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

GREATER THAN MARRIAGE. Star, Marjorie Daw. Pretty girls. Fights. Good cast. Dandy story You can book this and get seven reels of real entertainment. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety percent. Farmers' town of 1,380. Admission 10-25. Jas. B. Trout, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Leonard, Texas.

LOVE HOUR. (7,030 feet). Star cast. This sure is some picture and will please any class of people. Exhibitors, if you have not run it, get it at once and advertise to the limit. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Almost a special. Appeal, ninety-five percent. Farmers' and laborers' town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (200 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

Warner Brothers

BABBIT. Star, Willard Louis. Did not please here. Had a few walkouts on it. Too slow and not enough excitement for my patrons. Don't say much about it. Sunday, no. Appeal, forty percent. Rural class town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Hamburg, Pennsylvania.

THE MAN UPSTAIRS wishes he was some place else in Warner Bros. picture with that title, starring Monte Blue and Dorothy Devore.

COUNTRY KID. Star, Wesley Barry. Get aboard a band wagon and tell the town you have this. If it doesn't satisfy the patrons of any small town they are too particular. Barry isn't the whole works; he's good, but the two orphaned kids that he takes care of help the story fine. Should be seen anywhere "Over the Hill" went. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

LIMITED MAIL. Star cast. Good. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. City of 10,000. Admission 15-35. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

RED HOT TIRES (5,452 feet). Star, Monte Blue. A box office picture that did not disappoint. Town of 5,000. Admission 10-25. W. F. Jones, Criterion Theatre, Frederick, Oklahoma.

WHERE THE NORTH BEGINS. Star, Rin-Tin-Tin (dog). Did you ever hear of a man building a small house and adding a room at a time? Well, this picture was finished in about four reels and then they tacked pieces on it to make it seven reels long. Will pass in localities that are not too particular. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Independents

BLACK LIGHTNING. (State Right). Star, Thunder (dog). One of the good dog actors and a fair cast behind him. Will do if you can get it right. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theare (167 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

CANVAS KISSER. (State Right). Star, Richard Holt. This is a very good program picture and should draw the action fans. Print, new. Tone and appeal, good. Special, no. Big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

HIDDEN MENACE. (William Steiner). Star, Charles Hutchison. Quite a bit more ambitious than the previous Steiner stuff; this picture is very entertaining in spots. Plot deals with the lunatics at large and their menace to civilization. Hutchison isn't bad in parts of action. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eigty-five percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats). Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

OVERLAND LIMITED. (State Right). Star cast. One of the best railroad pictures I have ever run; will do for most anybody. Went over fair for me. Ralph Lewis is good. Also Buddy Post. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (167 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

STEPPING OUT. (State Right). Star, Ford Sterling. A high class comedy feature which will make your patrons chuckle from the waist line both ways. Made some money on the crowd, as I did not have to turn in all the profits to the exchange. Tone, fine. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington.

WHO CARES. (Columbia Pictures). Star, Dorothy Devore. Just an indifferent sex movie that will get by with a strong short subject program. Don't boost it. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

WIZARD OF OZ. (Chadwick Pictures). Star, Larry Semon. Expected to see a regular show and saw a stretched out barnyard comedy. Seven reels that should have been two to fit it exactly. Semon isn't so bad, but the story just isn't. Disappointed most of the crowd. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

WOMEN FIRST. (State Right). A good program picture, suitable for any off night. Not a big picture but will get by in a pleasant manner. Tone, all right. Sunday, questionable. Special, no. Appeal, seventy percent. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington.

Moving Picture World Prints Prize Letter from Legler, of Redfield, S. D.

Winner of Chalmers Publishing Co. Award Has Own Letter-Head, "Damage Card" and "System" in the Lyric Theatre—Has Full Support of His Boss

PROTECTING THE PRINT is no joke—if you do all the things and look after all the easy-to-forget points that Fred K. Legler mentions as his contribution to the protection of the prints which come into his hands.

Fred's letter about what he DOES is backed up by two exhibits—his letter-head and his notice-of-damage card. Fred considers his projectors as precise mechanisms and treats them accordingly. He keeps his print equipment in perfect condition—AND HIS THEATRE MANAGER BACKS HIM UP—THAT'S THE BEST PART OF THE STORY!

Here's Fred's letter:

An attempt to tell what I am doing to protect the print would, if told in narrative form be very long, although probably exceedingly interesting.

Two years ago when I took charge of the projection department of this theatre, friend boss told me that he wanted perfect screen results, and that anything within reason that I needed in the line of equipment I was to order.

I found that the two projectors were in bad mechanical shape, and that the prints we were having to use were in worse shape. Knowing that perfect screen results could not be obtained unless we had good prints and good projectors, I sent the two projectors to the factory where they were put in excellent condition.

Now to sum up briefly just what I did to secure good prints and to protect the hard working print from damage, I will give you what I consider the "TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR GOOD PRINTS."

1. Keep my projectors in first class mechanical condition.

A. Replace upper, intermittent, and lower sprockets when any sign of wear begins to show. Inspect sprockets once every week, look for wear or other defects.

B. Have upper magazine in perfect alignment, so that the edge of the film will not be damaged.

C. Adjust guide rollers, and be sure that they do not bind, if they do bind the film edges will be damaged.

D. The tension at aperture should not be any more than necessary to maintain a steady picture at average projection speed.

E. Adjustment of take-up is important and should be checked up at least once every week. Excessive pull will cause severe damage to upper side of perforation of film.

F. Watch tension on upper magazine shaft, it may cause ripped perforations if a bad reel is used.

G. Have all sprocket idlers properly adjusted, watch for wear, as worn idlers will mark film.

H. Be sure the intermittent film guide is in correct position. If not great strain is imposed upon the print.

I. Watch film trap shoes for wear, replace as soon as any wear is noticeable.

J. Have entire projector that comes in direct contact, and that part which is next to film free from oil, grit, and dirt. I wipe out upper magazine, around upper sprocket, between film trap door, around intermittent movement, and lower magazine before threading projector up each time. It only takes a second, and is a good habit to get into.

2. I keep my projection room floor very clean. My reason for this is that in case anything should happen that the film will come in contact with the floor it will not pick up any excessive amount of dirt, grease, or other objectionable material.

3. Have a film cabinet to keep the films in. Some projection rooms don't have a film cabinet, leaving the films sit around on the dirty floor, so that they will gather up lots of dirt, oil, and so forth.

4. My rewind runs slow, is properly lined, and does no damage to the print, always keeping it very clean.

5. Have a splicing block, and use a good grade of cement.

FRED K. LEGLER
He gets first prize in YOUR EQUIPMENT'S Protect-the-Print awards.

How He Won

"My Dear Van: Your letter of the 3rd flatters me very highly, but Van, I must truthfully say that if I had not been a student of RICHARDSON, I am betting that someone else would have been selected for the FIRST AWARD.

"I entered the PROFESSION 10 years ago with a Second Edition of Rich. Handbook as my guide. I used this book as a textbook, and studied its contents very carefully. I know that some use the Blue Book as a reference book, but I want my knowledge at my finger tips, for as Rich has said, 'When it comes to the showdown, be able to show up.'"—Fred K. Legler.

Legler's First-Award Letter Is a Bear

A. A spicing block is a necessity in every projection room, although many don't have one. Much film is ruined by poor splicing.

B. The cement must be of a good grade or splices will pull apart, maybe in the film gate or trap, which is a bad fire hazard.

IMPORTANT

Gentlemen.

Reel 2 of your film attraction "The Hard Working Print" was received by the Projection Department of this Theatre in BAD condition. Film inspected at your exchange by #- Kind of faults found therein:

Sprocket holes ripped on last 200 feet.

Remarks:

Letter follows. Read it and weep.

Cooperation appreciated.

Legler's Own Card

6. I keep an entire set of good projection room reels and never, under any condition, use the reels a print is shipped on in the projector, unless the reels are in perfect condition, and then only on the last showing.

7. Inspect print before showing.

A. I always look the print over before showing, I do this while I am putting it on the 2,000-foot reels. Often bad splices, torn perforations, or other faults are found that if they were not fixed would probably delay the show and damage many more feet of film.

8. Make a cue sheet for dissolving from one reel to another.

A. As long as I can remember I have always made a cue sheet for dissolving one reel into another. I protest very strongly against punch holes, scratches, and goodness knows what else as a substitute for a cue sheet. I place a little notch on the edge of the film where two reels are joined. This helps me to find the right place when it comes time to separate the reels.

9. Empty rubbish from containers. I find that much dirt that creeps into the prints can be traced to the containers in which the print is shipped. I empty and clean out every container that comes to this theatre. This makes the janitor mad, he has so much rubbish to haul out. I have found everything from love letters to bill posting tacks and shingle nails in the containers. Fine stuff for the poor working print to travel with.

10. Report the condition of all prints when they are received by us in bad shape.

A. I have regular report cards as per the one enclosed on which I report the condition in which I find the print, when it was received by our projection department. I mail this card to the manager of the exchange PROMPTLY.

B. Besides the report cards I have my own letterheads as per the first sheet of this letter. I use this when it becomes necessary to complain to a greater length.

Letterhead Dignifies Protect-the-Print Projectionist.

In closing may I say that I have many letters from film exchange managers in which they congratulate and comment to me on the business-like manner in which I freely express my opinion on their prints.

And let me farther say that the exchanges are not afraid to send me their best print, because they know that it will be returned in as good or better condition than in which it was shipped. Wishing you a Happy New Year.

Respectfully,
FRED K. LEGLER.

Are You Getting
Your Money's Worth?

YOU may have a fine house and good pictures, but you are not getting your money's worth out of them unless your projection system itself is right.

Crowds come back to see pictures that are clear, with strongly defined contrasts of black and white—pictures that make the characters live, because they are vividly projected. . . . The Bausch & Lomb Optical Condensing System increases illumination, distributes the light evenly, and assures perfect projection.

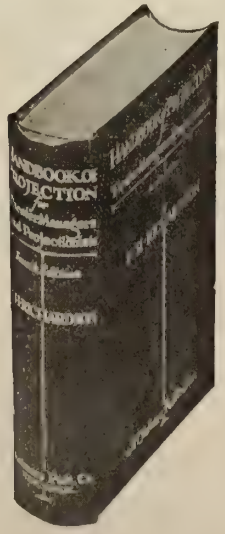
Mr. Projectionist



The quickest way to make more money is to make yourself more valuable than the other fellow.

Thousands of projectionists are rapidly advancing themselves by using F. H. Richardson's 4th Edition Handbook of Projection.

It contains the real "know how."

The knowledge it imparts gives you the balance of power.

And it is just that added power——the ability to guarantee Perfect Projection—that is earning projectionists the most money today.

JACOB FABIAN knows that equipment and patron-appealing charm are important factors; these views of the New Fabian Theatre prove that he gets both into this house, his twentieth.

Fabian's Fabian Proves Romance Can Have a Part in Showmanship

Jacob Fabian's Newest in Chain an Ideal; Embodies Owner's Dictum, "Only the Best"; Projection Room and Organ Are Features

REMEMBER when you used to read those paper backed books telling the stories dear to the youthful heart, of the hero who struggled against adversity and won by sheer pluck?

Well, that stuff isn't "blah" at all! You can look around this country of opportunities and see romances of pluck and perseverance, of ideals upheld and dreams come true.

Jacob Fabian could tell you a life story that would make "Winning by Pluck" a corkingly apt title. And the climax of the story would tell of the opening of the New Fabian Theatre in Paterson, New Jersey, would show the dreams come true, the evolution of a showman who isn't too busy with business to admit that there's romance in the show game.

1884—a lonely lad landing in New York, adventuring from Austria, with head up and eyes forward. That was Jacob Fabian's entry into the land that was to be a ladder if he could only climb.

That climb was a struggle, but as years rolled along the merging of youth into manhood brought fresh courage to meet adversity, to conquer obstacles—and then came a day when business took Jacob to Paterson, which he liked better than congested New York—and from the moment that he opened his own little business, through the creating of his own business block, and the inaugural of his film career with the old Regent, to this culmination of dreams in the opening of the present Fabian Theatre, this upstanding, forward looking citizen has held to ideals, built for permanence, striven and achieved.

This new Fabian Theatre is the fourteenth of the Fabian creations. It stands at the corner of Church and Market streets, a massive building, with offices topping the structure that houses the theatre itself.

"I want my patrons to have the best, in equipment just as much as entertainment," is the keynote of Jacob Fabian's instructions to his architect, Fred W. Wentworth—and Fred not only embodied the Fabian dream of a monument to his citizenship for Paterson, but, as well, carried out the ideal in his specifications.

Every one of the four thousand seats, all specially chosen for patron comfort, and supplied by the New York office of the American Seating Company, lives up to this desire.

The magnificent Wurlitzer organ, conceded to be among the finest of these instruments in any American or other theatre, carries out the determination to have only the best.

The electrical equipment is said to be a marvel of modern engineering construction and installation—the J. W. Broadfoot Company saw to that. There is not a detail overlooked, from the connecting-in from city supply, in the big transformer vault under the sidewalk, right on through the house and stage lighting, to the projection room.

And that projection room! The Independent Movie Supply Company were told to go the limit—result, the most perfectly appointed projection room attainable, with three Power Projectors, with Power High Intensity arc lamps, and Power speed indicators, Power's Dissolving Stereopticon, and two Power's Projectors with Mazda equipment for the reviewing room which has a special 16x20 foot screen. The projection is abetted by equipment that includes Balluna spotlights.

There is a Fulco automatic rewind unit installed, and two Westinghouse generators are an essential part of this galaxy of equipment in the heart of the theatre—projection. As for the class, the quality of the house—the illustration below shows you only in a meagre way how fully this is carried into effect.

JACOB FABIAN
Who has built ideals with steel and stone into the growing Fabian Theatre Enterprises.

You don't see the cashier's window—but if you did, you'd see the devices of the Automatic Ticket Register Company doing their part toward giving the house dignity and efficiency.

Heat is provided for, with mammoth boilers carrying the transformed energy of the coal up to thermostatically controlled radiators. Mushroom ventilation, and a cooling system are essential—and they're there.

Charles L. Dooley made the original Regent "a big help to its papa" as one patron at the Fabian's opening night was heard to remark; and it is only natural that Mr. Fabian should give to this able lieutenant the directorship of his biggest and most perfectly appointed house.

A. M. Fabian and S. H. Fabian, sons of the big theatre promulgator, have done a lot to help make the New Fabian the perfect house that it is. They hold with their father that only with the best in equipment can the best in entertainment be properly presented—more power to them and their ideal.

"The Scenic" In a Presentation

Specially Devised on An Exhibitor's Request by Colby Harriman

THE Scenic may be termed a last-minute booking, an eleventh hour selection. It is usually charged that an exhibitor never plays a Scenic unless he has to; that he prefers the subjects which have a story or theme, and not consisting simply of a succession of outdoor scenes.

The Scenic is one of our oldest forms of short subjects. It was the first type of subject which producers consistently tried to develop and perfect. Perhaps its long usage has made it become commonplace. However, the Scenic today with all of the advantages of improved photography offers opportunities to exhibitors which cannot be enjoyed by film subjects of other characteristics. A scenic may be used in connection with an over ture; it may form the basis for a presentation; it may create the atmospere for a prologue or an epilogue; it can be used advantageously to round out a program and give it balance, and the treatments to which a Scenic lends itself are as numerous as its advantageous spots in a program.

We have selected a treatment for a Scenic on the request of an exhibitor who wanted to use the Scenic in a novel form, in other words, to emphasize its value and subsequently sell it to his patrons. The treatment we are submitting is very simple to achieve and highly effective. It is inexpensive as we have given this an actual demonstration and found that it came up to our expectations. This presentation employs a singer and pianist or as many musicians as desired, even dancers can be added. The treatment is as follows:

SETTING:

The setting consists of a drop upon which the Scenic is projected and which also serves as a silhouette cloth for the artist accompanying it.

THE DROP:

The drop as indicated in Diagram B should be of heavy muslin or cotton sewn with hair seams, drawn taut on the top battan with a heavy battan placed in the pocket at the bottom of the drop so that the surface is free from wrinkles. The center of the drop should be opaqued on its reverse side. The area to be opaqued should be equal to that consumed by the projected picture. To secure the proper dimensions it would be advisable to hang the drop, project the light upon it giving the area to be covered with the paint. On the face of the drop a large black border should encircle the frame line. The circular effect may be achieved with an iris or a mask on the aperture of the projection machine. The balance of the drop should not be opaqued thereby permitting the characters who ap pear back of the drop during the showing of the Scenic to be revealed in silhouette.

UNITS BACK OF DROP

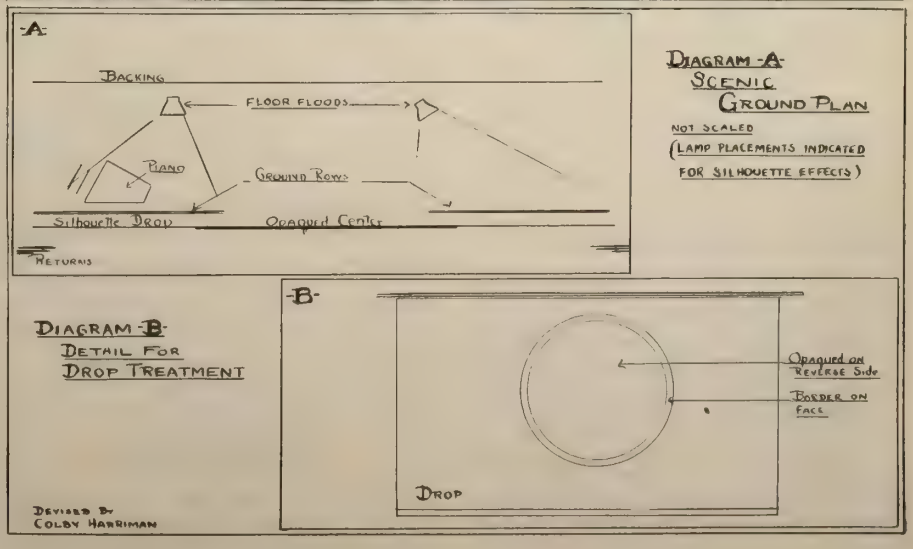
A low ground or bush row may be placed right and left back of the drop, these rows to extend from the lower portion of the opaqued section of the drop off to right and left. A grand piano may be placed right. The treatment back of the drop may be as elaborate as desired, but attention must be given that the units are placed close to the drop so that they will not be enlarged out of proportion to the balance of the setting.

LIGHTING TREATMENT

The foreground should carry a dull dark blue haze by having the foots in blue, about one quarter. Back of the silhouette drop two floor floods may be placed and angled on the characters right and left to give them a single shadow. Care must be taken that rays of both lamps do not fall upon each group at the same time, otherwise there will be a double shadow. The lamp at right may carry an orange amber medium, the one at left a magenta or purple. No other lighting is necessary.

THE ROUTINE

It is suggested that a song arrangement be used in harmony with the theme of the picture. If desired a dancer may be used at left to interpret the mood of the Scenic. This is an extremely simple arrangement but very effective.



"Garden of Girls"

Produced by GUS EDWARDS
RIVOLI THEATRE, NEW YORK CITY

THE first production staged by Mr. Edwards for Publix Theatres is a colorful revue of a characteristic nature. The setting itself is exquisite. It represents a conventional garden constructed along formal lines. In the center of the stage is a low terrace covered with grass mats. Two white steps are placed in the center leading to a low platform with another step unit adjoining a three foot platform up center in the form of a landing. This landing is flanked on either side by two high walls, possibly eight feet in height which extend off right and left. The wall is continued down on an angle to the rear of the center landing where a curved backing carrying out the same wall design is placed at the upstage side of the center landing. Very formal cut out poplar trees are placed right and left back of the walls. A blue sky drop is hung back. Red rambler roses are gracefully placed over the corners of the high wall pieces, the wall units being given a gray and silver treatment. In front of the wall pieces along the terrace in the foreground are placed flowering stalks. There is a foliage cluster up on the landing. Characters entering appear on a high platform back of the wall pieces and descend steps which are also masked to the center landing on to the stage. Painted fabrics are hung in one. The various characters are dressed to represent flowers, costumes being very colorful and attractive. Beside the thirteen principals there are six Little Boy Gardeners singing ensemble and the Daisy Coeds, about twelve girls comprise the dancing ensemble. The following program is offered:

HARRY SHAW LEAVES COLONY

HARRY SHAW, who has been co-producer with Jerry DeRosa at the Colony Theatre, New York City, has left the production department since the incumbency of Universal at this theatre, and returns to head the Production Department of the B. S. Moss chain. Mr. Shaw will produce a series of revues in the various houses in his well known manner which always proves his attractions to be business stimulators. Jerry DeRosa will assume the work of Production Director at this theatre with the assistance of Managing Director Gittelson.

"Mark Strand Frolics"

Week, February 14th
Produced by JOSEPH PLUNKETT
MARK STRAND THEATRE, NEW YORK CITY

TWO of the five units comprising this week's "Frolics" are most attractive. The first is entitled "Fete de Jardin." A very pretentious garden suggestive of Versailles is given a full stage treatment. An enormous hedge row approximately fourteen feet high extends across stage in a screenlike setup. The hedge is given a practical rather than a painted treatment, the entire surface being covered with the artificial hedge leaves. The top of the hedge row is treated with a series of graceful curves. In the foreground right and left is about an eight foot step unit painted to represent stone and flowering units are placed at the base of them. At center right and left are two pedestals surmounted by bronze figures. The entire setting is very rich in its appearance. Pauline Miller and John Quinlan dressed in Louis costumes open the action with the rendition of the song "You and I" by Gruenberg. At the conclusion of their song the Mark Strand Ballet of twelve, dressed as ladies and courtiers all in the Louis costumes appear, and with Mlle. Klemova, a very pretty ensemble number ensues. At the finale the voices of the two singers are heard up center back of the hedge row. The ensemble divide, each half standing at the stairway right and left in front of the hedge. Presently the hedge divides each section including the stairway moving slowly off revealing a huge cascading fountain up stage, constructed of strung crystals at the base of which a fan agitates the glittering cluster. Two smaller units follow, which are Gene Austin, a record artist, in a group of popular songs; "Betty Hale and the Banjophiends"; Robert Stickney, the Charleston dancer on stilts, who appears for the second week as "The Traffic Cop." The last number is a stage novelty which proved most attractive. A large set piece painted and constructed to represent an envelope with the inscription "To My Valentine," written upon it bearing the postmark "Loveland, Feb. 14," and a stamp in the shape of a heart with arrows cancelling it. The set piece which is about eight by ten feet is placed in two in front of a black plush drop. Mr. Quinlan appears in one and sings a little love song and the face of Miss Miller appears in the opening occupied by the heart stamp in the upper right hand corner of the envelope. At the conclusion of the song two pages enter and open the envelope from the center revealing the twelve girls dressed in attractive Valentine costumes standing on a stair formation inside the envelope. The envelope when opened extends across stage, the interior as revealed to the audience being covered with silk fabrics which resemble some of the more ornate Valentine creations. There is a huge red heart background at center. This opens and Santry and Norton in the famous bowery makeup appear and do one of their characteristic dances. This is followed with the ballet doing an attractive routine which is climaxed with the introduction of an unprogrammed male dancer who brings the action to a speedy climax.

THE SHADOWGRAPH

Stage Novelty Colony Theatre

THE majority of motion picture patrons are familiar with the "dimensional movies" or plastic subjects which have been successfully introduced in programs. The stage counterpart or principles of the original idea itself is presented at this theatre with the programmed caption, "First time at popular prices."

Before the novelty is introduced ushers pass through the audience giving the little bits of cardboard containing red and green gelatine, and a man appears in front of the curtains introducing the Shadowgraph, telling the patrons how to use the glasses, "holding the green one to the left eye and the red one to the right eye."

With the audience set the curtains open revealing a large white screen made of muslin which fills the opening battened at the bottom to make it taut. Back stage is a device, patented, with 2000-watt lamps in an air cooled chamber, and in front of the lamps a gelatine frame of the colors similar to those used in the glasses by the patrons.

The silhouette of a man carrying a ladder appears and as he lays the ladder down the effect of the ladder protruding out over the audience is given; then comes the man who starts mopping and the effect of throwing the water in the patrons' eyes is achieved; another character appears with a sword, who steals up toward the patrons giving the effect of chopping their heads off. A beautifully formed lady appears and starts to disrobe, taking off her shoes and stockings and flinging them into the audience.

The novelty is well received and the hilarity of the audience created by each character introduced proved that it was a sure fire picture house attraction. It can be worked on practically any stage which has a depth of ten feet.

"Danza Siberiana"

Produced by EDWARD BOWES
CAPITOL THEATRE, NEW YORK CITY

OF the four units offered on the presentation program it is our belief that this artistic number featuring Doris Niles, is the best. First of all the setting is not only striking, but unusual. A drop painted with a succession of wide jagged lightning forks is hung in two. This design is silver on a black background, tassels being appended to the jagged points. The drop gives the appearance of being split in the center and drawn aside in a sweeping fold. The center opening is filled with a section of a spiral design, four orange shafts are clustered at right of center and sweep up widening as they ascend. It is a weird background but ideal for the interpretive dance of Miss Niles, which as usually is so expressed in rythm and action that the motif can be easily understood. Miss Niles is dressed in a costume embodying a green skirt, red blouse and boots, and a headgear of metallic mesh. She wears handcuffs and employs them in her dance. The lighting treatment is principally red and green blue with an amber spot on the dancer. It is really delightful to see a unit that has a truly futuristic background for a weird and exotic number.

Better Projection Pays

Alternating Current Arc

FRANCIS GALLAGHER, Auburn, Indiana, is in trouble, which same he sets forth as follows:

Have been reading the Bluebook School questions and answers, and am very much interested. Am projecting pictures in a small theatre which uses alternating current at the arc. Sometimes I find it very difficult to get a decent light. Would like to know just what angle to set my carbons.

We use two Powers 6 A projectors, with 6 B lamphouses. I admit that I am pretty green. Have been projecting motion pictures for a year, off and on, but have started in steady now. Would be very thankful if you would advise me as to where I can get a handbook on projection.

If you are studying the Bluebook School questions and answers, and read the department, it is a bit queer that you ask where to get a handbook. The Bluebook is the Fourth Edition of the Handbook of Projection. It is advertised in the Moving Picture World. Its price is six dollars. It has 934 pages, and 374 illustrations. Six dollars may seem a lot of money to you, but surely you cannot expect to master a profession like motion picture projection without putting at least a few dollars into it. Better get a Bluebook IMMEDIATELY. That is my advice. Send six dollars to the Moving Picture World, 516 Fifth Avenue, New York City. If you cannot spare six dollars all at one time, get your manager to order it, and deduct a small sum from your wages each week until it is paid for. As a matter of fact the theatre OUGHT to provide a Bluebook as a part and parcel of its projection room equipment, just as it provides projectors, or carbons.

Would Suggest Mazda Lamps

With regard to your A. C. arcs, my advice would be that the theatre discontinue their use and install Mazda, or reflector type arc lamps. IT WOULD BE TRUE ECONOMY, IN THE END, TO DO SO. You would then get excellent, steady screen illumination with 900 watts, using Mazda, or a brilliant, white illumination with about 20 amperes, using reflector type lamps. A. C. at the arc is out of date, poor practice and poor economy, from any and every viewpoint.

However, if the theatre management cannot or will not discard the alternating current light source, then you must do the best you can, but it is a hard game. You cannot hope to get really decent results with less than forty amperes A. C. at the arc, and projection with less than sixty amperes A. C. at the arc is seldom really good. The crater is so very small that it is extremely difficult, if not impossible to maintain steady, clear screen illumination.

There are several methods of handling A. C. as to carbon angles. Some use what is known as the "jack knife set," which means that the lower carbon is angled out, with relation to the rack bars of the lamp, or is even set straight up and down, with the upper carbon angled out to meet it.

This is a practice I have never agreed with. It is a fact that one may get a higher illumination on the screen by the jack knife set, BUT it is extremely difficult, if not impossible to maintain the illumination at a steady value, and to prevent discolorations of the light upon the screen.

Question No. 458—What has projection room location to do with picture distortion? Explain, using drawing if necessary.

Question No. 459—Is it possible to remedy picture distortion (keystone) by means of a specially ground projection lens? Explain why you say yes or no.

Question No. 460—If the projection room be 20 feet above the screen center will the amount of distortion be affected by moving the projector nearer to or further from the screen? Tell us your reasons for concluding it will or will not be.

Question No. 461—Will altering projection distance change the amount of picture distortion if the angle of projection remains the same.

(Note—DON'T just merely answer yes or no to these questions, but explain the reason for your answer, in detail. If you say "yes," then WHY do you answer thus? If "no," also why do you say that?)

I have always favored the regular D. C. set over A. C., which means that the upper carbon is set parallel with the lamp rack bars, and the lower carbon angled out just a trifle—just enough to bring the crater into proper position facing the collector lens of the condenser.

The trouble with the jack knife set is that as the carbons burn away their relation to each other is altered, and the upper carbon must be fed down independent of the lower one.

With the straight D. C. set, the relation of the carbons remains unaltered or practically so, and if the carbons be in exact line sidewise, then it is only necessary to slightly alter the very small angle of the lower from time to time, as may be necessary in order to keep the crater at the correct angle to the collector lens.

First of all, however, be very sure that your carbons are in exact line with each other sidewise. This you may determine by removing the condenser, putting two new, long carbons, looking in through the condenser opening and laying a straight edge against their sides. If they do not appear to be in line, up and down, with each other, first making sure that the carbons themselves are perfectly straight, by using your straight edge on one carbon alone, and measuring from its edge to the edge of the other jaw when the straight-edge is in perfect contact with the side of the carbon, see which one it is that is "out" or if both of them are out and, using a not-too-coarse file, carefully file the inside of the carbon jaw, or jaws, until the carbons line perfectly with each other sidewise.

CAUTION. In filing the jaws be very sure that you keep the face of the same perfectly flat clear across its surface. If you don't, then the carbon will not make perfect electrical contact with the jaw, and there will probably be heating and burning of the metal.

What is meant by carbons out of line sidewise is illustrated in figure 118, page 403 of the Bluebook, while the straight D. C. set, which I have tried to adequately describe, is photographically illustrated in figure 119, page 404. Crater angles are diagramatically illustrated in figures 122A and 120B, pages 406 and 407. To print these illustrations here would be expensive, both in the time required to make drawings and a photograph, and in the cost of making the cuts, besides consuming space in the department for something which is contained in the book EVERY MAN WHO PROJECTS MOTION PICTURES PROFESSIONALLY SHOULD OWN.

There are still some single-track minded men who will bla bla bla that I am "trying to force you to buy a Bluebook." Well, for their information, my good brother, I would do that very thing, without the slightest compunction, if I could, but NOT for the reason Mr. S. T. Mind imagines. My reason would be that the book would help YOU, and be well worth a HUNDRED TIMES ITS PRICE TO YOU IN THE END, always presuming that you studied and used it, if you propose to make your living projecting motion pictures. And since it would improve your efficiency, its sale would also benefit the motion picture industry as a whole, the finished product of which must depend for its excellence before your audiences upon your skill in placing it before them.

Of course Mr. Single Track Mind cannot be expected to understand such a complicated thing as that. To him my whole and entire idea in advising you to buy a Bluebook is to sell that particular book. It is utterly beyond his comprehension that I could possibly have anything in view other than the few cents I make on the sale.

Pin Wheels and Heavenly Bodies Where They Ain't

SUPPOSING that in the office of a large, powerful union, the practice were such that the business agent could keep an obscure, though worthy member out of work if he saw fit to do so.

Supposing he did keep such a member out of work until the member became desperate and went up to demand his RIGHTS.

Supposing the business agent proceeded to, in effect, tell the said worthy member that he might go straight to some place or other which you and I have heard of many times.

Supposing the aforesaid member then lost complete control of one of his arms, which shot out a few times, with his fingers all doubled up into a bunch, and that the aforesaid B. A. happened to be in the way, and had an excellent view of pin wheels, stars and constellations where they were none, and then lay quickly down to sleep.

Well, which one OUGHT the local to haul over the coals? The man made desperate by wrongs, or the man who inflicted them?

I'm merely asking, because something of this sort MIGHT happen some time, don't you think? Though of course it's not at all likely, because we all know that unions are founded upon RIGHT and JUSTICE and could not possibly deal in anything else.

Ought to Get Written Report of Exception

And of course since this is true, ANY union officer will deal honestly with ALL members, and give them their exact RIGHTS in the matter of filling vacancies. True, they have the power, or some of them have anyhow, to select the man they think best fitted for any given job, and to refuse a job to the man at the head of the list, if in their opinion he is not competent to handle it. That is right and proper, as far as it goes. After all though, don't you think it is only fair to the BUSINESS AGENT, to the MEN and to the UNION to require a written report of any exceptions thus made, and the REASONS, in detail, why they were made, at the next meeting of the union. Don't YOU think such action might operate to prevent the Business Agent from making MISTAKES?

And another thing, while I'm on this subject. Supposing a local union—a large powerful one—controls at least nine tenths of the theatres in its territory. Supposing there is a surplus of members—more than enough to fill all positions, except in the comparatively few unorganized theatres, in its territory, BUT that a goodly percentage of its members are only machine attendants, or operators, and pretend to be nothing else; also that a goodly number of them are not even competent machine operators, and have no apparent desire to make themselves competent, and that the union makes absolutely NO effort to compel them to become competent; also suppose the chief executive officer of the union is not a projectionist, but a supply dealer and manufacturer. Suppose that within this territory, in a non-union house, a studious, hard working man of middle age, supporting a family, is projecting pictures, and has been doing so for something like two years past. Suppose that as soon as he became eligible this man acting in good faith, made application for membership in the union, which collected fifty dollars' "deposit" from him, and gave him an examination.

Suppose that after more than a YEAR the union, in which jurisdiction the man has meanwhile been constantly working, while retaining his fifty dollars, HAD NOT EVEN BOTHERED TO NOTIFY HIM THAT HE HAD PASSED, OR HAD NOT PASSED.

Suppose that a friend of his went to the union office, made inquiries, and was informed by one high-up officer that he was not on the list of those awaiting initiation, therefore had NOT passed the examination.

How Would Such Methods Impress You

Suppose that as soon as the aforesaid officer left the room, another high-up officer informed the friend of the man that he HAD passed, and that in about a month, he, the man in question, was to come and see him, the officer who said he HAD passed, and it would be alright. That the man did go up, and was discouraged in every possible way and advised not to try for membership.

Well, what would YOU think of the methods of such an organization, and how would YOU care to submit yourself to its brand of JUSTICE ? ? ?

Of course, we're just SUPPOSING. Nothing of the sort could POSSIBLY happen in a union founded on and in RIGHT and JUSTICE, and conducted along the lines of SQUARE DEALING. And of COURSE all unions MUST, in the VERY NATURE OF THINGS, deal JUSTLY and FAIRLY with all men. How COULD it be otherwise?

Come to think of it though, a certain document edited and circulated by members of the union during the last election of officers in the New York City Machine Operators' Union. (That is what they, by their name, declare themselves to be) did seem to cast considerable doubt on right, justice or even ordinary decency being the guiding star in that particular union.

Harsh words? Well, maybe, but if you think so, ask any one of the several EXHIBITORS who showed me a copy of the publication referred to, to show it to you. Read it and judge for YOURSELVES. If any words there seem too harsh, I will tender ample apology for them. It was issued and circulated by UNION MEN—members of the union referred to—hence must be filled with truth and brotherly love. If what it contained was the opposite, hence opposed to the very foundation of unionism, I have not heard of any one being taken to task for having circulated it in printed form, hence we may conclude that the union must itself approve.

Bluebook School Answers 440 to 444

NOTE—I shall lay the answer to question 439 over at least one week, as neither Michael Campbell, Charlie Johnson or Eddie Schultz have yet answered it, and certainly, since they hold important positions in the projection field, they will wish to do so. I feel that I would be rather mean did I deprive them of the privilege. However, gentlemen, hurry up, as I cannot delay matters too long, even in your favor.

Question No. 440—What is meant by a T. P. S. T. and a T. P. D. T. switch, and where are such switches used in projection practice?

This last brought out a large list of correct answers: W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island, Thoreau, Clark and Richards, Vancouver, B. C., C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Ia., Roy Saxon and John Read, Lufkin, Texas, G. L. Doe, Chicago, Ill., Jack H. Jalet, Glens Falls, N. Y., Allan R. Gengenbeck, New Orleans, La., Charles Oldham, Norwich, Conn., Chas. C. Colby, Santa Fe, N. Mex., F. H. Moore, Taunton, Mass., T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Ala., James Harrison, Arcade Theatre, Georgetown, Ohio, T. L. Hough, Ashland, Wisconsin, R. L. Allby, Winnepeg, Manitoba, C. C. Davidson, Unionville, Mo., John Larowitz, Boston, Mass., L. T. Sefton, Baltimore, Md., and Albert Connover, St. Louis, Mo., have all answered this question correctly.

Brother Hanover says:

T. P. S. T. means Triple Pole Single Throw, and T. P. D. T. means Triple Pole Double Throw switch.

The first is used, insofar as concerns projection, at any point where a three-wide circuit must be opened or closed. If the projection room circuit passes through the main house switchboard, or the stage switchboard, and is a 3-wire circuit, then there must be one on the main or stage board, of course, to open the circuit when necessary. There will, of course, be one on the projection room switchboard, or in the switch cabinet if there be no board, to control the projection room feeders. There will be others to control any other 3-wire circuits there may be, though there are not likely to be any other circuits of three wires used for projection purposes. As to whether or not these switches be single or double throw, it will depend. About the only thing a double-throw triple pole switch would be used for, so far as I can think now, is to double-fuse the projection room 3-wire feed circuit, so that in event of a fuse blowing the switch may be immediately thrown over to a new set of fuses.

Saxon and Read add to this the following:

The D. P. D. T. switch may be used where 3-phase motors are used, so wired that it has a starting side and a running side.

Question No. 441—What is a D. P. D. T. switch, and in what places might we have use for them in a projection room?

Doe replies thus:

A D. P. D. T. switch is one having two blades and four contacts, not counting the hinged ones. It is a switch by means of which a live circuit may be connected to either of two dead circuits, or by means of which either of two live circuits may be connected to a dead circuit.

Such a switch may be used for double fusing a 2-wire circuit so that it, the circuit, may be supplied through either of two separate sets of fuses merely by reversing the position of the switch blades. It may also be used for connecting the projection circuits to either one of two separate sources of electrical supply, merely by throwing the switch over. They are also used, when using certain types of current rectifying devices, to reverse the polarity at the arc.

Question No. 442—What marks must be stamped on some part of all knife switches?

Brother Oldham says:

The voltage and amperage rating must be stamped on some part (usually on the insulating cross-bar to which the handle is attached) of all knife switches.

Which is quite correct, but Saxon and Read and several others very rightly remark that the projectionist should refuse to accept any knife switch which does not conform to Underwriters' rules by having these stampings.

Question No. 443—May a knife switch be used for a higher or lower amperage or voltage than it is marked for?

Everyone agrees that they may be used for any amperage or voltage lower than their rating, but neither for a higher volt- or amperage than their rating. Since this is correct you may ALL go up to the head of the class—an' I 'ope y' stay there!

Question. No.. 444—In. inspecting. your switches each week, what faults do you look for, and DO you make a weekly inspection—or any periodic inspection at all?

Brother Oldham says:

Once each week I go over all my switches and see that the hinges fit tightly, that the knife blades make good contact, that the blades and cross-bars connect tightly and that the wire contacts at the binding posts are in good condition. At that time I rub a very thin coating of vaseline on all working contacts.

Not so bad, brother Oldham, if you'll hold your right hand, or in fact any hand at all up to the blue skies and swear a mighty swear that you are not stringing us, but do as you have said once EVERY week. However, you said you did, so that's that.

Friend Budge puts it this way:

All switches should be examined at regular intervals to see that all contacts and wire connections are in good shape, that everything is tight and there is no wobbling of the blades; also there is more or less arcing at the make and break contacts, which causes roughening of the copper and therefore a relatively poor contact. This should be smoothed up carefully, and if it is too bad to be made smooth, then a new switch is needed.

Thoreau, Clark and Richards say:

Yes, by all means a weekly inspection.

Which remark they follow with essentially the same advice as has been given by Messrs. Budge and Oldham.

Bum Prints, Informs Exchange; Conditions Better

A PROJECTIONIST in a small town in Pennsylvania has the following to say and—says it:

The house I am in is one of the sort exchanges delight in using as a dumping ground for JUNK prints. However, every time we got a bum one we let the exchange know about it in no uncertain terms. As a consequence we have been getting fairly decent prints, except for an occasional slip-up, when a bunch of film refuse comes gaily in.

Some time since, we had Warner Brothers' "Find Your Man," from which I amputated at least ten slices before it was fit to run—in fact any one of the ten would have stopped the show. You may imagine what would have happened had I not inspected the show before attempting its projection.

I sent the splices I cut out to Mr. H. Warner offering to enter their employ as film inspector, and received a letter from Mr. Morris, the general manager, saying he had instructed the manager of their Philadelphia exchange to get in touch with me. I have not heard from him, however, and do not expect to, because no exchange manager wants any one to butt into his business.

And right there the good brother is wrong. Poor film service is NOT the exchange manager's business any more or as much as it is the business of the exhibitor, who's show runs a big chance of being damaged, or of the projectionist, who runs the chance of either having serious trouble or else doing the inspection work of the exchange for nothing.

Probably Employs Girls As Inspectors

The probability is that the reason you did not hear from the Philadelphia exchange manager was that he did not wish to have you as an inspector. His reason probably would be that he employs girls for film inspection and could not hope to get you for what he pays them; also because he knows you would want to really inspect and repair the film, which takes time and costs money.

"And why on earth," he reasons, "should I inspect and really repair film when I can force the projectionist to do it for nothing?"

As I have time, time and again said, the film exchange receives money on an agreement to supply film SERVICE, and no man with an ounce of brains in his head would call films in the condition you say those were in "service."

I am quite certain that neither Warner Brothers nor any other reputable firm want their exchanges sending out films in any other than first class projectionable condition, but exchange managers—pardon me! Exchange MISmanagers very often try to "make a showing" by reducing the overhead expenses of the exchange to the point where a real inspection and repair of film becomes utterly impossible.

They expect a girl who could not really inspect and competently repair an eight-reel feature in less than from one to two hours, to do it in anywhere from ten minutes to half an hour—the latter time only to be expended if the film be torn in two in half a dozen or more places. In fact under such "inspection" about the only thing repaired is complete breaks in the film.

Such Condition Usually Due to Small Town Exhibitors

Much of this condition is directly due to small town exhibitors demanding excessive cheapness in film rentals. They pay just plain junk prices for which they of course get junk, and then demand a further lowering, often to the point where a competent inspection and repairing is impossible.

This, I hold to be a mistaken policy. I am firmly convinced that any—yes, I said ANY village theatre can make as much or more clear money by paying a price sufficiently high to rent prints in at least fairly good condition—good condition as to "rain" etc.—than it can by renting rainy, jumpy junk—that is provided the better film be projected in a creditable way. The subjects may be old. They must be old because village theatres cannot possibly pay the prices for even fairly new subjects, but the prints themselves need NOT be in any other than fairly good condition.

HARRY CAREY

in "DRIFTIN' THRU"

The drifter; you wouldn't expect him to be it, but he turned out to be all man.

The prospector; one of the screen's finest characters. If you don't love him, see a doctor about your heart.

The girl; as sweet as you could ever hope for.

The picture; finer than anything Carey has yet done. A Western that tugs at the heart and puts a tingle into your spine.
